And, then, of course, we must address the issue of the net monetary cost to the Nation as we enact this dramatic shift in the way we treat both public service and higher education at the Federal level. Quite frankly, I am not sure what the final costs will be. Nobody is. We now have only a general understanding of these additional outlays, but we are far from having a good solid analysis of the costs. That, of course, is a must in this time of very substantial budgetary constraints.

So, Mr. President, there are a lot of unanswered questions—both the ones that I have just posed, and I'm sure many more that others will ask. But this is a complex piece of legislation, and such detailed questioning is not only inevitable, it is right and proper. In fact, we in the Congress would be derelict in our responsibilities if we didn't pose these questions, and insist on satisfactory answers.

I trust that satisfactory answers to these questions will be forthcoming, because I believe that the underlying thrust of this bill—the fostering of a renewed commitment to public service—is sound and proper. I pledge to do my utmost to ensure that the Senate's final product both encourages public service and enhances educational opportunities in our Nation, and does so at an affordable cost.●

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with SAM NUNN, JOHN GLENN, and others to cosponsor the Citizenship and National Service Act of 1989. I'm particularly happy that this issue will be on the front burner of the public policy debate over the coming months, and I look forward to taking the small part that befits a most junior Member of this body.

Mr. President, I've been concerned for some time that the spirit of citizenship—the spirit of belonging and contributing to a larger community—has eroded in recent years, that somehow the perpetual tension in American life between the public interest and our private interests has gotten out of kilter. I believe this bill will, when enacted, help restore the balance in our society between freedom and obligation—between personal interest and public duty.

I believe that the concepts embodied in this bill, S. 3, will help our Nation take long strides toward restoring that sense of citizenship. The bill which we introduce today will put the energy and enthusiasm of over a million young people to work on our most vexing social problems—problems like illiteracy, homelessness, and infant mortality—problems that the private sector either can't or won't address and which seem to fall outside the current capabilities of the public sector.

In return for a year or 2 of our young citizens' talent, commitment and energy, this bill proposes that each enlistee receives vouchers, $10,000 for each year of service. These vouchers could be used to defray college expenses, to finance job training or to make a down payment on a home.

Thus, at the same time that we are giving our young people new opportunities to serve their fellow citizens, we open new doors for personal enrichment. We continue our commitment to excellence in higher education, creating new opportunities for students who want to go to college while at the same time expanding Federal aid to those who choose not to attend college. By making benefits available for purchase of a home and job training, we as a Nation affirm our commitment to the principles of home ownership and full employment.

Another important thing this bill does is to move us away from entitlement-based Federal student aid and toward earned student aid, at the same time leaving entitlement-based aid intact for those who are unable to take part in the National Service Program. It is important to remember that Federal grants and loans are not eliminated under this legislation. True, when the act is fully phased in, most people receiving student aid will have participated in the program, but there will be broad discretion to issue exemptions.

I see voluntary national service as a way of bringing our Nation together, of reminding us that we are one Nation and one community. By going out into the community to help those less fortunate than ourselves, young people will grow in understanding of their fellow citizens. That understanding will in turn encourage a new spirit of cooperation between Americans from every different background. And that, too, is the spirit of citizenship.

A rite of passage, a ticket to advancement, a first job, a bulwark of our national defense, an emblem of citizenship and a source of civic pride and improvement—national service can be all these things. This bill, S. 3, will weave it gradually but inexorably into our national fabric.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself and Mr. MITCHELL)

S. 4. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to restore the minimum wage to a fair and equitable rate, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

MINIMUM WAGE RESTORATION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Minimum Wage Restoration Act of 1989. I am delighted to be joined as a cosponsor by the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL.

Last September, the Senate had before it a similar bill, designed to restore the purchasing power of the minimum wage, which has lost almost 40 percent of its value to inflation since it was last increased in 1981.

Many businesses opposed the bill, as they have every minimum wage adjustment in the last 50 years. But the hopes of millions of low wage workers were raised last year when Vice President Bush stated that he favored an increase. But the opposition in the Senate continued and final action was prevented by a filibuster at the end of the session.

The fundamental premise of the legislation is that the minimum wage should be a living wage. No man or woman who works full time should be condemned to a lifetime in poverty. We have broken that commitment to our lowest paid workers in recent years, and it is time to restore the minimum wage to its proper level.

The bill I introduce today would increase the minimum wage over 3 years from its current level of $3.35 an hour to $4.65. It would also increase the "volume of business" test by the same percentage, from the current $362,500 to $500,000 in annual sales. The bill also contains a section dealing with the minimum wage and Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico has always been treated separately in the act. The provision reported by the Labor and Human Resources Committee last year and included in this bill will apply the mainland rate to most workers on the island, while taking into account the distinct wage and benefit structure on the island.

Since the last increase in the minimum wage in 1981, its purchasing power has declined by 38.5 percent. For low income workers trying to provide for their families, to meet soaring college costs, or rise out of poverty, the decline in value of the minimum wage has taken a heavy toll.

Contrary to the false claims of opponents of this legislation, minimum wage workers are not "just kids." In fact, only 26 percent are teenagers. Two-thirds are women. Over 6.5 million are full-time workers, and 3.8 million are heads of households.

But this legislation is not only about statistics and numbers. It is about men and women willing to work, who want to work and raise their families, and who deserve a fair chance to achieve these fundamental American goals.

Eight years is too long for hard-working low-income men and women to go without an increase in the minimum wage. I look forward to working with the administration to achieve early action in this measure of simple economic justice for millions of our fellow citizens.

There being no objection, the bill is order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 4

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Minimum Wage Restoration Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. RESTORATION OF MINIMUM WAGE.

Paragraph (1) of section 6(a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) except as otherwise provided in this section, not less than $3.35 an hour during the period ending December 31, 1989, not less than $3.85 an hour during the year beginning January 1, 1990, not less than $4.25 an hour during the year beginning January 1, 1991, and not less than $4.65 an hour after December 31, 1991;".

SEC. 3. CHANGE IN ENTERPRISE TEST.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Effective January 1, 1989, paragraph (2) of section 3(s) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(s)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) is an enterprise that is comprised exclusively of one or more retail or service establishments, as defined in section 13(a)(2), and whose annual gross volume of sales made or business done is not less than $500,000 (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level that are separately stated);".

(b) PRESERVATION OF COVERAGE.—The next to last sentence of section 3(s) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "June 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1989";

(2) by striking out "Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1977" and inserting in lieu thereof "Minimum Wage Restoration Act of 1989"; and

(3) by striking out "$250,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$362,500".

SEC. 4. PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

(a) SPECIAL INDUSTRY COMMITTEES.—Section 5 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 205) is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsection:

"(a) The Secretary, on petition by the Minimum Wage Board of Puerto Rico, shall as soon as practicable appoint a special industry committee to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 to employees in Puerto Rico on a determination that—

"(1) there exists a significant and substantial difference between the wage structure of an industry in Puerto Rico, and the prevailing wage structure of that industry on the mainland;

"(2) there is reasonable cause to believe that the full application of the rate or rates provided by section 6(a)(1) would substantially curtail employment; and

"(3) notice of the petition of the Minimum Wage Board of Puerto Rico has been given to all interested parties and to the public in Puerto Rico."; and

(2) in the first sentence of subsection (e), by striking out "in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands (1) by the United States or by the government of the Virgin Islands" and inserting in lieu thereof "in Puerto Rico (1) by the United States".

(b) MINIMUM WAGE.—Section 6 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 206) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(3)—

(A) by striking out "and the Virgin Islands"; and

(B) by striking out "or the Virgin Islands"; and

(2) by striking out subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) The rate or rates provided by subsection (a)(1) shall be applicable in the case of any employee in Puerto Rico, except that, subject to the exceptional circumstances specified in section 5(a) and to paragraph (2), such rate or rates may be superseded only for so long as and insofar as such employee is covered by a wage order heretofore or hereafter issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a special industry committee, that prescribes a wage order rate that is less than the wage rate in effect under subsection (a)(1).

"(2) In the case of any employee in Puerto Rico, no wage order issued by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (1) shall prescribe a rate that is less than $3.35 an hour.".

(c) WAGE ORDERS.—Section 8 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 208) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (a), by striking out "and the Virgin Islands";

(2) in the second sentence of subsection (a), by striking out "committee—" and all that follows through the period at the end of the sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following "committee shall, from time to time, recommend the minimum wage rates to be paid by employers who are in Puerto Rico and who but for section 6(c) would be subject to the minimum wage requirements of section 6(a)(1).";

(3) in the third sentence of subsection (a), by striking out "or the Virgin Islands, or in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands,"; and

(4) in the third sentence of subsection (b)—

(A) by striking out "or in the Virgin Islands"; and

(B) by striking out "and the Virgin Islands".

(d) EMPLOYMENT UNDER SPECIAL CERTIFICATES.—Section 14(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 214(b)) is amended by striking out "or the Virgin Islands" each place it appears in paragraphs (1)(A), (2), and (3).

By Mr. DODD (for himself and Mr. HATCH, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MITCHELL, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. SIMON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. REID, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. SASSER, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. KERREY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. KOHL):

S. 5. A bill to provide for a Federal program for the improvement of child care, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE ACT FOR BETTER CHILD CARE SERVICES OF 1989

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce S. 5, the Act for Better Child Care Services of 1989. I am very pleased to be joined in this effort by Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, MITCHELL, MIKULSKI, CHAFEE, D'AMATO, and some 30 other cosponsors.

Just shy of 4 months ago, as I looked down the barrel of a 9-day filibuster of the children's package on the Senate floor, I said "never in the history of American politics has there been a constituency so popular—but with so little political clout—as the American family." Never in my political career have I been as eager to prove myself wrong as I am today. We are now 4 months older; I hope we are 4 months wiser too.

The American family—the children of this Nation—were just dealt about as good a political hand as any poker player could want. We have a new President who wants a kinder and gentler nation and is willing to invest money to make it happen. We have new leadership in the Senate which is committed to enacting a child care bill this year. Clearly, we have an opportunity for the kind of bipartisan cooperation which comes along rarely in a politician's career. We begin 1989 with a remarkable degree of consensus—on a new Federal role in America's child care system; on the targetting of Federal dollars to low-income families; on the importance of parental choice and variety in the delivery of child care services. We differ over funding mechanisms and whether new Federal dollars should help parents find quality care in addition to helping them pay for it. I look forward to working with the new President and my colleagues in the Senate to see if—together—our mutual goals can be achieved.

To those who say cooperation and compromise is impossible, take a look at the legislation our bipartisan group has introduced today. This package—the product of literally dozens of hours of negotiation—combines the best of the child care legislation introduced in the 100th Congress. The Act for Better Child Care Services of 1989 combines ABC's focus on direct assistance to poor families and quality enhancement, with new provisions to increase supply and broaden State flexibility. New provisions in ABC include a separate section for employer-sponsored child care programs, liability risk retention groups, a revised procedure for the minimum national standards, and provision for ABC reimbursement of relative care. On behalf of America's children, we Senators have extended a political olive branch across the aisle. We truly hope this will set an example others will follow.

Quality child care. Like motherhood and apple pie, it's something everyone believes in. But like motherhood—and like apple pie—there is some disagreement about what goes into it. Some believe the most important quality factors are parental choice and involvement. I count myself in this camp. But to provide real parental choice—real involvement—I believe we must do more than throw families a few hundred dollars in tax credits each year and let them fend for themselves. In my view, parental choice means more. It means helping to increase the supply and variety of local child care services. Parental choice means minimum health and safety standards to help parents measure and improve program quality. Parental choice means better resource and referral networks to educate families about their child care options. Parental choice means parents working in the trenches, helping to set child care policies at the national, State, local, and program levels. ABC would help to ensure all these forms of parental choice and involvement. The tax credit approach alone would not.

To those who say a tax credit is the answer to America's child care crisis, I say you are only partially right. A tax credit would help to supplement the incomes of poor families with young children. But it would not help this Nation with our real challenge in the child care arena—to build a diverse system of child care providers with predictable standards of health and safety. A tax credit may very well complement the ABC infrastructure plan; it is however, no substitute at all.

ABC establishes minimum national health and safety standards for publicly-funded child care programs. Here some see a Federal bureaucratic boogeyman which simply doesn't exist. The standards will be set by a national committee of experts, including representatives of State and local government and the business community. The national committee will then disband immediately and the States will have 4 years to implement and ensure compliance with these standards, using ABC assistance. The national standards are based on those already in use in many States, half of which will comply automatically with the median requirements, by definition. The standards will be set only in those categories which have already been identified by child development experts, the national insurance companies, the U.S. Armed Forces, and the States themselves as the key indicators of quality in child care programs.

We know what these quality indicators are. A vast body of child development research tells us that the quality of a child care program is based largely on the interactive relationship between provider and child. That is why group size, child-staff ratios and provider training—indicators which determine the frequency and content of that interaction—are the cornerstones of the minimum national standards established by ABC. We need these national minimums because of the great discrepancies which currently exist in the State-by-State patchwork of standards and regulations. Half the States don't regulate group size for infants, despite the clear correlation with program quality. Only 28 States have ratios of 5 to 1 or lower for infants—the maximum safe ratio according to child care experts. Twenty-six States have ongoing provider training requirements but seven States have no training requirements at all. As a nation, we can do better for our children.

Six years from now—when these standards are in place throughout the Nation—we will look back on this debate and wonder what all the fuss was about. After all, the Federal Government regulates the food we eat, the prescription drugs we take, the automobiles we drive, the planes we fly, and the air we breathe. We also have a long history of using Federal funds to leverage quality improvements in a wide variety of State and local services: Federal highway funds and the minimum national drinking age is just one such example. What is so novel—so threatening—about using Federal funds to establish a floor of safety protection for all children as we head into the demographic whirlwind in the labor force which the 21st century will bring? I view it as a wise investment for our Nation, for the mothers and fathers in the work force now, and for the workers of the future whose intellectual and social development we can help to promote today.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for all their hard work on this legislation and commend this measure to the attention of the full Senate.

SUMMARY OF THE ACT FOR BETTER CHILD CARE SERVICES OF 1989

Authorization of appropriations: $2.5 billion is authorized for fiscal year 1990, with such sums as may be necessary for FYs 1991-1994. In addition, $100 million is authorized in FY 1990 only to fund the new Child Care Liability Risk Retention Fund.

Funds for direct assistance to families: States must allocate 70 percent of ABC funds to provide direct assistance to low-income working families on a sliding fee scale. Eligible children are those up to age 15 whose family income does not exceed 100 percent of state median income ($32,777 nationwide for a family of four); priority for funds is given to families of very low income. Parents have complete discretion to choose from a wide range of child care services, including nonprofit and for-profit child care centers, family day care homes, school-based care, and nonsectarian church-based care.

Funds to improve the quality of child care: States may allocate 10 percent of funds for resource and referral programs; improvements in the states' licensing/inspection requirements; and health and safety training for child care workers. States may use existing R&R networks as long as referral services are available to families in all areas of the state. Within two years of enactment, all licensed providers shall have 40 hours of health and safety training every two years.

Funds to increase the availability of child care: States may use 12 percent of funds for grants and loans to establish or expand child care programs; to recruit and train new family day care providers (including a revolving loan fund for improvements to providers' homes); to help communities establish after-school services and programs for sick or homeless children; and to assist businesses with child care programs through a new public-private partnership section.

Minimum national standards for providers receiving public funds: As a condition of federal assistance, states must require only publicly-funded child care programs to comply with a limited set of minimum health and safety standards within 4 years after they are established (roughly 5½ years after the date of enactment of the Act). The standards are based on those used by the U.S. Armed Forces and the national accreditation organizations. The standards will be developed by a National Advisory Committee composed of experts in the field, representatives of state and local government, and members of the business and religious communities. Any state may request a 1 year variance (with a one-year extension) if the state needs more time to comply with a particular standard in a particular area of the state.

Funds to establish liability risk retention groups: The legislation authorizes $100 million in FY1990 for the establishment of Child Care Liability Risk Retention Groups to increase providers' access to affordable liability insurance through a shared risk pool system.

Church-based child care included: Nonsectarian church-based child care is fully eligible for assistance under the bill. The church-state language is based on other federal social service legislation.

Relative care eligible for funds: Relative care by grandparents, aunts, aunts and uncles is eligible for assistance provided such caregivers comply with state regulations, if any, governing such care.

MAJOR REVISIONS TO THE ACT FOR BETTER CHILD CARE SERVICES FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

ALLOCATION OF ASSISTANCE

Provision of legislation	ABC/ 100th	ABC/ 101st

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the number of children living in homes where both parents work, or living in homes with a single parent who works, has increased dramatically over the last decade;

(2) the availability of quality child care is critical to the self-sufficiency and independence of millions of American families, including the growing number of mothers with young children who work out of economic necessity;

(3) high quality child care programs can strengthen our society by providing young children with the foundation on which to learn the basic skills necessary to be productive workers;

(4) the years from birth to age 6 are a critical period in the development of a young child;

(5) a significant number of parents do not have a real choice as they seek adequate child care for their young children because of limited incomes, insufficient State child care standards, and the inadequate supply of child care services in their community;

(6) high quality early childhood development programs provided during such period are cost effective because such programs can reduce the chances of juvenile delinquency and adolescent pregnancy and can improve the likelihood that children will finish high school and become employed;

(7) the number of quality child care arrangements falls far short of the number required for children in need of child care services;

(8) the rapid growth of participation in the labor force by mothers of children under the age of 1 has resulted in a critical shortage of quality child care arrangements for infants and toddlers;

(9) the lack of available child care services results in many preschool and school-age children being left without adequate supervision for significant parts of the day;

(10) many working parents who are unable to afford adequate child care services do not receive adequate financial assistance for such services from employers or public sources;

(11) because of the lack of affordable child care, a large number of parents are not able to work or to seek the training or education they need to become self sufficient;

(12) making adequate child care services available for parents who are employed, seeking employment, or seeking to develop employment skills promotes and strengthens the well-being of families and the national economy;

(13) the payment of the exceptionally low salaries to child care workers adversely affects the quality of child care services by making it difficult to retain qualified staff;

(14) several factors result in the shortage of quality child care options for children and parents, including—

(A) the inability of parents to pay for child care services;

(B) the lack of up-to-date information on child care services;

(C) the lack of training opportunities for staff in child care programs;

(D) the high rate of staff turnover in child care facilities; and

(E) the wide differences among the States in child care licensing and enforcement policies; and

(15) improved coordination of child care services will help to promote the most efficient use of child care resources.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to build on and to strengthen the role of the family by seeking to ensure that parents are not forced by lack of available programs or financial resources to place a child in an unsafe or unhealthy child care facility or arrangement;

(2) to promote the availability and diversity of quality child care services to expand child care options available to all families who need such services;

(3) to provide assistance to families whose financial resources are not sufficient to enable such families to pay the full cost of necessary child care services;

(4) to lessen the chances that children will be left to fend for themselves for significant parts of the day;

(5) to improve the productivity of parents in the labor force by lessening the stresses related to the absence of adequate child care services;

(6) to provide assistance to States to improve the quality of, and coordination among, child care programs;

(7) to increase the opportunities for attracting and retaining qualified staff in the field of child care to provide high quality child care services to children; and

(8) to strengthen the competitiveness of the United States by providing young children with a sound early childhood development experience.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of Child Care appointed under section 15(a).

(2) CAREGIVER.—The term "caregiver" means an individual who provides a service directly to an eligible child on a person-to-person basis.

(3) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "center-based child care provider" means a child care provider that provides child care services in a nonresidential facility.

(4) CHILD CARE CERTIFICATE.—The term "child care certificate" means a certificate that is issued by the State to parents who may use such certificate only as payment for child care services for an eligible child and that provides to an eligible child care provider a right to reimbursement for such services at the same rate charged by that provider for comparable services to children whose parents are not eligible for certificates under this Act or for child care assistance under any other Federal or State program.

(5) COMMUNITY-BASED ORGANIZATION.—The term "community-based organization" has the meaning given such term by section 4(5) of the Job Training and Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1503(5)).

(6) ELEMENTARY SCHOOL.—The term "elementary school" means a day or residential school that provides elementary education, as determined under State law.

(7) ELIGIBLE CHILD.—The term "eligible child" means an individual—

(A) who is less than 16 years of age;

(B) whose family income does not exceed 100 percent of the State median income for a family of the same size; and

(C) who—

(i) resides with a parent or parents who are working, seeking employment, or enrolled in a job training or educational program; or

(ii) is receiving, or needs to receive, protective services and resides with a parent or parents not described in clause (i).

(8) ELIGIBLE CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "eligible child care provider" means—

(A) a center-based child care provider, a group home child care provider, a family child care provider, or other provider of child care services for compensation that—

(i) is licensed or regulated under State law;

(ii) satisfies—

(I) the Federal requirements, except as provided in clause (iii); and

(II) the State and local requirements; applicable to the child care services it provides; and

(iii) after the expiration of the 4-year period beginning on the date the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under section 18(e)(2), complies with such standards that are applicable to the child care services it provides; or

(B) a child care provider that is 18 years of age or older who provides child care services only to an eligible child who is, by affinity or consanguinity, the grandchild, niece, or nephew of such provider, if such provider complies with any State requirements that govern child care provided by relatives.

(9) FAMILY CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "family child care provider" means 1 individual who provides child care services for fewer than 24 hours per day, as the sole caregiver, and in the private residence of such individual.

(10) FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES.—The term "family support services" means services that assist parents by providing support in parenting and by linking parents with community resources and with other parents.

(11) FULL-WORKING-DAY.—The term "full-working-day" means at least 10 hours per day.

(12) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "group home child care provider" means 2 or more individuals who jointly provide child care services for fewer than 24 hours per day and in a private residence.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To carry out this Act, other than section 22, there are authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1994.

(b) CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To carry out section 22, there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(2) AMOUNTS TO REMAIN AVAILABLE.—The amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) shall remain available for assistance to States for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 without limitation.

SEC. 5. AMOUNTS RESERVED; ALLOTMENTS.

(a) AMOUNTS RESERVED.—

(1) TERRITORIES AND POSSESSIONS.—The Secretary shall reserve not to exceed one half of 1 percent of the amount appropriated under section 4(a) in each fiscal year for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs.

(2) INDIANS.—The Secretary shall reserve an amount, not less than 1.5 percent and not more than 3 percent of the amount appropriated under section 4(a) in each fiscal year, to carry out subsection (c) regarding Indian children.

(b) STATE ALLOTMENT.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—From the remainder of the sums appropriated under section 4(a) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State (excluding jurisdictions referred to in subsection (a)(1)) an amount equal to the sum of—

(A) an amount that bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the product of the young child factor of the State and the allotment percentage bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States; and

(B) an amount that bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the product of the school lunch factor of the State and the allotment percentage bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all the States.

(2) YOUNG CHILD FACTOR.—The term "young child factor" means the ratio of the number of children in the State who are less than 5 years of age to the number of children in all the States who are less than 5 years of age.

(3) SCHOOL LUNCH FACTOR.—The term "school lunch factor" means the ratio of the number of children in the State who are receiving free or reduced price lunches under the school lunch program established under the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) to the number of children in all the States who are receiving free or reduced price lunches under such program.

(4) ALLOTMENT PERCENTAGE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The allotment percentage for a State is determined by dividing—

(i) the per capita income of all individuals in the United States; by

(ii) the per capita income of all individuals in the State.

(B) LIMITATIONS.—If a sum determined under subparagraph (A)—

(i) exceeds 1.2, then the allotment percentage of that State shall be considered to be 1.2; and

(ii) is less that 0.8, then the allotment percentage of the State shall be considered to be 0.8.

(C) PER CAPITA INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), per capita income shall be—

(i) determined at 2-year intervals;

(ii) applied for the 2-year period beginning on October 1 of the first fiscal year beginning on the date such determination is made; and

(iii) equal to the average of the annual per capita incomes for the most recent period of 3 consecutive years for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce at the time such determination is made.

(c) PAYMENTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF INDIAN CHILDREN.—

(1) TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS.—From the funds reserved under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary may, upon the application of a Indian tribe or tribal organization enter into a contract with, or make a grant to such Indian tribe or tribal organization for a period of 3 years, subject to satisfactory performance, to plan and carry out programs and activities that are consistent with this Act. Such contract or grant shall be subject to the terms and conditions of section 102 of the Indian Self-Determination Act (25 U.S.C. 450f) and shall be conducted in accordance with sections 4, 5, and 6 of the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596; 25 U.S.C. 655-657), that are relevant to such programs and activities.

(2) INDIAN RESERVATIONS.—In the case of an Indian tribe in a State other than the States of Oklahoma, Alaska, and California, such programs and activities shall be carried out on the Indian reservation for the benefit of Indian children.

(3) STANDARDS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall establish, through the application process, standards applicable to child care services provided under such programs and activities. For purposes of establishing such standards, the Secretary shall take into consideration—

(i) the codes, regulations, and cultural factors of the Indian tribe involved, as expressed by such tribe or the tribal organization that represents such tribe; and

(ii) the State licensing and regulatory requirements applicable to child care services provided in the State in which such program and activities are carried out.

(B) APPLICATION.—

(i) RULE.—Except as provided in clause (ii), after the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under section 18(e)(2), such minimum standards shall apply with respect to child care services provided under such programs and activities.

(ii) WAIVERS AND MODIFICATIONS.—The Secretary may waive or modify, for a period not to exceed 4 years beginning on the date such minimum standards are established, any of such minimum standards that would limit the capacity of an Indian tribe or tribal organization to receive funds under this Act if the Secretary determines that there is a reasonable expectation that each of such standards requested to be waived will be met by the applicant by the end of the period for which the waiver is requested.

(4) AVAILABILITY OF STATE CHILD CARE SERVICES.—For the purpose of determining whether to approve an application for a contract or grant under this subsection, the Secretary shall take into consideration the availability of child care services provided in accordance with this Act by the State in which the applicant proposes to carry out a program to provide child care services.

(5) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This subsection shall not be construed—

(A) to limit the eligibility of any individual to participate in any program carried out with assistance received under this Act by a State; or

(B) to modify any requirement imposed on a State by any provision of this Act.

(6) COORDINATION.—To the maximum extent practicable, the applicant for a grant or contract under this subsection and the State in which the applicant is located shall coordinate with each other their respective child care programs and activities, including child care programs and activities carried out with assistance received under this Act.

(d) DATA AND INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall obtain from each appropriate Federal agency, the most recent data and information necessary to determine the allotments provided for in subsection (b).

(e) REALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any portion of the allotment under subsection (b) to a State that the Secretary determines is not required to carry out a State plan approved under section 7(d), in the period for which the allotment is made available, shall be reallotted by the Secretary to other States in proportion to the original allotments to the other States.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—

(A) REDUCTION.—The amount of any reallotment to which a State is entitled to under paragraph (1) shall be reduced to the extent that it exceeds the amount that the Secretary estimates will be used in the State to carry out a State plan approved under section 7(d).

(B) REALLOTMENTS.—The amount of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among States for which no reduction in an allotment or reallotment is required by this subsection.

(3) AMOUNTS REALLOTTED.—For purposes of any other section of this Act, any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection shall be considered to be part of the allotment made under subsection (b) to the State.

(f) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term "State" means any of the several 50 States, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

SEC. 6. LEAD AGENCY.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The chief executive officer of a State desiring to participate in the program authorized by this Act shall designate, in an application submitted to the Secretary under section 7(a), an appropriate State agency that meets the requirements of subsection (b) to act as the lead agency.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS.—The lead agency shall have the capacity to administer the funds provided under this Act to support programs and services authorized under this Act and to oversee the plan submitted under section 7(b).

(2) COORDINATION.—The lead agency shall have the capacity to coordinate the services for which assistance is provided under this Act with the services of other State and local agencies involved in providing services to children.

(3) ESTABLISHMENT OF POLICIES.—The lead agency shall have the authority to establish policies and procedures for developing and implementing interagency agreements with other agencies of the State to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(c) DUTIES.—The lead agency shall—

(1) assess child care needs and resources in the State, and assess the effectiveness of existing child care services and services for which assistance is provided under this Act or under other laws, in meeting such needs;

(2) develop a plan designed to meet the need for child care services in the State for eligible children, including infants, preschool children, and school-age children, giving special attention to meeting the needs for services for low-income children, migrant children, children with a handicapping condition, foster children, children in need of protective services, children of adolescent parents who need child care to remain in school, and children with limited English-language proficiency;

(3) develop, in consultation with the State advisory committee on child care established under section 11, the State plan submitted to the Secretary under section 7(b);

(4) hold hearings, in cooperation with such State advisory committee on child care, annually in each region of the State in order to provide to the public an opportunity to comment on the provision of child care services in the State under the proposed State plan;

(5) assist the chief executive officer in making such periodic reports to the Secretary as the Secretary may by rule require;

(6) coordinate the provision of services under this Act with—

(A) other child care programs and services, and with educational programs, for which assistance is provided under any State, local, or other Federal law, including the State Dependent Care Development Grants Act (42 U.S.C. 9871 et seq.); and

(B) other appropriate services, including social, health, mental health, protective, and nutrition services, available to eligible children under other Federal, State, and local programs;

(7) identify resource and referral programs for particular geographical areas in the State that meet the requirements of section 12; and

(8) establish in accordance with subsection (d)(1) several local advisory councils that collectively represent the entire geographical area in the State.

(d) LOCAL ADVISORY COUNCILS.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—Each local advisory council established under subsection (c)(8) shall be composed of individuals who are collectively representative of the local geographical area for which they are appointed and of the ethnic characteristics of the population of such area. Such council shall be composed of individuals appointed from among the following:

(A) Parents of preschool children.

(B) Parents of school-age children.

(C) Individuals who are child care providers.

(D) The heads of Head Start agencies.

(E) The heads of local public agencies that provide social services or human resources.

(F) The heads of local education agencies.

(G) The heads of local public health agencies.

(H) The heads of resource and referral agencies.

(I) Individuals engaged locally in business.

(J) Local representatives of nonprofit private organizations that provide funds for social services or human resources.

(K) Representatives of groups that engage in private activities relating to providing child care services.

(2) DUTIES.—Each local advisory council shall—

(A) assess the extent to which there is an unsatisfied need for child care services in the geographical area for which such council is appointed;

(B) submit to the lead agency, not less frequently than biennially, a report identifying the results of the implementation in such area of the State plan included in the application submitted under section 7;

(C) recommend to the lead agency the uses for which assistance received under this subchapter by the State should be expended in such area, and with respect to each such use, the amount of such funds that should be so expended;

(D) advise local child care providers regarding the means to collectively obtain training, supplies, and insurance relating to providing child care services; and

(E) otherwise assist the lead agency, and the State advisory committee on child care established under section 11 to carry out their respective duties.

(3) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT.—The lead agency shall provide to such council such funds, and administrative support services (including personnel) directly or by contract, as may be necessary to enable such council to carry out its duties.

(4) CONFLICTS OF INTEREST.—A member of such council may not cast a vote on any matter that—

(A) may result in a financial benefit to such member; or

(B) under Federal, State, or local law would create or appear to create a conflict of interest if such vote were cast by such member.

(5) PUBLIC AWARENESS OF COUNCIL PARTICIPATION.—The Secretary shall require by rule that residents of each geographical area for which a local advisory council is appointed are informed of the opportunity to be appointed to such council.

SEC. 7. APPLICATION AND PLAN.

(a) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive assistance under this Act, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require by rule.

(b) PLAN.—The application of a State submitted under subsection (a) shall include an assurance that the State will comply with the requirements of this Act and a State plan that is designed to be implemented during a 4-year period and that meets the requirements of subsection (c).

(c) REQUIREMENTS OF A PLAN.—

(1) LEAD AGENCY.—The plan shall identify the lead agency designated in accordance with section 6(a).

(2) ADVISORY BODIES.—The plan shall demonstrate that the State will establish in accordance with section 11 a State advisory committee on child care.

(3) POLICIES AND PROCEDURES.—The plan shall set forth policies and procedures designed to ensure all of the following:

(A) That, to the maximum extent practicable—

(i) the parents of each eligible child who will receive child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4) are permitted to select the eligible child care provider that will provide such services to such child; and

(ii) the State will attempt to place such child with the eligible child care provider selected by such parents.

(B) That—

(i) all providers of child care services for which assistance is provided under this Act comply with all licensing and regulatory requirements (including registration requirements) applicable under State and local law; and

(ii) such requirements are imposed and enforced by the State uniformly on all child care providers that provide child care services under similar child care arrangements.

This subparagraph shall not be construed to prohibit a State from imposing more stringent standards or requirements on child care providers who provide services for which assistance is provided under this Act and who also receive State funds under any other law to provide child care services under a contract or other arrangement with the State.

(C) That procedures will be established to ensure that child care providers receiving assistance under this Act or under other publicly-assisted child care programs comply with the minimum child care standards established under section 18(e)(2) after the expiration of the 4-year period beginning on the date the Secretary establishes such standards, and comply with all applicable State and local licensing and regulatory requirements (including registration requirements).

(D) That the State will not—

(i) reduce the categories of child care providers licensed or regulated by the State on the date of enactment of this Act; or

(ii) reduce the level of standards applicable to child care services provided in the State and to the matters specified in sections 13(a) and 18(d), even if such standards exceed the minimum standards established under section 18(e)(2) by the Secretary unless the State, with the concurrence of the State advisory committee established under section 11, requests a waiver of this subparagraph and demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that the proposed reduction is necessary to increase access to and availability of eligible child care providers and will not jeopardize the health and safety of children.

(E) That funds received under this Act by the State will be used only to supplement, not to supplant, the amount of Federal, State, and local funds expended for the support of child care services and related programs in the State, except that States may use existing expenditures in support of child care services to satisfy the State matching requirement under section 17(b) and may not use such expenditures to satisfy the matching requirements of any other Federal program.

(F) That for each fiscal year the State will use an amount not to exceed 8 percent of the amount of funds received under section 5 by the State for such fiscal year to administer the State plan.

(G) That the State will pay funds under this Act to eligible child care providers in a timely fashion to ensure the continuity of child care services to eligible children.

(H) That resource and referral agencies will be made available to families in all regions of the State.

(I) That each eligible child care provider who provides services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4)—

(i) gives priority for provider services to children of families with very low income, taking into account family size;

(ii) after the expiration of the 4-year period beginning on the date the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under section 18(e)(2), complies with such standards except as provided in clause (iii);

(iii) if such eligible child care provider is regulated by a State educational agency that—

(I) administers any State law applicable to child care services;

(II) develops child care standards that meet or exceed the minimum standards established under section 18(e)(2) and the State licensing or regulatory requirements (including registration requirements); and

(III) enforces the standards described in subclause (II) that are developed by such agency, using policies and practices that meet or exceed the requirements specified in subparagraphs (A) through (K) of paragraph (11);

complies with the standards described in subclause (II) that are developed by such agency; and

(iv) complies with the State plan and the requirements of this Act.

(J) That child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4) are available to children with a handicapping condition.

(K) That appropriate State regulations will be issued governing the provision of school-age child care services if the State does not already have such regulations.

(L) That child care providers in the State are encouraged to develop personnel policies that include compensated time for staff undergoing training required under this Act.

(M) Encourage the payment of adequate salaries and other compensation—

(i) to full and part-time staff of child care providers who provide child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4);

(ii) to the extent practicable, to such staff in other major Federal and State child care programs; and

(iii) to other child care personnel, at the option of the State.

(N) That child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4) are available for an adequate number of hours and days to serve the needs of parents of eligible children, including parents who work nontraditional hours.

(4) CHILD CARE SERVICES.—The plan shall provide that—

(A) subject to subparagraph (B), the State will use at least 70 percent of the amount allotted to the State in any fiscal year to provide child care services that meet the requirements of this Act to eligible children in the State on a sliding fee scale basis and using funding methods provided for in section 8(a)(1), with priority being given for services to children of families with very low family incomes, taking into consideration the size of the family; and

(B) the State will use at least 10 percent of the funds reserved for the purposes specified in subparagraph (A) in any fiscal year to provide for the extension of part-day programs as described in section 8(b).

(5) ACTIVITIES TO IMPROVE THE QUALITY OF CHILD CARE.—The plan shall provide that the State will use not more than 10 percent of the amount allotted to it in any fiscal year to do each of the following:

(A) Provide financial assistance, pursuant to procedures established under the State Dependent Care Development Grants Act (42 U.S.C. 9801 note), to private nonprofit organizations or public organizations (including units of general purpose local government) that meet the requirements of section 12 for the development, establishment, expansion, operation, and coordination of resource and referral programs specifically related to child care.

(B) Improve the monitoring of compliance with, and enforcement of, the licensing and regulatory requirements (including registration requirements) of the State.

(C) Provide training, technical assistance, and scholarship assistance in accordance with the requirements of subsections (b), (c), and (d) of section 13.

(D) Ensure that adequate salaries and other compensation are paid to full- and part-time staff who provide child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4).

(6) ACTIVITIES TO INCREASE THE AVAILABILITY OF CHILD CARE.—The plan shall provide that the State will use not more than 12 percent of the amount allotted to it in any fiscal year for any of the following activities:

(A) Making grants or low interest loans to existing and potential family child care providers and nonprofit child care providers to help such providers pay the cost of—

(i) establishing child care programs; and

(ii) making renovations and improvements in existing facilities to be used to carry out such programs.

(B) Making grants or low-interest loans to child care providers to assist such providers in meeting Federal, State, and local child care standards, giving priority to providers receiving assistance under this Act or under other publicly assisted child care programs and which serve children of families that have very low incomes.

(C) Providing funds for the child care public-private partnership activities described in section 14.

(D) Providing assistance for the establishment and operation of after school child care programs.

(E) Providing assistance for the temporary care of children who are sick and unable to attend child care programs in which such children are enrolled.

(F) Providing assistance for the establishment and operation of child care programs for homeless children.

(G) Providing assistance to link child care programs with programs designed to assist the elderly.

(H)(i) Establishing and administering a revolving loan fund from which any person desiring to make capital improvements to the principal residence of such person (within the meaning of section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) may obtain a loan in order to become a licensed family child care provider, pursuant to State and local law, and to comply with the minimum standards applicable to such providers as established under section 18(e)(2).

(ii) To permit the use of funds provided under this Act for the activity described in clause (i), the State shall set forth procedures and guidelines to carry out the purposes of such clause, including procedures—

(I) that provide assurances that only applicants who obtain a license for the operation of a child care facility in accordance with the provisions of State and local law and who will meet the minimum standards applicable to family child care services established under section 18(e)(2), benefit from loans made available pursuant to the provisions of clause (i);

(II) to assure that the revolving fund will be administered by the State and will provide loans to qualified applicants, pursuant to the terms and conditions established by such State, in an amount, determined by such State, that is not in excess of $1,500;

(III) to assure that funds used to carry out the purpose of clause (i) are transferred to such fund to provide capital for making loans;

(IV) to assure that interest and principal payments on loans and any other moneys, property, or assets derived from any action concerning such funds are deposited into such fund;

(V) to assure that all loans, expenses, and payments pursuant to the operation of the revolving loan fund are paid from such fund;

(VI) to assure that loans made from such fund are made to qualified applicants to enable such applicants to make capital improvements so that such applicant may obtain a State or local family child care provider license and so that such applicant may meet the minimum standards applicable to such providers established under section 18(e)(2); and

(VII) that specify how such revolving loan fund will continue to be financed in subsequent years, such as through contributions by the State or by some other entity.

(I) Providing assistance for any other activity deemed by the State to be in accordance with the purposes of this paragraph.

(7) DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—The plan shall provide that funds will be distributed—

(A) to a variety of types of child care providers, including center-based child care providers, group home child care providers, and family child care providers; and

(B) equitably among child care providers to provide child care services in rural and urban areas.

(8) REIMBURSEMENTS.—The plan shall provide that for child care services for which assistance is provided under this Act, an eligible child care provider shall have a right to reimbursement at the same rate charged by that provider for comparable services to children of comparable ages and special needs whose parents are not eligible for certificates under this Act or for child care assistance under any other Federal or State program.

(9) PRIORITY.—The plan shall provide that priority will be given, in distributing funds in the State, to child care providers that—

(A) in providing child care services assisted by such funds, will give priority to eligible children of families with very low income;

(B) to the maximum extent feasible, provide child care services to a reasonable mix of children, including children from different socioeconomic backgrounds and children with a handicapping condition;

(C) provide opportunities for parent involvement in all aspects of providing such services; and

(D) to the maximum extent feasible, offer family support services.

(10) SLIDING FEE SCALE.—The plan shall provide for the establishment of a sliding fee scale that requires cost sharing based on the services provided to and the income of the families (adjusted for family size) of eligible children who receive services for which assistance is provided under this Act.

(11) PARENTAL INVOLVEMENT.—The plan shall establish procedures for parental involvement in State and local planning, monitoring, and evaluation of child care programs and services in the State.

(12) ENFORCEMENT OF LICENSING AND OTHER REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS (INCLUDING REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS).—The plan shall provide that the State, not later than 4 years after the date of enactment of this Act, shall have in effect enforcement policies and practices that will be applicable to all licensed or regulated child care providers (including child care providers required to register) in the State, including policies and practices that—

(A) require personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to have or receive training in health and safety, child abuse prevention and detection, program management, and relevant law enforcement;

(B) to the maximum extent feasible, have personnel requirements to ensure that individuals who are hired as licensing inspectors are qualified to inspect and have inspection responsibility exclusively for children's services;

(C) require—

(i) personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make not less than 1 unannounced inspection of each center-based child care provider and each group home child care provider in the State annually; and

(ii) personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make unannounced inspections annually of not less than 20 percent of licensed and regulated family child care providers in the State;

(D) require licensed or regulated child care providers (including registered child care providers) in the State—

(i) to have written policies and program goals and to make a copy of such policies and goals available to parents; and

(ii) to provide parents with unlimited access to their children and to providers caring for their children, during normal hours of operation of such providers and whenever children of such parents are in the care of such providers;

(E) implement a procedure to address complaints that will provide a reasonable opportunity for a parent, or child care provider, that is adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the lead agency or any program assisted under this Act, to be heard by the State;

(F) prohibit the operator of a child care facility to take any action against an employee of such operator that would adversely affect the employment, or terms or conditions of employment, of such employee because such employee communicates a failure of such operator to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement;

(G) implement a consumer education program designed to inform parents and the general public about licensing requirements, complaint procedures, and policies and practices required by this paragraph;

(H) require a child care provider to post, on the premises where child care services are provided, the telephone number of the appropriate licensing or regulatory agency that parents may call regarding a failure of such provider to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement; and

(I) require the State to maintain a record of parental complaints and to make information regarding substantiated parental complaints available to the public on request.

(13) DATA COLLECTION.—The plan shall provide for the establishment of procedures for data collection by the State designed to show—

(A) by race, sex, ethnic origin, handicapping condition, and family income, how the child care needs of families in the State are being fulfilled, including information on—

(i) the number of children being assisted with funds provided under this Act, and under other State and Federal child care and preschool programs;

(ii) the type and number of child care programs, child care providers, caregivers, and support personnel located in the State;

(iii) the regional cost of child care; and

(iv) such other information as the Secretary considers necessary to establish how funds provided under this Act are being used;

(B) the extent to which the availability of child care has been increased; and

(C) how the purposes of this Act and the objectives of the State set forth in the State plan are being met, including efforts to improve the quality, availability, and accessibility of child care; and shall provide that data collected by the State under this paragraph shall be submitted to the Secretary.

(d) APPROVAL OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall approve an application that satisfies the requirements of this section.

(e) SPECIAL RULE.—In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall approve any application with respect to the activities described in the plan submitted under paragraph (5) of subsection (c), if the Secretary determines that the State is making reasonable progress in carrying out the activities which are described in subparagraphs (A) and (D) of paragraph (5).

SEC. 8. SPECIAL RULES FOR USE OF STATE ALLOTMENTS.

(a) FUNDING OF CHILD CARE SERVICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The child care services referred to in section 7(c)(4) that are to be provided out of the allotment to a State, shall be provided—

(A) by contracts with or grants to eligible child care providers who agree to provide such services directly to eligible children;

(B) by grants to units of general purpose local government that agree to enter into contracts with eligible child care providers who agree to provide such services directly to eligible children; or

(C) by distributing child care certificates to parents of eligible children under such terms as the Secretary may prescribe to enable the recipients of such certificates to purchase child care services from eligible child care providers.

(2) LIMITATION ON CERTIFICATES.—Child care certificates authorized by paragraph (1)(C) may be issued by a State only if a resource and referral program carried out by an organization that meets the requirements of section 12 is available to help parents locate child care services made available by eligible child care providers.

(3) NO ENTITLEMENT TO CONTRACT OR GRANT.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed to entitle any child care provider or recipient of a child care certificate to any contract, grant or benefit, or to limit the right of any State to impose additional limitations or conditions on contracts or grants funded under this Act.

(b) PART-DAY PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—At least 10 percent of the funds available for activities under section 7(c)(4)(A) shall be used by the State to enable child care providers to extend the hours of operation of the part-day programs described in paragraph (2) to provide full-working-day child care services throughout the year, in order to meet the needs of parents of eligible children.

(2) ELIGIBLE PROGRAMS.—As used in paragraph (1), the term "part-day programs" means—

(A) programs of schools and nonprofit child care providers (including community-based organizations) receiving State or local funds designated for preschool;

(B) programs established under the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9831 et seq.);

(C) preschool programs for which assistance is provided under chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (20 U.S.C. 3801 et seq.); and

(D) preschool programs for children with a handicapping condition.

(c) FACILITIES.—

(1) NEW FACILITIES.—No financial assistance provided under this Act shall be expended for the construction of a new facility.

(2) EXISTING FACILITIES.—No financial assistance provided under this Act shall be expended to renovate or repair any facility unless—

(A) the child care provider that receives such financial assistance agrees—

(i) in the case of a grant, to repay to the Secretary or the State, as the case may be, the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of such grant as the value of the renovation or repair, as of the date such provider ceases to provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this Act, bears to the original value of the renovation or repair; and

(ii) in the case of a loan, to repay immediately to the Secretary or the State, as the case may be, the principal amount of such loan outstanding and any interest accrued, as of the date such provider ceases to provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this Act;

if such provider does not provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this Act throughout the useful life of the renovation or repair; and

(B) if such provider is a sectarian agency or organization, the renovation or repair is necessary to bring such facility into compliance with health and safety requirements imposed by this Act.

SEC. 9. PLANNING GRANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A State desiring to participate in the programs authorized by this Act that cannot fully satisfy the requirements of the State plan under section 7(b) without financial assistance may, in the first year that the State participates in the programs, apply to the Secretary for a planning grant.

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary is authorized to make a planning grant to a State described in subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the grant would enable the State to fully satisfy the requirements of a State plan under section 7(b); and

(2) the State will apply, for the remainder of the allotment that the State is entitled to receive for such fiscal year.

(c) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—A grant made to a State under this section shall not exceed 1 percent of the total allotment that the State would qualify to receive in the fiscal year involved if the State fully satisfied the requirements of section 7.

(d) LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—A grant made under this section shall be considered to be expended for administrative costs by the State for purposes of determining the compliance by the State with the limitation on administrative costs imposed by section 7(c)(3)(F).

SEC. 10. CONTINUING ELIGIBILITY OF STATES.

A State shall be ineligible for assistance under this Act after the expiration of the 4-year period beginning on the date the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under section 18(e)(2) unless the State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that—

(1) all child care providers required to be licensed and regulated in the State—

(A) are so licensed and regulated; and

(B) are subject to the enforcement provisions referred to in the State plan; and

(2) all such providers who are receiving assistance under this Act or under other publicly-assisted child care programs—

(A) satisfy the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1); and

(B) except as provided in section 18(f), satisfy the minimum child care standards established by the Secretary under section 18(e)(2) of this Act.

SEC. 11. STATE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The chief executive officer of a State participating in the program authorized by this Act shall—

(1) establish a State advisory committee on child care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "committee") to assist the lead agency in carrying out the responsibilities of the lead agency under this Act; and

(2) appoint the members of the committee.

(b) COMPOSITION.—The State committee shall be composed of not fewer than 21 and not more than 30 members who shall include—

(1) at least 1 representative of the lead agency designated under section 6(a);

(2) 1 representative of each of—

(A) the State departments of—

(i) human resources or social services;

(ii) education;

(iii) economic development; and

(iv) health; and

(B) other State agencies having responsibility for the regulation, funding, or provision of child care services in the State;

(3) at least 1 representative of providers of different types of child care services, including caregivers and directors;

(4) at least 1 representative of early childhood development experts;

(5) at least 1 representative of school districts and teachers involved in the provision of child care services and preschool programs;

(6) at least 1 representative of resource and referral programs;

(7) 1 pediatrician;

(8) 1 representative of a citizen group concerned with child care;

(9) at least 1 representative of an organization representing child care employees;

(10) at least 1 representative of the Head Start agencies in the State;

(11) parents of children receiving, or in need of, child care services, including at least 2 parents whose children are receiving or are in need of subsidized child care services;

(12) 1 representative of specialists concerned with children who have a handicapping condition;

(13) 1 representative of individuals engaged in business;

(14) 1 representative of fire marshals and building inspectors;

(15) 1 representative of child protective services; and

(16) 1 representative of units of general purpose local government.

(c) FUNCTIONS.—The committee shall—

(1) advise the lead agency on child care policies;

(2) provide the lead agency with information necessary to coordinate the provision of child care services in the State;

(3) otherwise assist the lead agency in carrying out the functions assigned to the lead agency under section 6(c);

(4) review and evaluate child services for which assistance is provided under this Act or under State law, in meeting the objectives of the State plan and the purposes of this Act;

(5) make recommendations on the development of State child care standards and policies;

(6) participate in the regional public hearings required under section 6(c)(5); and

(7) perform other functions to improve the quantity and quality of child care services in the State.

(d) MEETINGS AND HEARINGS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the beginning of each fiscal year, the committee shall meet and establish the time, place, and manner of future meetings of the committee.

(2) MINIMUM NUMBER OF HEARINGS.—The committee shall have at least 2 public hearings each year at which the public shall be given an opportunity to express views concerning the administration and operation of the State plan.

(e) USE OF EXISTING COMMITTEES.—To the extent that a State has established a broadly representative State advisory group, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, that is comparable to the advisory committee described in this section and focused exclusively on child care and early childhood development programs, such State shall be considered to be in compliance with subsections (a) through (c).

(f) SUBCOMMITTEE ON LICENSING.—

(1) COMPOSITION.—The committee shall have a subcommittee on licensing (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "subcommittee") that shall be composed of the members appointed under paragraphs (2)(A)(iv), (3), (6), (7), (11), (14), and (15) of subsection (b).

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The subcommittee shall review the law applicable to, and the licensing requirements and the policies of, each licensing agency that regulates child care services and programs in the State unless the State has reviewed such law, requirements, and policies in the 4-year period ending on the date of the establishment of the committee under subsection (a).

(g) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after establishment of the committee under subsection (a), the committee shall prepare and submit to the chief executive officer of the State involved a report.

(2) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—A report prepared under paragraph (1) shall contain—

(A) an analysis of information on child care services provided by center-based child care providers, group home child care providers, and family child care providers;

(B) a detailed statement of the findings and recommendations that result from the subcommittee review under subsection (f)(2), including a description of the current status of child care licensing, regulating, monitoring, and enforcement in the State;

(C) a detailed statement identifying and describing the deficiencies in the existing licensing, regulating, and monitoring programs of the State involved, including an assessment of the adequacy of staff to carry out such programs effectively, and recommendations to correct such deficiencies or to improve such programs; and

(D) comments on the minimum child care standards established by the Secretary under section 18(e)(2).

(3) RECEIPT OF REPORT BY THE CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF THE STATE.—Not later than 60 days after receiving the report from the committee, the chief executive officer of the State shall transmit such report to the Secretary with—

(A) the comments of the chief executive officer of the State; and

(B) a plan for correcting deficiencies in, or improving the licensing, regulating, and monitoring, of the child care services and programs referred to in subsection (f)(2).

(h) SERVICES AND PERSONNEL.—

(1) AUTHORITY.—The lead agency is authorized to provide the services of such personnel, and to contract for such other services as may be necessary, to enable the committee and the subcommittee to carry out their functions under this Act.

(2) REIMBURSEMENT.—Members of the committee shall be reimbursed, in accordance with standards established by the Secretary, for necessary expenses incurred by such members in carrying out the functions of the committee and the subcommittee.

(3) SUFFICIENCY OF FUNDS.—The Secretary shall ensure that sufficient funds are made available, from funds available for the administration of the State plan, to the committee and the subcommittee to carry out the requirements of this section.

SEC. 12. RESOURCE AND REFERRAL PROGRAMS.

(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR ASSISTANCE.—Each State receiving funds under this Act shall, pursuant to section 7(c)(5)(A), make grants to or enter into contracts with private nonprofit organizations or public organizations (including units of general purpose local government), as resource and referral agencies to ensure that resource and referral services are available to families in all geographical areas in the State.

(b) FUNDING.—Organizations that receive assistance under subsection (a) shall carry out resource and referral programs—

(1) to identify all types of existing child care services, including services provided by individual family child care providers and by child care providers who provide child care services to children with a handicapping condition;

(2) to provide to interested parents information and referral regarding such services, including the availability of public funds to obtain such services;

(3) to provide or arrange for the provision of information, training, and technical assistance to existing and potential child care providers and to others (including businesses) concerned with the availability of child care services; and

(4) to provide information on the demand for and supply of child care services located in a community.

(c) REQUIREMENTS.—To be eligible for assistance as a resource and referral agency under subsection (a), an organization shall—

(1) have or acquire a database of information on child care services in the State or in a particular geographical area that the organization continually updates, including child care services provided in centers, group home child care settings, nursery schools, and family child care settings;

(2) have the capability to provide resource and referral services in a particular geographical area;

(3) be able to provide parents with information to assist them in identifying quality child care services;

(4) to the maximum extent practicable, notify all eligible child care providers in such area of the functions it performs and solicit such providers to request to be listed to receive referrals made by such organization; and

(5) otherwise comply with regulations promulgated by the State in accordance with subsection (d).

(d) LIMITATION ON INFORMATION.—In carrying out this section, an organization receiving assistance under subsection (a) as a resource and referral agency shall not provide information concerning any child care program or services which are not in compliance with the laws of the State and localities in which such services are provided.

SEC. 13. TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) MINIMUM REQUIREMENT.—A State receiving funds under this Act shall require, not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, that all employed or self-employed individuals who provide licensed or regulated child care services (including registered child care services) in a State complete at least 40 hours of training over a 2-year period in areas appropriate to the provision of child care services, including training in health and safety, nutrition, first aid, the recognition of communicable diseases, child abuse detection and prevention, and the needs of special populations of children.

(b) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS FOR TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

(1) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—The State shall make grants to, and enter into contracts with State agencies, units of general purpose local government, institutions of higher education, and nonprofit organizations (including resource and referral organizations, child care food program sponsors, and family child care associations, as appropriate) to develop and carry out child care training and technical assistance programs under which preservice and continuing inservice training is provided to eligible child care providers, including family child care providers, and the staff of such providers including teachers, administrative personnel, and staff of resource and referral programs involved in providing child care services in the State.

(2) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR GRANTS AND CONTRACTS RELATING TO TRAINING FOR FAMILY CHILD CARE PROVIDERS.—To be eligible to receive a grant or enter into a contract for a training and technical assistance program for family child care providers under paragraph (1), a nonprofit organization shall—

(A) recruit and train family child care providers, including providers with the capacity to provide night-time and emergency child care services;

(B) operate resource centers to make developmentally appropriate curriculum materials available to family child care providers;

(C) provide grants to family child care providers for the purchase of moderate cost equipment to be used to provide child care services; and

(D) operate a system of substitute caregivers.

(3) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR GRANTS AND CONTRACTS RELATING TO TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—To be eligible to receive a grant, or enter into a contract under subsection (b) to provide technical assistance, an agency, organization, or institution shall agree to furnish technical assistance to child care providers to assist such providers—

(A) in understanding and complying with local regulations and relevant tax and other policies;

(B) in meeting State licensing, regulatory, and other requirements (including registration) pertaining to family child care providers.

(c) SCHOLARSHIP ASSISTANCE.—The State shall provide scholarship assistance to—

(1) individuals who seek a nationally recognized child development associate credential for center-based or family child care and whose income does not exceed the poverty line (as defined in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2))) by more than 100 percent, in amounts sufficient to cover the costs involved in securing such credential; and

(2) caregivers who seek to obtain the training referred to in subsection (a) and whose income does not exceed such poverty line.

(d) CLEARINGHOUSE.—The State shall establish in the lead agency a clearinghouse to collect and disseminate training materials to resource and referral agencies and child care providers throughout the State.

SEC. 14. CHILD CARE PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP.

(a) ACTIVITIES AUTHORIZED.—Each State using funds as described in section 7(c)(6)(C) shall design activities conducted with such funds to encourage businesses in the State to support or provide child care services to a reasonable mix of children, including children from different socioeconomic backgrounds, and children of employees and nonemployees. Such activities may include—

(1) disseminating information relating to—

(A) model child care programs appropriate for implementation by such businesses;

(B) flexible employee work schedules; and

(C) other technical assistance that would enable employers to establish and operate child care programs;

(2) making grants or loans on a competitive basis to assist employers in establishing innovative child care programs;

(3) establishing a demonstration program under which grants are made to local nonprofit private organizations to improve and expand child care services in cooperation with employees who contribute to the cost of such improvement or expansion;

(4) making grants to non-profit business organizations to provide technical information and assistance to enable employers to develop and operate child care services; and

(5) encouraging such businesses to participate in resource and referral activities carried out by organizations recognized under section 12.

(b) DUTIES OF STATE.—In carrying out the activities described in subsection (a), the State shall—

(1) consult with the State advisory committee on child care established under section 11;

(2) provide outreach to businesses participating in such activities; and

(3) encourage such businesses to contribute to the cost of carrying out such activities.

(c) BUSINESS PARTNERSHIP TASK FORCE.—The State may carry out subsection (a) in consultation with—

(1) a business task force appointed by the State from among representatives of businesses of various sizes in the State; and

(2) a state entity that administers laws relating to productive economic development.

(d) PRESIDENT'S AWARD FOR PROGRESSIVE MANAGEMENT POLICY.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND AWARD.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—There is established the President's Award for Responsive Management Policy to honor public and private sector employers who have—

(i) successfully implemented in their businesses family-oriented personnel programs and policies responsive to the child care needs of working parents; or

(ii) made significant contributions to child care projects in their communities.

(B) CITATION.—The President's Award for Responsive Management Policy shall consist of a certificate, plaque, or other appropriate citation.

(2) NOMINATION AND SELECTION.—

(A) NOMINATIONS.—Each year the President, acting through the Secretary of Labor, shall solicit nominations for the President's Award for Responsive Management Policy from State and local elected officials, educational institutions, State-based employee or business associations, or other State or local entities.

(B) RECIPIENTS.—The President, in conclusion with the Secretary of Labor, shall select not less than 3 such nominees from each State to receive the President's Award for that year.

(C) REPRESENTATION.—Of the nominees selected from each State to receive such awards, at least 1 shall represent—

(i) a small business;

(ii) an intermediate-size business; and

(iii) a large business.

(3) PRESENTATION.—The President shall present the President's Award each year with such ceremonies as the President may consider proper.

(4) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Labor shall promulgate such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(5) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

(A) INTERMEDIATE-SIZE BUSINESS.—The term "intermediate-size business" means a business with at least 101 but not more than 500 employees.

(B) LARGE BUSINESS.—The term "large business" means a business with 501 or more employees.

(C) SMALL BUSINESS.—The term "small business" means a business with not more than 100 employees.

(D) STATE.—The term "State" means any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Canal Zone, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 15. FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION OF CHILD CARE.

(a) ADMINISTRATOR OF CHILD CARE.—There is hereby established in the Department of Health and Human Services the position of Administrator of Child Care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Administrator"). The Secretary shall appoint an individual to serve as the Administrator at the pleasure of the Secretary.

(b) DUTIES.—The Administrator shall—

(1) coordinate all activities of the Department of Health and Human Services relating to child care, and coordinate such activities with similar activities of other Federal entities;

(2) annually collect and publish State child care standards, including periodic modifications to such standards;

(3) evaluate activities carried out with funds provided under this Act;

(4) act as a clearinghouse to collect and disseminate materials that relate to—

(A) the child care training and technical assistance programs described in section 13(b)(1); and

(B) studies that relate to the salaries paid to individuals employed to provide child care services; and

(5) provide technical assistance to assist States to carry out this Act.

SEC. 16. FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.

(a) REVIEW OF COMPLIANCE WITH STATE PLAN.—The Secretary shall review and monitor State compliance with this Act and the plan approved under section 7(d) for the State.

(b) NONCOMPLIANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to a State, finds that—

(A) there has been a failure by the State to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the plan approved under section 7(d) for the State; or

(B) in the operation of any program or project for which assistance is provided under this Act there is a failure by the State to comply substantially with any provision of this Act;

the Secretary shall notify the State of the finding and that no further payments may be made to such State under this Act (or, in the case of noncompliance in the operation of a program or activity, that no further payments to the State will be made with respect to such program or activity) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

(2) ADDITIONAL SANCTIONS.—In the case of a finding of noncompliance made pursuant to this paragraph (1), the Secretary may, in addition to imposing the sanctions described in such paragraph, impose other appropriate sanctions, including recoupment of money improperly expended for purposes prohibited or not authorized by this Act, and disqualification from the receipt of financial assistance under this Act.

(3) NOTICE.—The notice required under paragraph (1) shall include a specific identification of any additional sanction being imposed under paragraph (2).

(c) ISSUANCE OF RULES.—The Secretary shall establish by rule procedures for—

(1) receiving, processing, and determining the validity of complaints concerning any failure of a State to comply with the State plan or any requirement of this Act; and

(2) imposing sanctions under this section.

SEC. 17. PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—Each State that—

(A) has an application approved by the Secretary under section 7(d); and

(B) demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it will provide from non-Federal sources the State share of the aggregate amount to be expended by the State under the State plan for the fiscal year for which it requests a grant; shall receive a payment under this section for such fiscal year in an amount (not to exceed its allotment under section 5 for such fiscal year) equal to the Federal share of the aggregate amount to be expended by the State under the State plan for such fiscal year.

(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Federal share for each fiscal year shall be 80 percent.

(B) EXCEPTION.—If a State makes the demonstration specified in section 10 throughout a fiscal year for which it requests a grant, then the Federal share shall be 85 percent.

(3) STATE SHARE.—The State share equals 100 percent minus the Federal share.

(4) LIMITATION.—A State may not require any private provider of child care services that receives or seeks funds made available under this Act to contribute in cash or in kind to the State contribution required by this subsection.

(b) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary may make payments to a State in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

(2) LIMITATION.—The Secretary may not make such payments in a manner that prevents the State from complying with the requirement specified in section 7(c)(3)(F).

(c) SPENDING OF FUNDS BY STATE.—Payments to a State from the allotment under section 5 for any fiscal year may be expended by the State in that fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

SEC. 18. NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON MINIMUM CHILD CARE STANDARDS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to improve the quality of child care services, the Secretary shall establish, not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, a National Advisory Committee on Minimum Child Care Standards (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Committee"), the members of which shall be appointed from among representatives of—

(A) the chief executive officers of the several States;

(B) State legislatures;

(C) units of general purpose local governments;

(D) businesses;

(E) individuals responsible for regulating the insurance industry within the States;

(F) religious institutions;

(G) different types of child care providers;

(H) persons who carry out resource and referral programs;

(I) child care, early childhood development, or early childhood education specialists;

(J) individuals who have expertise in pediatric health care, handicapping conditions, and related fields;

(K) organizations representing child care employees;

(L) individuals who have experience in the regulation of child care services; and

(M) parents who have been actively involved in community child care programs.

(2) APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS.—The Committee shall be composed of 20 members of which—

(A) 4 members shall be appointed by the President;

(B) 4 members shall be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate;

(C) 4 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the Senate;

(D) 4 members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

(E) 4 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(3) CHAIRMAN.—The President shall appoint a chairman from among the members of the Committee.

(4) VACANCIES.—A vacancy occurring on the Committee shall be filled in the same manner as that in which the original appointment was made.

(b) PERSONNEL, REIMBURSEMENT, AND OVERSIGHT.—

(1) PERSONNEL.—The Secretary shall make available to the Committee office facilities, personnel who are familiar with child development and with developing and implementing regulatory requirements, technical assistance, and funds as are necessary to enable the Committee to carry out effectively its functions.

(2) REIMBURSEMENT.—

(A) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Committee who are not regular full-time employees of the United States Government shall, while attending meetings and conferences of the Committee or otherwise engaged in the business of the Committee (including traveltime), be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(B) EXPENSES.—While away from their homes or regular places of business on the business of the Committee, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(3) OVERSIGHT.—The Secretary shall ensure that the Committee is established and operated in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

(c) FUNCTIONS.—The Committee shall—

(1) review Federal policies with respect to child care services and such other data as the Committee may deem appropriate;

(2) not later than 180 days after the date on which a majority of the members of the Committee are first appointed, submit to the Secretary proposed minimum standards described in subsection (d) for child care services, taking into account the different needs of infants, toddlers, preschool and school-age children; and

(3) develop and make available to lead agencies, for distribution to resource and referral agencies in the State, model requirements for resource and referral agencies.

(d) MINIMUM CHILD CARE STANDARDS.—The proposed child care standards submitted pursuant to subsection (c)(2) shall be minimum standards and shall consist of only the following:

(1) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by center-based child care providers shall be limited to—

(A) group size limits in terms of the number of caregivers and the number and ages of children;

(B) the maximum appropriate child-staff ratios;

(C) qualifications and background of child care personnel;

(D) health and safety requirements for children and caregivers; and

(E) parental involvement in licensed and regulated child care services.

The standards described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall reflect the median standards for all States (using for States which apply separate standards to publicly-assisted programs the most comprehensive or stringent of such standards) as of the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) FAMILY CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by family child care providers shall be limited to—

(A) the maximum number of children for which child care services may be provided and the total number of infants for which child care services may be provided;

(B) the minimum age for caregivers; and

(C) health and safety requirements for children and caregivers.

(3) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by group home child care providers shall be limited to the matters specified in paragraphs (1)(B) and (2).

(4) LIMITATION.—The Committee shall not submit any standard under subsection (c)(2) that is less or more rigorous than the least or most rigorous standard that exists in any of the States at the time of the submission of such recommendation.

(e) CONSIDERATION AND ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS.—

(1) NOTICE OF PROPOSED RULEMAKING.—Not later than 90 days after receiving the recommendations of the committee, the Secretary shall—

(A) publish in the Federal Register—

(i) a notice of proposed rulemaking concerning the minimum standards proposed under subsection (d) to the Secretary; and

(ii) such proposed minimum standards for public comment for a period of at least 60 days; and

(B) distribute such proposed minimum standards to each lead agency and each State subcommittee on licensing for comment.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF MINIMUM CHILD CARE STANDARDS.—

(A) ISSUANCE OF RULES.—The Secretary shall, in consultation with the committee—

(i) take into consideration any comments received by the Secretary with respect to the standards proposed under subsection (d); and

(ii) not later than 180 days after publication of such standards, shall issue rules establishing minimum child care standards for purposes of this Act. Such standards shall include the nutrition requirements issued, and revised from time to time, under section 17(g)(1) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1766(g)(1)).

(B) AMENDING STANDARDS.—The Secretary may amend any standard first established under subparagraph (A), except that such standard may not be modified, by amendment or otherwise, to make such standard less comprehensive or less stringent than it is when first established.

(C) EXTENDED PERIOD FOR COMMENT.—If the Committee recommends a standard under subsection (c)(2) that no State has a requirement concerning, as of the time that such standard is recommended, the Secretary shall provide an additional 30 days during which States may submit comments concerning such standard.

(3) ADDITIONAL COMMENTS.—The National Committee may submit to the Secretary and to the Congress such additional comments on the minimum child care standards established under paragraph (2) as the National Committee considers appropriate.

(f) VARIANCES.—

(1) TIME FOR COMPLIANCE WITH STANDARDS.—Not later than the end of the 4-year period referred to in section 10, States shall comply with the standards established under this section.

(2) EXCEPTION.—At the expiration of the 4-year period referred to in paragraph (1) the chief executive officer, in consultation with the State advisory committee, may submit a request to the Secretary for a 1 year variance from the requirements of one or more particular standards for one or more particular geographic areas of the State.

(3) REQUIREMENTS.—A request for a variance under this subsection shall include—

(A) a statement by the chief executive officer of the State of the steps taken to implement the relevant standards in the relevant geographic areas in the State within the 4-year period;

(B) the specific reasons for the submission of the variance request; and

(C) a detailed plan that outlines the additional procedures and resources to be used to come into compliance with the standards at the end of the variance period.

(4) PERIOD OF VARIANCE.—A variance granted by the Secretary shall be for a 1-year period and may be renewed at the discretion of the Secretary for an additional 1-year period if requested by the State.

(g) TERMINATION OF COMMITTEE.—The National Committee shall cease to exist 90 days after the date the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under subsection (e)(3).

SEC. 19. LIMITATIONS ON USE OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.

(a) SECTARIAN PURPOSES AND ACTIVITIES.—No financial assistance provided under this Act shall be expended for any sectarian purpose or activity, including sectarian worship and instruction.

(b) TUITION.—With regard to services provided to students enrolled in grades 1 through 12, no financial assistance provided under this Act shall be expended for—

(1) any services provided to such students during the regular school day;

(2) any services for which such students receive academic credit toward graduation; or

(3) any instructional services which supplant or duplicate the academic program of any public or private school.

SEC. 20. NONDISCRIMINATION.

(a) FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—Any financial assistance provided under this Act, including a loan, grant, or child care certificate, shall constitute Federal financial assistance for purposes of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.), title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (20 U.S.C. 1681, et seq.), the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794 et seq.), the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), and the regulations issued thereunder.

(b) RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION.—A child care provider may not discriminate against any child on the basis of religion in providing child care services in return for a fee paid, reimbursement received, or certificate redeemed, in whole or in part with financial assistance provided under this Act.

SEC. 21. PRESERVATION OF PARENTAL RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed or applied in any manner to infringe upon or usurp the moral and legal rights and responsibilities of parents or legal guardians.

SEC. 22. CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section—

(1) to increase the availability of child care by alleviating the serious difficulty faced by child care providers in obtaining affordable liability insurance; and

(2) to provide States with a sufficient capital base for liability insurance purposes that may be increased or maintained through mechanisms developed by the State.

(b) FORMATION OF CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.—

(1) ASSISTANCE IN FORMATION AND OPERATION OF GROUP.—Any State may assist in the establishment and operation of a child care liability risk retention group in the manner provided under this section.

(2) CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term "child care liability risk retention group" means any corporation (or other limited liability association)—

(A) whose members are licensed child care providers pursuant to State and local law and who, after the expiration of the 4-year period beginning on the date the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under section 17(e)(2), complies with such minimum child care standards that are applicable to the child care services provided by such members; and

(B) which otherwise satisfies the criteria for a risk retention group under section 2(4) of the Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986 (15 U.S.C. 3901(4)).

(c) STATE APPLICATIONS.—

(1) APPLICATIONS.—To qualify for assistance under this section, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary, at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require, including information that meets the requirements of subsection (b) of this section.

(2) CONTENT OF STATE APPLICATION.—

(A) LEAD AGENCY.—The application shall identify the lead agency that has been designated and that is to be responsible for the administration of funds provided under this section.

(B) PARTICIPANTS IN RISK RETENTION GROUP.—The application shall assure that all participants in the child care liability risk retention group are licensed child care providers pursuant to State and local law who, after the expiration of the 4-year period beginning on the date the Secretary establishes minimum child care standards under section 18(e)(2), comply with such standards that are applicable to the child care services they provide. In addition, the applicant shall provide for maximum membership of family-based child care providers in the group.

(C) USE OF FUNDS.—The application shall provide that the State shall use at least the amount allotted to the State in any fiscal year to establish or operate a child care liability risk retention group.

(D) CONTINUATION OF RISK RETENTION GROUP.—The application shall contain provisions that specify how the child care liability risk retention group will continue to be financed after fiscal year 1992, including financing through contributions by the State or by members of such group.

(d) FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.—

(1) REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary shall review and approve State applications submitted in accordance with this section and shall monitor State compliance with the provisions of this section.

(2) FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice to a State and opportunity for a hearing, finds—

(A) that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the State application of that State; or

(B) that there is a failure to comply substantially with any applicable provision of this section, the Secretary shall notify such State of the findings and of the fact that no further payments may be made to such State under this section until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply, or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

(e) ALLOTMENT TO STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make an allotment to each State from the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section using the same allotment formula established under section 5.

(2) STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Of the amount allotted to a State pursuant to paragraph (1), an amount not to exceed 10 percent shall be used by such State to provide for the administrative costs of carrying out such program.

(f) PAYMENTS.—

(1) ENTITLEMENT.—Each State for which an application has been approved by the Secretary under this section shall be entitled to payments under this subsection for each fiscal year in an amount not to exceed its allotment under subsection (e) to be expended by the State in accordance with the terms of the application for the fiscal year for which the grant is to be made.

(2) METHOD OF PAYMENTS.—The Secretary may make payments to a State in installments, and in advance or, by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

(3) STATE SPENDING OF PAYMENTS.—Payments to a State from the allotment under subsection (e) for any fiscal year must be expended by the State in that fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Act for Better Child Care Services, a bipartisan, comprehensive bill to expand and improve child care in this country. I commend Senator DODD and Senator HATCH for reaching a good compromise that incorporates the best aspects of the child care bills each introduced in the 100th Congress.

As a nation, we are no longer arguing about whether we ought to have a child care program in this country. In a national poll taken last summer, a majority of Americans said child care is now an urgent need. Two out of three surveyed favored national policies to help make child care more available and affordable.

There was a time when a typical family could be defined this way: Dad at work and mom at home looking after the children. Today that stereotype fits less than 1 in 10 families. Today two-income families are the rule rather than the exception.

Today mothers with young children are the fastest growing segment of the labor force. Half the women in America are making the same decision: They're returning to work before their child's first birthday. Their numbers will only increase. By the middle of the next decade, two out of every three preschoolers are expected to have mothers working outside the home.

Now with both parents working, who's going to mind the children? Mr. President, America's families are asking this question—and they're not getting easy answers.

Today we have a national shortage of good child care. From Memphis to Mesa to Monterey, more and more families can't get the child care they need at a price they can afford.

In New York City, 150,000 children under the age of 6 need child care. And how many slots are available? Enough for only a third. In my own State of Arizona there are over 130,000 latchkey children—children who come home from school to an empty house.

In addition to child care's short supply, its costs are soaring. In 1984, these costs took nearly a third of the average American family's income. Twenty years ago child care costs took only about one-tenth. At the same time, we simply do not pay our child care workers adequate salaries. In 1986, two out of every three providers had annual earnings below the poverty line. It's no wonder we have a high turnover in our child care centers.

The bottom line is that good, affordable child care is becoming a critical national need. In some cases, when that need is not met, the result can be tragic.

Little more than a year ago, we were glued to television sets across this Nation. We watched as some pretty heroic people rescued Jessica McClure—the young girl trapped in a well in Texas. She had been playing with two other children in the backyard of an unregulated family day care home. Unattended, Jessica fell into the 8-inch well opening. Fortunately, that child care story had a happy ending.

But not all the stories end happily. In Brooklyn fire broke out in an unlicensed child care center. The provider was looking after more children than State standards allowed and could not get them all to safety. A 2-year-old and a 4-year-old were killed. Tragically, those two children have not been the only victims of a child care system that often doesn't measure up to the mark.

What we see emerging is a two-tier system in which the rich can afford quality care, and everyone else must settle for less. A young single mother in Chicago has been through four sitters in 6 months. Two proved too expensive. One turned out to be too careless, and the fourth robbed her.

This young woman's story makes us take notice that our society simply has not provided adequate alternatives to many parents. Pure and simple, we need to reorder our national priorities. We need to make safe child care available, and we need to make it affordable—especially to those parents and children who are most in need.

Mr. President, I believe the revised ABC bill is a significant step toward meeting this need. The legislation provides $2.5 billion in fiscal year 1990 to fund care for children up to age 15 in a variety of settings—from family day-care homes to after school programs. A large portion of the money—70 percent—would be used to help families pay for child care based on need. This bill calls for new spending in addition to, not instead of, existing Federal programs.

There will be some who say we cannot afford the price tag. But good child care is now an important national need. We can—and we must—reallocate our resources so that we can fund this legislation without increasing the Federal deficit.

In addition to making child care more affordable, the ABC bill also attempts to address other pressing problems in child care. Money would be earmarked to improve the training of child care workers and to recruit and train new family day care providers. Low interest loans would be available for family based child care. Grants and loans would be provided to fund the startup costs of employer-sponsored child care programs.

This last proposal is an issue I have long advocated. Six years ago my wife Susan and I helped establish the onsite child care center for children of any U.S. Senate employee, from cook to clerk to chief of staff. It began with a one-time only startup fee of $20,000 taken from the U.S. Senate budget. Today that center is thriving.

It is not enough, however, just to increase the supply of child care. We must also improve its quality. Toward this end, the ABC bill would establish minimum national standards of health and safety—standards with which only publicly funded child care programs must comply. In a departure from the original legislation, the revised ABC bill makes it easier for States to comply with these standards by allowing a 1-year variance—with the option of an additional year extension—if the State needs more time to comply with a particular standard in a particular area of the State.

Last year opponents of the ABC bill argued that the legislation was a precursor to more and more government and State bureaucracy. But underscore this in bold: The revised ABC bill sets up no Federal bureaucracy. The States would have complete flexibility to develop and administer the child care programs funded under this legislation. The Congressional Budget Office estimates the Federal administrative cost of the bill to be three-tenths of 1 percent of the total authorization, or less than $9 million.

In addition, the States would have complete discretion to give parents child care vouchers or to use grants and contracts with child care providers. In either case, parents would be able to choose from a wide range of child care services, including nonprofit and for profit child care centers, family day care homes, school-based care and church-based care.

This past September the first high school graduating class of the 21st century entered first grade. These young children are America's workers, parents, teachers, and farmers of tomorrow. They are the potential leaders of the next century. This fact is sad, but true: One out of two children in the class of 2000 has a mother in the labor force, but only a minority had safe, affordable quality child care before they entered school.

We've got to change the odds. To do so, we must be willing to invest in the future. An investment in the future means an investment in our children. The Act for Better Child Care Services is a good beginning—for it will help ensure good beginnings for our children—our best hope for the future.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, as a cosponsor and strong supporter of the Act for Better Child Care Services—the ABC bill—in the last Congress, I am pleased to join in sponsoring this legislation as it is reintroduced in the Senate today. There can be no higher priority than protecting our most valuable resource—the well-being of our children. The ABC bill is the only legislation which has been considered by the Congress which addresses our Nation's pressing child care needs in a comprehensive manner, and I am pleased to cosponsor legislation to ensure the availability of quality, affordable child care services throughout the country.

There can be no doubt that the existing national supply of child care services is inadequate to meet the needs of the increasing number of children who have mothers employed outside of the home. The number of preschool children with mothers in the labor force has grown by 75 percent over the past 15 years, and the number of school-age children with working mothers has increased by 22 percent. In addition, over half of all mothers who currently have infants under 1 year of age work outside the home.

A report on the status of child care services in my State of Maryland, undertaken in 1987 by the Johns Hopkins Institute for Policy Studies at the request of the Maryland Department of Human Resources, indicates that the need for increased child care in Maryland is also very large. The report shows that 60 percent, or 233,877 children, younger than 6 years old had mothers in the labor force; 72 percent, 416,810 children, between the ages of 6 and 14 had working mothers. Yet, in 1986, Maryland had only 941 registered group child care centers with a total capacity of 39,400 slots. Registered family day care homes numbered 8,470 with a total capacity of 33,878 slots.

Economic factors would indicate that mothers will continue to enter the work force in growing numbers. A recent study completed by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families reports that 35 percent more two-parent families would live below the poverty line if both parents were not employed. It also shows that two-thirds of mothers currently in the work force are either the sole supporter of their families or have husbands who earn less than $15,000 per year.

Given these statistics, it might reasonably be assumed that the Federal Government would have increased its support of child care services to meet the changing needs of our society. Instead, the previous administration sought massive cuts in appropriations for Federal programs providing support for child care services, especially those serving the child care needs of low-income Americans.

The major current Federal program which includes appropriations for child care is the title XX social service block grant [SSBG]. SSBG provides approximately $2.7 billion a year for a variety of social services, including child care. However, with the advent of the Reagan administration's block grant system in 1981, States are no longer required to allot a defined level of funding for child care services. Consequently, only 15 to 18 percent of SSBG appropriations are currently used for child care nationwide. In addition, the funding for this program has been cut dramatically since 1980, absorbing a 20-percent cut in 1981 alone. With diminishing Federal support, States have been required to look to local funding for additional revenues and, in many States, service levels have dramatically declined. It is clear that without a renewed Federal investment and without funds earmarked directly for child care, there is no guarantee that States will be able to provide adequate support for this increasingly critical area.

The child and dependent care tax credit currently provides the largest Federal support for family child care needs. This credit, available to working families with dependent care costs, including child care, allows a deduction of up to 30 percent of dependent care expenses. However, low-income families with little or no tax liability cannot benefit from this credit; and the average credit of less than $350 per taxpayer is hardly enough to offset child care costs currently averaging $2,500 per year in Maryland and $3,000 per year nationwide. Further, a refund collected at the end of the year does not help working families who cannot afford to pay for child care services when they are required. Finally, it should be noted that the tax credit approach to the child care problem does nothing to expand the supply or quality of child care services available to parents.

Besides addressing the important areas of availability and affordability of child care, the ABC bill would also ensure that child care providers offer adequate and safe care for our Nation's children. The existing system of State enforced regulations on child care is a confused jumble of differing standards. Thirty-two States require no first aid training for child care center workers, 21 do not require criminal record checks of providers, and 44 do not require child abuse central registry checks. The quality safeguards included in the ABC bill for child care represent the minimum protection we must afford our children.

Mr. President, the need for a comprehensive, coordinated Federal policy on child care services has never been greater than it is today. With recent projections that by 1995 two-thirds of all preschool children and four out of five school age children will have mothers in the labor force, this need can only increase. We must make a national commitment to ensure the availability of quality, affordable child care for all our Nation's children. Passage of the Act for Better Child Care Services would be a significant step in this critical direction.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, providing safe and affordable child care is of critical importance to our Nation's children, families, and economy. Thus I am proud to again cosponsor the Act for Better Child Care.

We now have a tangible opportunity to strengthen and stabilize America's families. We in Washington argue over whether the Government should subsidize day care, or do more to strengthen the traditional family. But in Davenport and Council Bluffs, IA, where I spent two of my work days at child care centers, I learned that most families have a more pressing, pragmatic concern—when will there be an opening for their child?

Too many children are now being cared for in crowded and unsafe day care facilities or are simply being left alone at home.

America's families are changing rapidly. More than half of women with young children are in the work force today, some because they want to be, most because they have to be. Two out of three women working outside the home are either the sole providers of their children or have husbands earning less than $15,000 per year.

For families where the mother can afford to stay home, we ought to offer our encouragement and support. The current Tax Code provides a dependent child tax credit, and perhaps this ought to be expanded. Tax breaks can be a part of the puzzle, but they hardly begin to address the magnitude of a problem in which most American families need but cannot find affordable, reliable and safe day care for their children.

Much has been written and said about the ABC bill—much of it misleading. The measure would create no massive new Federal bureaucracy; the money would be parceled out to the States, which would be responsible for administering and monitoring child care services. It would encourage diversity and expand, not constrict, parent's child care options—options which would include family and church-based care. It would target help to working parents at the lower end of the income spectrum, not the upper brackets.

ABC would help communities increase availability of, and access to, child care by funding grants and loans for the establishment of child care programs, building renovation, salaries for child care providers, technical help for businesses seeking to meet employee child care needs, expansion of part day into full day programs, and resource and referral networks.

States could help low- and moderate-income families, earning up to the State's median income, pay for child care either through vouchers to parents or contracts with day care providers.

The ABC bill also establishes an advisory committees including a wide range of day care providers, consumers and State representatives, which will be responsible for setting minimum standards for health and safety. We can no longer force our children to pay the cost of unsafe care.

Of course, better child care entails a cost. But if you think child care is expensive, take a look at the cost of inaction. Our industrial competitors who invest in child care do it because it pays off in increased productivity and economic growth.

We are spending $10 billion a year on welfare. The cost of providing child care is about one-third of the average welfare payment. A small investment in child care can pay dividends down the road, as we reduce the size of the welfare rolls, and recipients get jobs and pay taxes.

Children left unattended, or in inadequate day care facilities, often enter public schools far behind their classmates. Special education programs for disadvantaged children cost $4 billion last year—$4 billion, Mr. President.

But this, of course, is not merely a question of economics. It's a question of how we will provide for our children, and how we want them to grow up. In an editorial appearing in the Des Moines Register this past year, the author stated that the ABC bill "has the potential to make life better for America's working poor, make life safer for their children, and ease the welfare burden on all of society." I think that says it all.

I want to close by thanking my colleague from Connecticut for his persistent efforts on behalf of families and children. CHRIS DODD is a man who truly does care about how our children grow up. Again, I am proud to cosponsor with him the Act for Better Child Care.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is no doubt a surprise to many in this body that I am a cosponsor of the Act for Better Child Care. I was one of the leading critics of this legislation during the last Congress and expressed my concerns about it every chance I got and in just about every medium. I still have serious reservations about this bill, but I think the time has passed for the sponsors of various child care bills—all of whom have many worthwhile ideas—to stand in their respective corners trying to avoid compromise.

I am sure every Member of the Senate knows how important this issue is to millions of American families. For this reason, I believe we must examine every proposal intended to assist families in finding safe, affordable child care.

I am eager to put partisanship behind us and to roll up my sleeves with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to develop effective legislation; and, it is time to work with President Bush, who has put forward some of his own ideas on this issue which deserve our serious consideration.

I have cosponsored the Act for Better Child Care, or the ABC bill as it has become known, not because I think it is the perfect solution, but rather because Senators DODD and MIKULSKI and I worked long and hard last fall to come up with a bipartisan compromise on child care. Time in the 100th Congress ran out, and it became clear that such a compromise would not be possible in 1988. Many changes were made, however, and I want to thank Senator DODD for his willingness to pick up in the 101st Congress at the place where we left off. While I believe other amendments will be needed before this bill can be enacted, I am cosponsoring this bill because it symbolizes the kind of bipartisan cooperation that I believe is essential.

Many significant issues remain. Perhaps the most divise is the matter of Federal standards. The ABC bill being introduced today contains provisions which mitigate some of the expected problems associated with the development and implementation of Federal standards, and I do not want to belittle the progress we have made on this troublesome aspect of the bill.

The fact remains, however, that the bill still mandates Federal standards. Not only does the concept of a Federal entity making rules which govern the provision of child care in Cedar City or American Fork, UT, still bother me, but also the fact that Federal standards in any form may have unintended adverse results. Stringent Federal standards may actually lead to an increase in child care costs, the actual reduction of licensed child care slots, and the movement of otherwise qualified and often preferred family based providers to the underground economy. I have serious reservations about imposing Federal standards, particularly when a standard may not be revised by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under a normal rulemaking procedure if it is found to be unworkable. I hope that the discussions on this matter can continue, and that other Senators will share their suggestions for an ultimate solution to the problem of ensuring safe child care without unnecessarily hamstringing States, providers, and parents.

The question also remains as to whether subsidies should go directly to the eligible family in the form of tax breaks or through a middleman such as the State government or a State-selected contractor. There is no question that every family wants freedom of choice among available child care options; and we should never make the mistake of assuming that a family is less interested in exercising parental discretion just because it has a lower income.

We must also carefully evaluate the efficacy of the requirements we impose on State governments from several perspectives. Does the legislation permit sufficient flexibility? Will Federal legislation enhance or hinder a State's own initiatives in child care? Will it transfer too many resources from services to enforcement? Will each State be able to adapt this program to meet the specific needs of its citizens? Does it recognize the efforts States have already made? These questions must be addressed in the course of our debate on child care legislation.

There must also be incentives for private sector involvement in child care. The Federal Government cannot hope to solve a problem of such magnitude by itself. In fact, I believe the ultimate solution will come from the business and nonprofit members of our communities. While the Federal Government may act as a catalyst and may provide some urgently needed financial assistance, the private sector must be encouraged to step up their participation in child care. Federal overregulation is one sure way to stifle such initiative.

In short, I believe the ABC bill Senator DODD has introduced merits further debate along with other proposals introduced by other Senators, including the bill I will reintroduce with Congresswoman NANCY JOHNSON, and the valuable ideas put forward by President Bush. I salute Senator

DODD's continuing commitment to enacting sound, bipartisan child care legislation, and I look forward to working with him, Senator MIKULSKI, Senator KENNEDY, and members of the Labor and Human Resources Committee during the 101st Congress from both sides of the aisle.

We have taken some positive steps forward. It is only a short distance further to achieving our goal of good legislation that will truly provide American families with safe, affordable child care.

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I join my distinguished colleagues Senators DODD and HATCH in supporting the Act for Better Child Care Services of 1989. This comprehensive piece of legislation represents an important step toward addressing the Nation's child care dilemma.

We all care about our children. As parents, we nurture and take care of them. As Americans, we look to them as the beginning of a new generation. But we have failed to ensure that they receive the care they so desperately need during the important formative years of their childhood. That shortage of care is what we must begin to address now, in the 101st Congress.

Proper care is vital to the development of our children. Studies such as the Perry Preschool Program and the Brookline early education project have shown that early childhood programs can give children, especially those from low-income families, the advantages they need to avoid learning and behavioral difficulties later in life. We recognized this fact when we established the Head Start Program for low-income children. But the Head Start Program was not designed to be and was never meant to be a comprehensive child care delivery system.

Today, with more women and single parents than ever in the labor force, there is a critical child care shortage. Let's look at the facts. Fifty-seven percent, or 26.3 million, of all children under age 12 have mothers who are employed. Almost half of these children are under age 5. Finding any steady day care at all—let alone quality day care—for these children is next to impossible for most families. Existing family and day care centers simply do not have the resources to take on all these children. Even if the resources were available, most low-income parents would be unable to budget one-third of their wages for child care.

If parents are lucky enough to find child care and able to afford it, there is still one more problem: How can they be sure it is good child care? The answer is, they can't. On average, child care staffers fall into the lowest 10 percent of U.S. wage earners scale. They make less than parking lot attendants. In other words, we pay people more to watch our cars than our children.

These low salaries lead to high turnover among child care providers. That does not provide much peace of mind for parents, or for their employers. Lack of child care has been recognized as one of the main causes of employee absenteeism.

We simply do not have a national child care system. What we have instead is a combination of day care centers run by underpaid care providers with few resources, and informal family or sitter in-home care. When these arrangements fall through, both children and parents suffer the consequences.

Mr. President, our children deserve more than this. I have joined as a cosponsor of this bill because I believe that it is a first step toward the development of a viable system. This is an issue in which I have been involved over the past two decades, and I have been a supporter of the ABC bill since its introduction in November of 1987. At the same time, I recognize and welcome the fact that other child care proposals have been and will be discussed. I have been especially pleased and encouraged to hear in the past few months President Bush's comments about the problems parents face in obtaining child care. It is my understanding that he intends to put forth his own proposal, and I am looking forward to working with him on this issue. As a child care advocate and a sponsor of ABC, I believe that a bipartisan, joint effort between Congress and the President will solve this problem for the benefit of our children, and our country's future.●

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join as an original cosponsor of S. 5, the proposed Act for Better Child Care Services of 1989 [ABC]. This measure is designed to increase the availability of child care by providing grants to States to help broaden the number and variety of child care services, to help make child care more affordable by providing new funds to subsidize services for low income working families, and to help promote quality care by providing funding for the States to improve child care standards and enforcement mechanisms, training, and technical assistance, and resource and referral programs.

The lack of adequate child care is currently one of the most serious problems facing millions of families, and it serves as a major impediment to the attainment of economic security for countless numbers of women, children, and families in this country. Today, almost two-thirds of all mothers with school age children work outside the home. Tremendous demographic changes have taken place in our society during the last decade. Yet, public policies have simply not kept pace with an evolving work force and the changing need of American families. It is imperative that we respond now to these changes through a carefully designed, long-range initiative to help meet the ever increasing demand for quality, affordable child care.

Mr. President, the dimensions of the child care crisis in this country are enormous. It will take the combined efforts of many segments of our society to meet this challenge. On the Federal level, we must provide leadership in developing responsive public policies to support families. Further, we must encourage State and local governmental entities, as well as employers and community organizations, to work together to help resolve this crisis.

The legislative initiative being introduced today represents the kind of collaborative effort demanded by the enormity of the problem. An alliance of a broad range of national organizations, the Alliance for Better Child Care [ABC], including child advocacy groups, women's organizations, religious groups, labor organizations, and a variety of other organizations, have worked together with the sponsors of this measure to develop this legislation, which was initially introduced in November 1987. Although more than 40 Members of the Senate cosponsored this bill in the last Congress, we were not able to complete final action before the adjournment of the 100th Congress.

Mr. President, I strongly support the measure being introduced today. This comprehensive response to our national child care problem promises to provide a sound and realistic approach to the growing need of American families for high quality, yet affordable, child care. I am very hopeful that the 101st Congress will complete the long-overdue action on a comprehensive child care initiative. It is nearly two decades since Congress passed the 1971 comprehensive child development bill—a bill vetoed by former President Nixon. The need for this legislation has grown dramatically in the intervening years. We cannot continue to ignore the widespread need for a comprehensive approach to the child care crisis in this Nation.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, as chairman of the Child and Human Development Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources during the 95th and 96th Congresses and as a member of its predecessor, the Subcommittee on Children and Youth, since its creation in the 92d Congress, I have consistently worked to protect and promote the well-being of America's children and families. Because the lack of affordable child care has been and remains one of the most pressing problems facing America's families, throughout my service in the Senate I have been deeply involved in and committed to issues relating to child care services for working parents.

In past Congresses, I have sponsored and cosponsored comprehensive child care measures, ranging from the 1971 child care legislation vetoed by former President Nixon to comprehensive child care legislation, which I have introduced in the Senate since 1979. In addition, I have sponsored and cosponsored child care measures focused upon specific areas of child care, such as improving child care licensing and monitoring programs and the legislation enacted in the 100th Congress promoting the establishment of child care programs in Veterans' Administration facilities. Although we have made some progress in recent years in enacting small measures dealing with child care needs, this patchwork, incremental approach has fallen far short of what is truly necessary if we are to deal effectively with meeting the child care needs of our Nation's working families.

Today's measure represents an effort to deal with this problem in a comprehensive, coordinated fashion. It is a long-overdue step that can and must be taken.

FORMATION OF THE ALLIANCE FOR BETTER CHILD CARE

Mr. President, I want to comment briefly on the development of the Alliance for Better Child Care [ABC] and the proposed Act for Better Child Care Services. As I indicated at the outset, this legislation was developed with the collaboration of a broad range of organizations participating in the Alliance for Better Child Care.

It is particularly gratifying for me to see the emergence of this broad-based coalition of organizations committed to working toward achieving a comprehensive, well-designed approach on the Federal level to address the child care crisis. In 1986, I wrote to the head sof many of the national organziations involved in issues relating to child care urging that they joint together to develop a comprehensive child care initiative. I believed then, as I do now, that the time is ripe for such an initiative. The idea was enthusiastically endorsed, and the formation of the Alliance for Better Child Care quickly followed.

Since then, my staff has worked closely with members of the alliance and the excellent staff of the principal sponsor, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] who chairs the Subcomittee of Labor and Human Resources Committee which has jurisdiction over child care legislation, in developing and refining the legislation which is being introduced today. The drafts of the proposed legislation have been widely circulated, and numerous meetings were held both in Washington and in the field with child care experts, parents, and concerned individuals so that the very best ideas and proposals could be incorporated into this legislation. The bill has continuously been refined and modified to reflect the viewpoints and perspectives of a wide array of interests. This measure represents the consensus of numerous individuals and organizations who have been involved in child care issues at the local, State, and national levels. When it is enacted, the Act for Better Child Care Services will move our Nation a major step forward in our efforts to address the child care crisis.

NATIONAL CHILD CARE CRISIS

Mr. President, I have had numerous opportunities to listen directly to parents who constantly struggle with child care problems. During 1986, I held an extensive series of community forums throughout the State of California focused upon the child care crisis in my own State. At these community forums, I met with and heard the concerns of hundreds of Californians regarding the inadequacy of child care services.

Mr. President, it is not an exaggeration to say that what was once a major problem is now a major crisis. During the past 8 years under the Reagan administration, the Nation's inadequate supply of child care has deteriorated even further. At the same time that the Federal Government has reduced its funding for existing child care programs, the number of mothers of young children entering the labor force has continued to grow.

In 1977, when I first began to work on a comprehensive child care proposal, an estimateed 51.7 percent of the mothers of children between the ages of 6 and 17 and 37.6 percent of the mothers of children under age 6 were in the work force. A decade later the numbers have increased to 63.8 percent and 53.1 percent respectively. For 1977 these percentages translated to 22.5 million children between the ages of 6 and 17 and 6.4 million under the age of 6 with mothers in the work force. In 1987, there were 24.7 million children in the older age group and 10.5 million in the under 6 group.

In its recent report, "The Child Care Fact Book 1988," the Children's Defense Fund projects that if current trends continue, two out of three preschool children and four out of five school age children will have mothers in the work force by the year 1995.

FEDERAL CHILD CARE FUNDS DRASTICALLY REDUCED

As the number of children needing care has escalated, resources for child care have been slashed. In 1981, the Social Security Act Title XX Program, the major source of direct financial assistance to child care programs, was reduced by 20 percent for fiscal year 1982 from $3.1 to $2.4 billion, and the $200 million earmark for child care was eliminated. The estimates were at that time that some 150,000 families would lose their child care assistance under title XX as a result of those first-year Reagan cuts. Those projections have been substantiated by reports on how child care programs in various States have actually been hurt by the funding cutbacks. The Children's Defense Fund's recent report cited the following troubling statistics: In fiscal year 1988, 26 States spent less for title XX child care than in fiscal year 1981. Furthermore, 23 States are actually serving fewer children now than in 1981.

Although over the past several years Congress has been able to restore some funds to title XX, following the huge cut in 1981, the fiscal year 1988 funding level of $2.7 billion remained $200 million below the fiscal year 1981 level of $2.9. In real terms, adjusted for inflation, Federal funding for title XX is now only about 72 percent of the 1981 level and about 52 percent of the 1977 level. Given the enormous increase in the need for child care assistance for low-income families, the decrease in support for these services is inexplicable as a matter of public policy.

CALIFORNIA CHILD CARE NEEDS

Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, during 1986, I conducted an extensive series of community meetings about the child care crisis in California. I held 11 of these meetings specifically focused on child care issues. The number of people attending ranged from 75 to 100 to several hundred at some of these forums. Parents, child care providers, community workers, business and civic leaders, and just concerned citizens participated in these meetings.

Mr. President, California has long been recognized as a leader in the area of child care. Indeed, after World War II, when the federally funded child care programs established under the Lanham Act were shut down throughout the Nation, the State of California took over the funding of the California programs, thereby establishing a long history and tradition of support for child care in California.

Both the public and private sectors in California have contributed to building child care resources. California enjoys a unique and extensive system of child care resource and referral agencies, providing in each of the State's 58 counties a central source of information on existing child care services and resources and technical assistance to help develop new services.

Yet, by every measure, child care needs are not being met in my State. In many areas and for many children and families, the lack of child care services constitutes a crisis which threatens economic survival. The current resources fall well below the existing need for child care services. In the two areas of infant care and extended child care for school age children, the problems are particularly acute. Waiting lists are commonplace. By some estimates, 1 million more children need child care than can be accommodated by licensed facilities. By 1995, it has been projected that 200,000 more California children will need child care. My State, like the rest of the Nation, has simply not been able to keep pace with the escalating demand for services.

ECONOMIC IMPLICATIONS OF CHILD CARE CRISIS

Mr. President, as serious as the problems are in the supply of safe, affordable child care today, there is little doubt that the need will grow in the decade ahead.

It is important to understand that mothers are in the work force for one major reason: economic necessity. Two-thirds of the women in the work force are either sole providers or have husbands who earn less than $15,000. In 1983, 25 percent of the married women in the work force had husbands whose earnings were less than $10,000; 50 percent under $20,000, and nearly 80 percent less than $30,000. The earnings of these women play a critical role in the economic well-being of their families. For the one in six American families headed by a woman, of course, her earnings are a matter of simple survival.

The cost of child care is beyond the reach of many families. A recent study by the League of Women Voters of California found that most Californians are paying between $3,000 and $4,200 a year for full-time care of a preschool child. Full-time care for two preschool children costs between $7,200 and $8,200 a year. That's a staggering amount for any family and especially for a low-income family. Two parents working full-time at the minimum wage would spend about 30 percent of their income just on child care. A single parent working at the minimum wage would expend a staggering 60 percent of wages on child care. For millions of families, child care costs rank at the top of the family budget, next to food and shelter costs.

Mr. President, although adequate child care is a matter which ought to concern every member of our society—male and female alike—there is little question that the lack of adequate child care has a major and profound impact upon the economic well-being of millions of women and children in this country.

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. President, the legislation we are introducing today attacks the child care crisis from a number of different approaches.

It authorizes the appropriation of $2.5 billion to be distrubuted to the States to help low-income families pay for essential child care services and improve the quality of child care for all families. States receiving these funds must demonstrate their own commitment to helping to meet the child care crisis by providing a 20-percent State match.

The bulk of the funds provided—70 percent—must be used to help families earning less than 100 percent of their State median income to pay for child care. The States must establish sliding fee scales so that famillies on the higher end of the scale will pay more for their share of child care costs than families with less income. As a family's income grows, its contribution to paying for child care costs would also increase. States would be required to give priority for services to those families in greatest need.

States would be encouraged to use some of the funds to maximize existing resources; for example, by requiring that a minimum of 10 percent of the funds be used to extended part-day programs like Head Start and State preschool education programs into full-day programs. The bill also provides that child care reimbursement under this program would be at the market rate for child care in the community and provides for higher reimbursement rates for services to infants and disabled children. In order to maximize parental choices, the bill authorizes the States to utilize a variety of funding mechanisms and types of child care providers, ranging from both nonprofit and profit child care centers to family day care homes.

The States would be allowed to use no more than 8 percent of their grants for administrative costs.

States would be allowed to allocate up to 10 percent of their funding to improve the quality of child care services for all families. This funding would be used to establish and operate child care resource referral programs, to improve the States' monitoring and enforcement of licensing requirements, to provide technical assistance and training to family day care providers and centers, and to ensure adequate compensation for the staff who provide child care services.

The remaining 12 percent of the grant would be used by the States to increase the availability of child care. The States would be authorized to provide grants and low-interest loans to child care providers seeking to establish or expand child care programs. Funding would also be available to assist employers with the start up costs of child care programs, and to help communities establish after-school services and programs.

States would be required to offer training programs for all child care providers. Providers would be required to have at least 40 hours of training over a 2-year period.

The legislation also contains a one-time fiscal year 1990 authorization of $100 million to establish liability risk retention groups. This measure is designed to provide liability insurance to child care providers by helping the States establish shared risk pools.

Finally, States which receive Federal funds under this legislation would be required to meet Federal minimum child care standards. A national advisory committee would be established to develop minimum standards in five key areas: Staff/child ratios, group size, parent involvement, caregiver qualifications, and health and safety. States would be allowed a 4-year period to come into compliance with the new standards. Upon complying with the standards, the State match would drop from 20 percent to 15 percent. After 4-years, States which fail to come into compliance would be ineligible for continued funding under the new act.

Mr. President, these provisions relating to child care standards are particularly important in a time of fiscal restraints and the need for accountability for Federal expenditures. If the Federal Government is going to expend Federal funds on child care services, it needs to be assured that the funds are being utilized for good quality care. The legislation requires that States accepting these funds demonstrate a commitment to monitoring the quality of child care programs. Annual visits to child care centers must be established along with complaint procedures. Parents must be assured the right to visit a program their child is enrolled in at any time.

EXPENDITURE OF FEDERAL RESOURCES

Mr. President, in a decade of fiscal restraints and the need to reduce the mounting Federal deficit, some may question the feasibility of enacting legislation to authorize any new spending programs. Although the sponsors and supporters of the proposed Act for Better Child Care Services have not deluded themselves about the task which lies ahead, the broad support for this initiative, both within and outside Congress, demonstrates a realistic recognition of the need for child care legislation of this scope. The problems which American families face in finding adequate and affordable child care are enormous. They demand a substantial and meaningful response.

Recent public opnion polls demonstrate that the majority of Americans recognize the severity of the child care crisis and its implications for our Nation's work force and economic well-being. A 1987 AFSME poll indicated 71 percent of those surveyed supported increased government resources for child care programs. A 1987 Harris poll found 73 percent of the respondents willing to have their taxes increased to pay for child care. A Martilla and Kiley 1988 poll reported 86 percent agreed that child care was an important issue and 75 percent favored minimum Federal standards for child care.

Mr. President, it is clear that the child care crisis is a problem which cannot be resolved without additional Federal assistance. The Federal Government cannot and should not bear the burden alone. But it can and should play a major role in helping make sure adequate and affordable child care is available for families struggling to stay in the work force and off the welfare rolls.

It is imperative, however, that we succeed in keeping the Federal deficit down so that we can invest the necessary resources in the well-being of children and families. Our Nation must continue to address pressing new social problems. But to do so, we must get our national budget problems resolved, and our national priorities in order. I am committed to major deficit reduction efforts so that our Nation can meet the challenges in child care, education, housing, transportation, and other critical areas that face us in the years to come.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, there is hardly a community in this country which has not experienced a crisis in the area of child care over the past few years. Throughout the country, there are long waiting lists for admission to existing child care programs. Countless parents are forced to make-do with unsatisfactory child care arrangements so that they can continue to work to support their families.

The measure being introduced today addresses the ever-growing need in this country for a comprehensive, coordinated approach to child care. There is simply no question that the demand and need for child care will continue to grow. If we take steps today to design an efficient and cost-effective mechanism for meeting those needs, the ultimate savings will far outweigh the short-term expenditure.

Indeed, child care itself is both a short-term and a long-term investment in the future. Short-term expenditures may be almost immediately offset by increased tax revenues derived from parent earnings and reductions in governmental subsistence and other expenditures necessitated by the effects of lack of adequate child care arrangements. Some longer term social costs, such as juvenile vandalism, delinquency, and child abuse and neglect, may also be reduced by prudent and cost-effective investment in child care today.

Mr. President, I applaud the many individuals and organizations that have provided their insights, guidance, and encouragement in the development and formulation of this legislation. I look forward to working with my colleagues and interested individuals and organizations to see that this comprehensive child care initiative, so sorely needed, is enacted into law.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. BOND, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BURNS, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. WARNER, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. LOTT, Mr. HELMS, and Mr. GARN):

S. 6. A bill to grant the power to the President to reduce appropriated funds within 10 days after the date of enactment of a bill appropriating such funds; to the Committees on the Budget and Governmental Affairs, jointly, pursuant to the order of 8-4-77.

SPENDING ENHANCEMENT CONTROL ACT OF 1989

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today, along with Senator MCCAIN and 12 of my other colleagues, I am introducing a bill to enhance the President's rescission authority. The bill, which we call "The Presidential Spending Control Enhancement Act," increases the President's ability to cut wasteful, special interest spending in appropriations bills.

I would first like to applaud the fine work of Senator MCCAIN on this budget reform bill. It was, in fact, Senator MCCAIN who originally conceived and came forward with this legislation. I have decided to join him on this effort because I share his commitment to enacting this excellent rescission reform bill.

TWO WAYS OF LIMITING SPENDING

Currently, the President has two ways of limiting pork barrel spending. First, he can veto an entire appropriations bill, but all too often this can mean holding up a generally responsible bill for a few items. Or, second, he can use his rescission authority to send Congress a list of budget items he is interested in cutting or eliminating.

The rescission procedure has the advantage of being a far more precise tool for cutting spending than an all or nothing veto of an appropriations bill. But despite its obvious value, the President's rescission authority has recently been all but eliminated by Congress. Although President Reagan was able to obtain congressional approval for almost 70 percent of the dollar value of his requested rescissions in fiscal year 1981 and 1982, Congress approved less than 2 percent of the value of his rescission requests in fiscal years 1983 to 1987.

In the majority of these cases Congress never voted to approve or disapprove the President's rescission request, instead Congress struck down the President's rescission request by simply ignoring it. Our bill would force Congress to either approve or reject the President's rescission request within a 10-day review period.

I believe it is only fair that we require Members of Congress to go on record as either approving or disapproving the President's rescission request. Too often Members of Congress are quick to criticize pork barrel spending, but slow to do anything about it. This bill makes Members put their votes where their mouths are. A reform most Americans will be quick to appreciate.

LINE ITEM VETO POWER

Although many people have viewed enhanced rescission as a substitute for a line item veto, enhanced rescission actually complements, rather than substitutes for a line-item veto. Some critics have argued that a major problem with a line-item veto is that there are great difficulties in determining what is an item. In other words, since spending for specific programs is often allocated in reports attached to appropriations bills, there are often very few specific items to veto in an appropriations bill. Enhanced rescission avoids that problem by allowing the President to define an item when he puts together a rescission request. In this way he can veto spending allocated in the report language, as well as funds contained in the appropriation bill itself. A line-item veto, on the other hand, is the best way of eliminating unwarranted policy provisions, such as the Boland amendment, from appropriations bills.

WHY I AM NOT INTRODUCING A LINE ITEM VETO

While I still support giving the President a line-item veto, I have not cosponsored or introduced a line-item veto bill this year. This is because I believe the Constitution already gives the President the line-item veto power. And, therefore, legislation to provide the President with a line-item veto is probably unnecessary.

CONCLUSION

Both enhanced rescission and the line-item veto will give the President additional control over spending and restore some of the checks and balances that were eliminated by the 1974 Budget Act. With the enactment of enhanced rescission legislation, Congress will likely sharply cut back on their pork knowing that their pet projects could easily be pulled out of a hidden corner in an appropriations bill and placed in a rescission measure for all Americans to see. As a result, enhanced rescission will save the country billions of dollars and force the Congress to end its reputation for fiscal irresponsibility and wasteful special interest spending.

I ask for unanimous consent that the entire bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Spending Enhancement Control Act of 1989"

SEC. 2. ENHANCEMENT OF SPENDING CONTROL BY THE PRESIDENT.

The Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE XI—LIMITED, EXPANDED RESCISSION OF APPROPRIATIONS BUDGET AUTHORITY

"PART A—LIMITED, EXPANDED RESCISSION OF APPROPRIATIONS BUDGET AUTHORITY

"LIMITED, EXPANDED RESCISSION OF APPROPRIATIONS BUDGET AUTHORITY

"SEC. 1101. (a) EXPANDED AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding the provisions of title X and subject to the provisions of part B, the President may rescind all or part of any budget authority provided in an appropriations bill, if the President notifies the Congress of such rescission by a special message not later than 10 calendar days (not including Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays) after the date of enactment of the bill providing such budget authority. If an appropriations bill includes more than one of the regular 13 appropriations bills, the President shall send a separate message for each regular appropriations bill.

"(b) RESCISSION EFFECTIVE UNLESS DISAPPROVED.—(1) Any amount of budget authority rescinded under this title as set forth in such special message shall be deemed canceled unless, within the prescribed 10-day review period, the Congress has, under part B, completed action on an appropriations rescission disapproval bill making available all or part of the amount rescinded.

"(2) If a special message is transmitted by the President under this section during any Congress and the last session of such Congress adjourns sine die before the expiration of the Congressional 10 day review period (or a special message is so transmitted after the last session of the Congress adjourns sine die), the rescission shall be effective 10 days after the date the message is transmitted, notwithstanding the adjournment of Congress. The message shall be deemed to have been retransmitted on the first day of the succeeding Congress and the ten-day review period referred to in section 1102(2) and in section 1111 (with respect to such message) shall run beginning after such first day.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1102. For purposes of this title—

"(1) the term 'Comptroller General' means the Comptroller General of the United States; and

"(2) the term 'appropriations rescission disapproval bill' means a bill or joint resolution which only disapproves a rescission of appropriations budget authority, in whole or in part, rescinded in a special message transmitted by the President under section 1101, and upon which the Congress completes action before the end of a period of 10 calendar days (not including Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays) of the Congress after the date on which the President's message is received by the Congress. This ten-day period shall be considered the ten-day review period.

"PART B—CONGRESSIONAL CONSIDERATION OF LIMITED, EXPANDED RESCISSIONS

"PRESIDENTIAL SPECIAL MESSAGE

"SEC. 1111. (a) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—Whenever the President rescinds any budget authority as provided in section 1101, the President shall transmit to both Houses of Congress a special message specifying—

"(1) the amount of budget authority rescinded;

"(2) any account, department, or establishment of the Government to which such budget authority is available for obligation, and the specific project or governmental functions involved;

"(3) the reasons why the budget authority is being rescinded;

"(4) to the maximum extent practical, the estimated fiscal, economic, and budgetary effect of the rescission; and

"(5) all facts, circumstances, and considerations relating to or bearing upon the rescission and the decision to effect the rescission, and the maximum extent practicable, the estimated effect of the rescission upon the objects, purposes, and programs for which the budget authority is provided.

"TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGES; PUBLICATION

"SEC. 1112. (a) DELIVERY TO HOUSE AND SENATE.—Each special message transmitted under section 1101 shall be transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate on the same day, and shall be delivered to the Clerk of the House of Representatives if the House is not in session, and to the Secretary of the Senate if the Senate is not in session. Each special message so transmitted shall be referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Each such message shall be printed as a document of each House.

"(b) DELIVERY TO COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—A copy of each special message transmitted under section 1101 shall be transmitted to the Comptroller General on the same day it is transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate. In order to assist the Congress in the exercise of its functions under section 1111, the Comptroller General shall review each such message and inform the House of Representatives and the Senate as promptly as practical the facts surrounding the rescission of budget authority (including the probable effects thereof).

"(c) PRINTING IN FEDERAL REGISTER.—Any special message transmitted under section 1101 shall be printed in the first issue of the Federal Register published after such transmittal.

"PROCEDURE IN SENATE

"SEC. 1113. (a) REFERRAL.—Any appropriations rescission disapproval bill introduced with respect to a special message shall be referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives or the Senate, as the case may be.

"(b) FLOOR CONSIDERATION IN THE SENATE.—

"(1) Debate in the Senate on any appropriations rescission disapproval bill, and all amendments thereto and debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

"(2) Debate in the Senate on any amendment to an appropriations rescission disapproval bill shall be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill. Debate on any amendment to an amendment to such a bill, and debate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with such a bill shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill, except that in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such amendment, motion, or appeal, the time in opposition thereto, shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any amendment, debatable motion, or appeal.

"(3) A motion to further limit debate is not debatable. A motion to recommit (except a motion to recommit with instructions to report back within a specified number of days, not to exceed 1, not counting any day on which the Senate is not in session) is not in order.

"(4) The conference report on any appropriations rescission disapproval bill shall be in order in the Senate at any time after the first day (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) following the day on which such a conference report is available to Members of the Senate. A motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report may be made even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to.

"(5) During the consideration of the Senate of the conference report on any appropriations rescission disapproval bill, debate shall be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and minority leader or their designees. Debate on any debatable motion or appeal related to the conference report shall be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the conference report.

"(6) Should the conference report be defeated, debate on any request for a new conference and the appointment of conferees shall be limited to one hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the manager of the conference report and the majority leader or his designee, and should any motion be made to instruct the conferees before the conferees are named, debate on such motion shall be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the conference report. Debate on any amendment to any such instructions shall be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided between and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the conference report. In all cases when the manager of the conference report is in favor of any motion, appeal, or amendment, the time in opposition shall be under the control of the minority leader or his designee.

"(7) In any case in which there are amendments in disagreement, time on each amendment shall be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the manager of the conference report and the minority leader or his designee.

"(c) POINT OF ORDER.—(1) It shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any appropriations rescission disapproval bill that relates to any matter other than the rescission of budget authority transmitted by the President under section 1101.

"(2) It shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any amendment to an appropriations rescission disapproval bill that is not germane to that bill.

"(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) may be waived or suspended in the Senate and the House of Representatives only by a vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn.".

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, each Senator has personal priorities for this session of Congress—proposals that we have worked on between sessions of Congress and which we think are important for the betterment of our country. I am no exception. I have a set of proposals I will be advocating this year that range from armed services issues, to cleaning up hazardous waste sites, to expanding the fight against consumer fraud, to trying to promote economic growth, and ensure basic human needs on our Nation's Indian reservations.

We would all rather focus on our personal agendas, because we feel good when we get them passed. It is also easier and more fun than dealing effectively with the Federal budget deficit—which is without question our No. 1 national domestic problem.

Mr. President, today is the first day Senators may introduce bills in this Congress, and—because I believe we need to focus on the issues of deficit reduction and budget reform—my first bill on this first day is designed to help fight our first and foremost domestic problem—the deficit. The bill is a new, more effective, approach to providing the President with a line item veto over our spending bills. I am very pleased to be joined in this effort by my good friend, the minority leader who has agreed to include this bill as one of our priority legislative goals for this Congress. I am also pleased to be joined by Senators McCONNELL, BOND, SYMMS, BOSCHWITZ, KASTEN, DANFORTH, WALLOP, BURNS, WARNER, GARN, and LOTT.

I know this won't cure all our budget ills. But, until we act more responsibily, I can see no justification for not increasing the President's ability to stop spending taxpayer dollars on low priority or wasteful programs. I would like briefly to describe the "Spending Control Enhancement Act," and explain its approch.

In essense, this measure would provide the President with a constitutional and viable line item veto. It would allow the President to rescind funding for programs he believes are wasteful. It gives him 10 days after enactment of an appropriations bill in which to make known to Congress which funds he intends to rescind, whether he intends to rescind part or all of the funds for a given program, and his justifications for doing so.

The bill would also give the Congress a specific format for response. If Congress wants to restore part or all of the funds the President proposes not to spend, Congress must adopt a resolution of disapproval for each rescission message within 10 days of receiving notice from the President. Congress could either adopt the President's package of cuts, disapprove the whole package, or vote to restore only part of the spending it had initially approved. Congress would not be at liberty to add nongermane matter to the resolution of disapproval—it would be required to address only the spending issues raised by the President's message. If Congress did disagree with the President on his spending cuts, its resolution of disapproval would then be sent to the President for his consideration.

This process would provide the President and Congress with a second chance to purge the Federal budget of excessive spending. It would also force the Congress to negotiate more seriously with the President before passing appropriations bill. Now all we do is use the appropriations bills as vehicles to which to add pet projects—knowing that in many cases the President, faced with a "take it or leave it" omnibus spending package, must take it. The Spending Control Enhancement Act would end that imbalance and give the President the opportunity to weed out these unnecessary and inappropriate items from the appropriations bills.

As everyone in this Chamber knows, various proposals to provide the President with this kind of tool have been made repeatedly over our history, dating back at least to President Grant's day. Most of those proposals have focused on amending the Constitution, with a provision specifically giving the President power over the Federal budget. Such a provision was contained in the Confederacy's Constitution, an example followed by 43 States.

We need to be able to exercise this tool immediately, however, and the constitutional amendment approach has many drawbacks. It is complicated and very time consuming. Furthermore, a constitutional amendment is not amenable to fine tuning or adjustment if proven inadequate or wrongly written.

The altenative to a contitutional amendment is, of course, a statute. Statutory approaches have been proposed before too, but they have generally been unacceptable because their constitutionality has been suspect or because they included procedures that were too troubling to be acceptable.

Both Houses of Congress each, at least once, have attempted enacting a statutory line item veto. The House adopted a rather draconian measure in 1938 but it was dropped in conference.

The Senate debated a statutory line item veto in 1985 under the guidance of the former Senator from Georgia, Mr. Mattingly. His measure would have required the enrolling clerk to separate each section of an appropriations bill into a separate bill before being sent to the President for approval. The President could thus exercise a line item veto by vetoing any of these bills.

While its intent was good, the format of the measure had many problems. It was exceedingly cumbersome. It would not have given the President a precise means of cutting wasteful spending. It would not have allowed the President to reduce the level of funding for programs he felt Congress had funded too generously—he would be faced only with the choice of total rejection or total acceptance of the spending amount Congress provided for every item. Moreover, it contained no systematic mechanism for Congress to respond expediently and easily. Finally, it would have unduly politicized the Office of the Enrolling Clerk by conferring upon it unprecedented power to play with bills after Congress had acted on them.

Our proposal for a line item veto, on the other hand, would not further complicate the budget process nor raise concerns about unconstitutionality. Its stiff proscriptions and the time limit governing the resolution of disapproval will not encumber the Congress with yet another complex layer in the budget process, but would give Congress another opportunity to examine its decisions up close.

In fact, this line item veto is simply an expansion of the rescission authority the President already has, and it is based on a proposal advocated by the House of Representatives during consideration of the Budget Act reform in 1974. During this debate the House advocated requiring the Congress to act in order to overturn Presidential rescissions, but in compromising with the Senate during conference agreed that rescissions would only become effective if affirmed by Congress. Obviously the compromise didn't work, and we need to change it.

My proposal also does not involve transferring authority over spending decisions to the President nor does it mean that Congress is abdicating any of its rightful power of the purse. It is simply an added protection against wasteful spending during a time when appropriations bills are complex and multifold, and hardly free of unnecessary spending.

The President who exercises this second chance, "line item" veto will have cause to exercise it constructively instead of punitively or politically. If he does not, Congress can change or repeal it.

Another advantage of my proposal has is that it obviates the problem of limiting the President to addressing only line items, which is virtually useless in the face of lump sum appropriations bills. Under this proposal, the President could identify specific items for which he would like to reduce or cancel budget authority. In effect, this makes the Spending Control Enhancement Act a much more precise deficit reduction tool.

Finally, this proposal will place an additional restraint on congressional spending decisions because ultimately, it will discourage the provision of pork barrel projects in appropriations bills. Congress will be reluctant to overturn rescissions for wasteful programs and, at the same time, may be less inclined to fund them for fear that the President will identify them publicly.,

The implementation of this measure alone will clearly not eliminate our budget woes, but it is a major, positive step in the right direction. It is also a good faith effort toward ensuring that the American taxpayers' money is wisely spent. We owe that to the taxpayers. We can not subject them again to headlines such as we saw a year ago in the wake of the continuing resolution we adopted in December of 1987. Those headlines listed myriad pork barrel projects ranging from $500,000 for a highway bypass in Michigan to $8.5 million for high-technology anticancer equipment in California to $350,000 to clean up Mount Rushmore. We were so embarassed by the media's disclosures of our own profligacy that we were compelled to rescind money for a school in France—a token action.

Mr. President, this idea is neither new nor radical. It is a simple and straightforward step in disciplining a dismally disjointed budget process, and one we should adopt as soon as we can.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. BOND, Mr. BURNS, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. RUDMAN, and Mr. CHAFEE):

S. 7. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to further restrict contributions to candidates by multicandidate political committees, require full disclosure of attempts to influence Federal elections through soft money and independent expenditures, correct inequities resulting from personal financing of campaigns, strengthen the role of political parties, and contain the cost of political campaigns; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN REFORM ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, each Senator who served during the 100th Congress became familiar with the issue of campaign finance reform. Time and time again we voted on this issue, but, over the course of a record 9 cloture votes, we saw little movement on either side.

BIPARTISAN CONCERNS

Mr. President, we gained a lot from these discussions. We learned that Members from both parties are concerned about the growing perception that Members of Congress are "bought and paid for" by PAC's and special interests. Both parties are concerned about rising campaign costs, and both are concerned about declining voter turnout.

The debate generated by S. 2, the Democrats' bill, and S. 1672, the 1987 Republican bill, and other proposals has enabled us to identify areas where there is general bipartisan agreement about the need for reform and the kinds of solutions that are appropriate.

Tightening restrictions on independent expenditures and bundling and increasing disclosure requirements on so-called soft money expenses are examples of areas where we have reached consensus. But, this issue is fundamentally partisan because it affects how candidates are elected.

REPUBLICAN CONCERNS

It is no secret that the Democratic Party holds the majority in both Houses of Congress. It follows that proposals favoring incumbents tend to favor the Democrats. As Republicans serving in the minority, our objections to the current system and to most of the Democratic proposals are that they tend to favor incumbents.

A REPUBLICAN ALTERNATIVE

In the past, some have suggested that, in opposing S. 2 and other Democratic proposals for reform, Republicans were acting as obstructionists—that we were critics rather than participants in the process. My response to those critics is look at the record.

Senator Barry Goldwater worked with Senator BOREN on the original campaign finance reform bill that began this whole process. The Republican bill I introduced in 1987 contained an outline for real reform—not incumbent protection. Over the past 2 years, Senator MCCONNELL, Senator PACKWOOD, Senator STEVENS, and others, have introduced reform initiatives that have changed the framework of the debate.

S. 7

Like earlier Republican proposals, the bill that Senator STEVENS, Senator MCCONNELL, and I are introducing today is designed to bring the individual back into the process. We believe that it is the main street American—not the Wall Street executive, the labor union boss, or the PAC director—who should ultimately have the influence in the electoral process.

The declining voter turnout we have witnessed over the past few elections is evidence of growing public disillusionment with the current system. I believe that the best way to promote voter participation is to encourage direct contact between candidates and voters.

The Dole-Stevens-McConnell bill is designed to do just that.

MAJOR PROVISIONS

This legislation contains a number of provisions from earlier bills, but on the tough issues it goes much further. Like the 1987 Dole bill, S. 7 reduces PAC contributions, adjusts individual contributions, imposes strict disclosure rules on soft money expenditures, tightens restrictions on independent expenditures, and closes the millionaire's loophole.

But, there are some important differences between the provisions in this bill and those we have seen in the past, and there are some additional provisions which we have included to make this a more comprehensive proposal.

PACS

Last year, I cosponsored Senator MCCONNELL's bill that eliminated PAC contributions to candidates altogether. The Republican bill, which I introduced in 1987, decreased the maximum contribution a PAC could give to a candidate from $5,000 to $3,000 per election.

In addition to further reducing PAC limits, this legislation takes control of the purse strings away from the PAC director and gives it back to the individual contributor.

If S. 7 were enacted, the maximum PAC contribution would drop from $5,000 to $1,000 per candidate per election. In addition, individual PAC contributors would be allowed to earmark their contributions to specific candidates or parties, giving them greater influence over where their money actually goes.

INDIVIDUAL CONTRIBUTIONS

The $1,000 contribution limit for individuals was first enacted in 1971. I supported the idea of contribution limits then, and I support them now. But, I think some adjustment should be made which puts these limits more in line with original congressional intent.

Inflation is an obvious consideration. There is no doubt that $1,000 in 1988 does not pack the same punch as $1,000 did in 1971. According to the Consumer Price Index at the Bureau of Labor Statistics—U.S. Department of Labor—$2,940 in November 1988 had the same purchasing power as $1,000 did in November 1971. Because campaign costs have been rising more quickly than inflation over this period, one could argue that $1,000 is worth even less to a 1988 campaign.

It is time to reexamine the current limits. Our bill would increase the individual contribution limit from $1,000 to $2,000. Keep in mind, that this is only a partial—51-percent inflation adjustment, but it does recognize the dramatic increase in campaign costs that has occurred over the past 18 years.

The combination of this increase and the reduction in the pac contribution limits should shift the focus away from the special interests toward individual voters. In my view, that's the kind of change that is necessary for real reform.

BROADCAST DISCOUNT

Everyone knows that campaign costs are on the rise. A study completed in June 1988, indicated that the total cost of House and Senate campaigns more than doubled between 1978 and 1986. The lion's share of this increase is directly attributable to television advertising.

Over the past 8 years, television advertising costs more than tripled, making these costs the largest single component in most campaign budgets. Television advertising alone eats up more than one-half of all the money spent in a campaign.

In 1971, Congress passed a bill that was designed to guarantee candidates the lowest rate available for television advertising. However, broadcasters have changed the way they sell advertising time so dramatically that the 1971 law has become basically irrelevant.

Last year, Senator MCCONNELL introduced the Campaign Cost Reduction Act, S. 2657, which was designed to modify current law to reflect the intent of the original broadcast discount provision. Making these changes will serve the added purpose of helping candidates contain soaring campaign costs.

In my view, Senator MCCONNELL's bill makes a lot of sense. That's why we made it part of S. 7.

MILLIONAIRE'S LOOPHOLE

The explosion in campaign costs has also affected the composition of the House and the Senate. In recent years, both have turned into so-called millionaire's clubs. Wealthy candidates who can freely spend large sums of their personal money on their own campaigns have an advantage because they can fend off otherwise qualified candidates who lacks that kind of personal wealth.

We have tried to come up with a way to discourage self-financed campaigns.

Earlier Republican bills which placed absolute limits on what individual candidates could contribute to their own elections clearly had constitutional problems. So, now we are trying a different approach.

Under the Congressional Campaign Reform Act, congressional candidates would be required to declare their intent to spend or loan over $250,000 of their personal funds in the race at the same time that they file for candidacy. If a candidate chooses to spend more than this amount, the individual contribution limit for his or her opponent would increase from $2,000 to $10,000.

PUBLIC DISCLOSURE

Increasing public disclosure of all receipts and expenditures that affect an election is an essential part of this package. It seems to me that increasing accountability for all campaign-related expenses, whether they are independent expenditures, or so-called soft money contributions by a corporation, a PAC or a labor union, is fundamental to the integrity of the system.

These requirements have been part of the Republican approach to this issue since the beginning, and I think this is one area where both parties now agree.

STRENGTHENING THE PARTIES

As the final part of our reform package, we have included some new ideas that are designed to strengthen the role of the political parties in federal elections, a change advocated by a number of neutral, academic observers who study our political system.

S. 7 raises the cap on the amount of money parties can give to candidates, giving candidates an opportunity to spend more time discussing the issues with constituents and less time raising money.

The simple fact is that campaign costs are on the rise. With this in mind, insulating candidates from some of the rigors of fundraising by providing a large contribution from one source without any begging or pleading is a reasonable approach.

THE PROBLEM WITH THE DEMOCRAT'S PROPOSAL

The Democrats complain that there is too much money in the political system, and if you agree with their argument, the campaign spending limits they have proposed seem reasonable.

But, if you take a closer look and think about how spending limits would limit a challenger, you will see that spending caps overwhelmingly favor incumbents.

THE ELECTION RETURNS

Although we did have a certain amount of turnover here in the Senate, incumbents won a solid majority of the elections. Now, it may be that these returns reflect public support for the actions of the 100th Congress, or the inability of both parties to recruit qualified candidates, or the inability of challengers to mount serious campaigns.

But, the numbers favoring incumbents in the U.S. House of Representatives are staggering. Of the 410 U.S. Representatives who sought reelection last year, only 8 were defeated. In other words, more than 98 percent of all House incumbents seeking reelection successfully retained their seats. Of those eight House Members who were defeated, three were under indictment, and one was actually convicted. Now, that's job security.

Last December, President Reagan said, "with a 98 percent rate of reelection, there is less turnover in the House [of Representatives] than in the Supreme Soviet." I think Ronald Reagan raised a valid point. How can Government be responsive when incumbents have a virtual lock on the political process?

It is time to face the facts.

INCUMBENT ADVANTAGES

Incumbents already enjoy a number of tangible benefits that are not available to challengers. In 1988, the average U.S. Representative spent roughly $410,000 on personal professional staff. In the Senate, 1988 personal staff budgets ranged from $695,000 to $1.4 million, depending on State population.

Franking privileges are another bonus. In election years, franked mail pours out of congressional offices. Between 1987 and 1988 congressional use of franked mail jumped from $63.6 to $113.4 million, a 78.3-percent increase. Other incumbent advantages include access to free media coverage and relatively high name recognition.

In my view, a challenger must at least have an opportunity to offset these advantages. Spending limits would take this opportunity away. If we are really concerned about money tainting the system, we ought to focus on the source of campaign funds, not the amount of money a candidate receives.

ENSURING THAT CHALLENGERS HAVE ACCESS

Although I am a Republican who insists on a two-party system, my interest is not simply a partisan one.

I believe that ensuring access to the electoral process is a fundamental part of democracy. The bottom line is that if our system of government is going to work, challengers must have an opportunity to compete for elected office.

Just as U.S. businesses want a level playing field in the international marketplace, we want a level playing field in the political arena. Our basic philosophy is: Give challengers access and let the people decide.

In my view, that's what the Founding Fathers envisioned when they wrote the Constitution, and that's what democracy is all about.

CONCLUSION

I ask my colleagues to look at this package carefully. In my view, it contains all of the elements for real reform.

It directly addresses the issue of influence by the special interests;

It encourages candidates to focus their attention on individual voters;

It tries to contain campaign costs, while ensuring that challengers have a chance to compete in the political arena; and

It places limits on independent expenditures, "bundling" and "soft money" contributions and tightens disclosure requirements on those that are allowed.

The bottom line is that the Congressional Campaign Reform Act of 1989 is fair to both political parties, to incumbents and challengers alike.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this important piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 7

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Congressional Campaign Reform Act of 1989".

RESTRICTIONS ON POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

SEC. 2. (a) Section 315(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000".

(b) Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, each multicandidate political committee and separate regulated funds established pursuant to the provisions of this Act shall—

"(1) provide a method so that each person contributing to such committee or fund may specify to which Federal candidate or candidates or which national political party organization or organizations such contribution is being made; and

"(2) provide each contributor with a list of the names and addresses of the authorized committee of every candidate for Federal office and for each national political party organization.".

LIMITATIONS ON INDIVIDUAL CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 3. Section 315(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(1)(A)) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000"

FULL DISCLOSURE OF ELECTION-RELATED EXPENDITURES

SEC. 4. Section 301(9)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(9)(B)) is amended—

(1) in clause (ii) by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that any payment, services, or other benefit furnished or otherwise made available by a corporation or by a labor organization directly attributable to a registration or get-out-the-vote campaign, shall, if the aggregate of such payments and the fair market value of such services or other benefit exceed $2,000 for any election, be reported to the Commission in accordance with section 434(a)(4)(A)(i) of this title, and in accordance with section 434(a)(4)(A)(ii) of this title with respect to any general election"; and

(2) in clause (iii) by striking out "(other than a communication primarily devoted to subjects other than the express advocacy of the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate)".

DISCLOSURE OF INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

SEC. 5. Section 318(a)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441d) is amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

", except that whenever any person makes an independent expenditure through (A) a broadcast communication on any radio or television station, the broadcast communication shall include a statement—

"(i) in such television broadcast, that is clearly readable to the viewer and appears continuously during the entire length of such communication; or

"(ii) in such radio broadcast, that is clearly audible to the viewer and is aired at the beginning and ending of such broadcast, setting forth the name of such person and in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization, or (B) a newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing or other type of general public political advertising, the communication shall include, in addition to the other information required by this subsection, the following sentence: 'The cost of presenting this communication is not subject to any campaign contribution limits.', and a statement setting forth the name of the person who paid for the communication and, in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization and the name of the president or treasurer of such organization.

"(4) The person making an independent expenditure described in paragraph (3) shall furnish, by certified mail, return receipt requested, the following information, to each candidate and to the Commission, not later than the date and time of the first public transmission (e.g. first aired, mailed, published, or displayed):

"(A) effective notice that the person plans to make an independent expenditure for the purpose of financing a communication which expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate;

"(B) an exact copy of the intended communication, or a complete description of the contents of the intended communication, including the entirety of any texts to be used in conjunction with such communication, and a complete description of any photographs, films, or any other visual devices to be used in conjunction with such communication;

"(C) all approximate dates and times when such communication will be publicly transmitted; and

"(D) each specific location, media channel, and publication through which the communication will be publicly transmitted.".

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

SEC. 6. (a) Section 301(17) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended by adding the following: "An expenditure shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with a candidate and shall not constitute an 'independent expenditure' where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the candidate or the candidate's agent and the person (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) making the expenditure;

"(B) in the same election cycle, the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been—

"(i) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees,

"(ii) serving as an officer of the candidate's authorized committees, or

"(iii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate, the candidate's authorized committees, or the candidate's agent;

"(C) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled the candidate or the candidate's agents at any time on the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any advice relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(D) the person making the expenditure retains the professional services of any individual or other person also providing those services to the candidate in connection with the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any services relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(E) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated or consulted at any time during the same election cycle about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of election to Federal office, with: (i) any officer, director, employee or agent of a party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions, pursuant to subsection (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or (ii) any person whose professional services have been retained by a political party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions pursuant to subsection (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; and

"(F) the expenditure is based on information provided to the person making the expenditure directly or indirectly by the candidate or the candidate's agents about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs, provided that the candidate or the candidate's agent is aware that the other person has made or is planning to make expenditures expressly advocating the candidate's election.".

"(13) Within 3 days after the Commission receives a complaint, filed pursuant to this section, which alleges that an independent expenditure was made with the cooperation or consultation of a candidate, or an authorized committee or agent of such candidate, or was made in concert with or at the request or suggestion of an authorized committee or agent of such candidate, the Commission shall provide for a hearing to determine such matter.".

CANDIDATE EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i)(1)(A) Within 15 days after a candidate qualifies for the primary election ballot, under applicable State law, such candidate shall file with the Commission and each other candidate who has qualified for such ballot, a declaration stating whether or not such candidate intends to expend funds and incur personal loans for the primary and general election a total amount, in the aggregate of $250,000 or more from the following sources: (i) his personal funds, (ii) the funds of his immediate family, and (iii) personal loans incurred in connection with his campaign for such office.

"(B) The statement required by this subsection shall be in such form, and contain such information, as the Commission may, by regulation, require.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in any election in which a candidate declares that he intends to expend or incur, in the aggregate, $250,000 or more by expending from personal funds and funds of his immediate family and incurring personal loans for his campaign, or does expend funds and incur loans in a total in excess of such amount, or fails to file the declarations required by this subsection, the limitations on contributions in subsection (a) of this section, as they apply to all other individuals running for such office, shall be increased for such election as follows:

"(A) The limitations provided in subsection (a)(1)(A) shall be increased to $10,000, and

"(B) The limitations provided in subsection (a)(3) shall be increased to an amount equal to 150 percent of such limitation, but only to the extent that contributions above such limitation are made to candidates affected by the increased level provided in subparagraph (A).

"(3) If the limitations in this section are increased pursuant to paragraph (2) for a convention or a primary election as they relate to an individual candidate, and if such individual candidate is not a candidate in any subsequent election in such campaign, including the general election, the provisions of subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) shall cease to apply.

"(4) Any candidate who—

"(A) declares, pursuant to paragraph (1) that he does not intend to expend and incur, by expending from his personal funds and the funds of his immediate family and incurring personal loans in connection with his campaign an amount which in the aggregate totals $250,000 or more; and

"(B) subsequently does spend funds or incur loans in excess of such amount, or intends to spend funds or incur loans in excess of such amount, shall notify and file an amended declaration with the Commission and shall notify all other candidates for such office within 24 hours after changing such declaration or exceeding such limits, whichever first occurs, by sending such notice by certified mail, return receipt requested.

"(5) Any candidate who makes expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family, or incurs personal loans in connection with his campaign for election to office may repay such loan for such expenditures, to himself or to his immediate family, from contributions made to such candidate or any authorized committee of such candidate, except that such loan shall be repaid only to the extent of the actual amount of the loan. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, repayment of any such loan shall not include any interest on the principal amount of such loan.

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family, or incur personal loans in connection with his campaign for election to such office at any time after 60 days before the date of such election. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply to all candidates regardless of whether such candidate has reached the limits provided in this subsection.

"(7) The Commission shall take such action as it deems necessary under the enforcement provisions of this Act to assure compliance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(j) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no candidate who, in connection with his campaign for election to Federal office, makes expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family to his campaign committee, or makes a loan from such funds to such committee, shall use any other contributions which are made by any other person, after the election, to such candidate or the principal campaign committee of such candidate to repay any such expenditure or loan.

"(k) For purposes of this section, 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouse of any such person and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate's spouse, and any spouse of any such person.".

(b) Section 313 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 439a) is amended by inserting before the period the following: ", and except that no candidate for the office of President or Vice President may use any contributions in a manner prohibited by section 315(j)".

ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTIES

SEC. 8. Section 315(d)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)(3)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "2 cents" in subparagraph (A)(i) and inserting in lieu thereof "5 cents"; and

(2) striking out "$10,000" in subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000".

DEFINITION OF NATIONAL COMMITTEE

SEC. 9. Section 301(14) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(14)) is amended to read as follows:

"(14) The term 'national committee' means the organization or organizations which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, are responsible for the day-to-day operation of such political party at the national level, including the Democratic National Committee, the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, the Republican National Committee, the National Republican Senatorial Committee, and the National Republican Congressional Committee, and any other such committees as determined by the Commission.".

REPORTING BY POLITICAL PARTY COMMITTEES

SEC. 10. (a) Section 304(b)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (J), by striking out "and" after the semicolon;

(2) in subparagraph (K), by inserting "and" after the semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(L) for a national committee of a political party, all contributions, loans, transfers, and other receipts from any source to the committee and to any account financed, established, maintained, or controlled by such national committee, regardless of whether such account is a political committee;".

(b) Section 304(b)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (F), by striking out "and" after the semicolon;

(2) in subparagraph (G), by inserting "and" after the semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) person who provides any contribution, loan, transfer, service, or any other benefit or thing of value to a national committee of a political party or to any account financed, established, maintained, or controlled by such national committee, regardless of whether such account is a political committee, in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $200 within the calendar year, together with the date and amount or value of such contribution, loan, transfer, service, or other benefit or thing of value;".

(c) Section 304(b)(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(4)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (H), by striking out "and" after the semicolon at the end thereof;

(2) in subparagraph (I), by inserting "and" after the semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(J) for a national committee of a political party, all disbursements made by the committee or from any account financed, established, maintained, or controlled by such national committee, regardless of whether such account is a political committee;".

COMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 11. Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1), by striking "class and";

(2) by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively; and

(3) by inserting immediately after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) A licensee shall not preempt the use, during any period specified in subsection (b)(1), of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office who has purchased such use pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b)(1).".

INTERMEDIARY OR CONDUIT

SEC. 12. (a) Section 315(a)(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate; and

"(B) contributions made by a person either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, through an intermediary or conduit, including all contributions delivered or arranged to be delivered by such intermediary or conduit, shall also be treated as contributions from the intermediary or conduit, if—

"(i) the contributions made through the intermediary or conduit are in the form of a check or other negotiable instrument made payable to the conduit or intermediary rather than the intended recipient; or

"(ii) the conduit or intermediary is (I) a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, within the meaning of section 301(4), or an officer, employee or other agent of such a political committee or candidate, or a national political party committee, or (II) an officer, employee or other agent of a connected organization, within the meaning of section 301(7), acting in its behalf.

In all cases where contributions are made by a person either directly or indirectly to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.".

(b) Section 315(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(9) When any person, political committee, or national committee of a political party—

"(A) solicits or accepts contributions in the form of check or money order from any source, and

"(B) combines the amount of any such contributions and contributes such combined amount (or any portion of any such amount or contribution) to a candidate for Federal office, or to the authorized agent or authorized political committee of such candidate, then all such solicited or accepted contributions made through a check or money order shall be made payable to a specific payee by the original drawer of the check or money order.".

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 13. If any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of any other such provision, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 14. This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on November 7, 1990 and shall apply to all contributions and expenditures made after such date.

● Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, today I am cosponsoring legislation drafted by the Republican task force on campaign finance to overhaul the current way we fund and run elections for the Senate. Neither I nor the drafters of this plan would claim that it is the perfect reform plan. However, I believe it is a useful and necessary first step toward finding a solution to what all of us view as a growing problem.

As we all know, there is a long history to the debate we are resuming today. It is my understanding that Senator BOREN, Senator BYRD, and others across the aisle are reintroducing S. 2, which was the subject of long debate and, as I recall, seven unsuccessful cloture votes last year.

While it is not clear to me at this point how we will resolve this matter, it is clear that many Members on both sides of the aisle believe it is time for serious and constructive work on our campaign finance laws.

The legislation I am supporting has many features that deserve serious consideration and, I believe, should be part of the bipartisan package that many of us hope will emerge from this effort. It reduces the maximum contribution from political action committees from $5,000 per election to $1,000—a practice I personally have followed since my first campaign in 1978.

This legislation also requires improved and stronger disclosure of so-called soft money spending from any source and complete disclosure of national political party funding. In addition, this bill would establish new requirements for disclosure and timely notice of independent expenditures, a practice that has become increasingly controversial and that is very difficult to even monitor under current law.

Other features address the so-called millionaire's loophole for spending personal funds in campaigns, the role of the parties and the cost of campaigns. While none of these steps is radical or revolutionary, I believe they are ones that can help reduce the inordinate importance that money has attained in political campaigns.

Obviously, the legislation being offered today from both sides of the aisle is merely the starting point for a renewed debate on campaign finance. Much work remains to be done on this issue and I am prepared to do all I can in that effort. In his inaugural address, President Bush said the American people sent us here to find solutions, not to bicker among ourselves. I can think of no issue where the need for cooperation and good faith bargaining is more necessary than this one.●

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join with the Republican leader and many of my Republican colleagues in introducing S. 7, a campaign finance reform proposal which is the most sweeping and comprehensive ever introduced in the Senate. If ever there was a foundation for a bipartisan approach to remedying many of the most troubling problems with the Federal Election Campaign Act, S. 7, the Dole-McConnell-Stevens bill, is the foundation. I strongly urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to take a hard look at this bill. If true, bipartisan campaign finance reform is the goal of the Senate, S. 7, can be the starting point.

To the majority of Senators who do desire solutions to the problems of campaign finance, let me say that there is only one avenue to that goal, the road marked "bipartisanship." If the Senate learned anything at all from the extended debate on S. 2, it is that Republicans view Democrat-designed spending limits and the taxpayer financing of congressional campaigns as an actual threat to the very survival of Republican candidates. Today's reintroduction, by the majority, of a bill which can only be described as the "son of S. 2," does little to reassure me that my friends on the other side of the aisle have understood our absolute rejection of the kind of reform envisioned by S. 2. We will not be a party to reforming ourselves out of existence.

After all of the hours, days, and weeks, not to mention cloture votes too numerous to recall, which were spent on S. 2 during the 100th Congress, skeptics of campaign finance reform are entitled to wonder whether there is any basis for hope in 1989. Mr. President, I am an optimist by nature. My sense of optimism has not been dampened, despite the course of debate on campaign finance reform proposals during the last Congress. I remain convinced that men and women of good will in the Senate can reach agreement on a package of campaign reforms which will benefit democracy without adversely effecting any of the national political parties.

Yet to begin the process which will lead to an agreement, someone must make the first move. Today, I offer S. 7 as the first step on what we all realize will be a long road. I urge all of my colleagues to review this proposal very seriously.

Many of the elements of the Congressional Campaign Reform Act of 1989, the Dole-McConnell-Stevens bill, have been ideas which I have long championed. In fact, my own involvement in campaign finance law and reform efforts goes back a long way, Mr. President, including service as a conferee on the bill which became the Federal Campaign Act in 1971. Many of the ideas which I've advanced in the 18 intervening years are included in S. 7, most notably, the democratization of political action committees, a substantial enlargement in the role of the national political parties, and a reconfiguration of the contribution limits for individuals and PAC's so that individual contributions will count for more than will the contributions of political action committees.

As to the latter provision, Mr. President, I think that it is important to note that while I do support a reconfiguration of contribution limits, I do not agree with those who believe that political action committees exert a pernicious influence in the political process and should be abolished. On the contrary, PAC's have played a very constructive role in electoral politics and I challenge the notion that PAC's exist solely to exert undue influence. My experience as a Member of the Senate for 20 years and as the former chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee tells me that such charges are without substantiation.

Mr. President, the Dole-McConnell-Stevens bill consists of nine very carefully crafted reform proposals. Each provision stands on its own as a major advance toward bipartisan campaign finance reform. Taken as a whole S. 7, is the most comprehensive campaign finance proposal offered in this body since I began my Senate service in 1968. I commend this bill to my colleagues and I ask unanimous consent that a factsheet explaining each section of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point. Thank you.

There being no objection, the factsheet was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN REFORM ACT OF 1989

MAJOR PROVISIONS: RESTRICTIONS ON POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

Lower the PAC contribution limit to $1,000 from $5,000 per candidate per election.

Require PACs to give their members the names and addresses of all federal candidates and the national political parties; and require PACs to let their members "earmark" their contributions for particular parties.

RAISED INDIVIDUAL CONTRIBUTION LIMIT IN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS

Increase the individual contribution limit for Congressional candidates to $2,000 from $1,000 per election.

BROADCAST DISCOUNT/CAMPAIGN COST REDUCTION

Allow Presidential and Congressional candidates to purchase non-preemptible time at the lowest unit charge for preemptible time, in the last 45 days before the primary and the last 60 days before the general election.

FULL DISCLOSURE OF "SOFT MONEY" SPENDING

Require corporations, PACs, labor organizations, and non-profits to report all spending "for the purpose of influencing a federal election" through soft money activities, including voter drives, telephone banks, and membership communications.

STRENGTHENED DISCLOSURE OF PARTY FINANCES

Require complete disclosure by all national political party committees of receipts, expenditures, and soft money activities in Presidential and Congressional elections.

ENLARGING THE ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTIES

Increase the limit on "coordinated expenditures" by national political parties to $0.05 from $0.02, multiplied by the voting age population of each state, and to $25,000 from $10,000 for Representatives from states with more than one Representative.

PROHIBITION AGAINST BUNDLING

Prohibit all bundling of contributions, except by political party committees.

CONTROLS ON INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

Define "independent expenditures" to prohibit consultation with a candidate or his agents and require the FEC to hold a hearing within three days of any formal complaint of collusion between an independent expenditure committee and a candidate.

Require all independently-financed political communications, to disclose the person or organization financing it; require that disclosure be complete and conspicuous; and require timely notice to all candidates of the communication's placement and content.

CONSTRICT THE "MILLIONAIRE'S LOOPHOLE"

Require Presidential and Congressional candidates to declare upon filing for an election whether they intend to spend or loan over $250,000 in personal funds in the race; raise the individual contribution limit to $10,000 from $2,000 for all opponents of a candidate who declares such an intention.

Prohibit candidates from recovering personal funds or loans put into their race from contributions raised after the election.

The effective date of this legislation shall be November 7, 1989.●

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. GARN, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. DODD, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. ROTH, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, and Mr. COHEN):

S. 8. A bill to amend the Export Administration Act of 1979 to impose sanctions against companies which have aided and abetted the proliferation of chemical or biological weapons, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS CONTROL ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act—a bill aimed at stemming the flow of chemical and biological weapons-related technology and material to such irresponsible and dangerous states as Libya. I am pleased that a number of distinguished Senators have already joined me as cosponsors: Senators GARN, HEINZ, DODD, MCCAIN, KASTEN, JEFFORDS, ROTH, BOSCHWITZ, and COHEN. Senators GARN and HEINZ have been the principal coauthors of this legislation; they and their staff deserve much of the credit for what we all believe to be a good product. In addition, I want to take note of Senator DODD's cosponsorship. This is truly a bipartisan matter, and all of us look forward to working with him—and hopefully many others from both sides—to move this bill.

I don't think anyone doubts the seriousness and the urgency of this problem. The unchecked spread of chemical weapons is the most immediate threat to regional peace and American interests in the real world of 1989. That is not rhetoric, but reality.

If the capacity to create, store, and deliver chemical weapons finally falls into the hands of lunatics like Qadhafi or fanatics like Khomeini, then we will truly be in not a brave, but a scary, new world. The capacity of rational and responsible states to deter war will be vastly diminished; the temptation to war, or political blackmail, by irrational and irresponsible states will be vastly increased.

Last year, when I and others introduced legislation very much like the bill I am introducing today, I said that the evil genie of chemical weapons had already escaped from the bottle. Today—as the headlines verify—that genie is more out of control than ever. Then, it was already clear that Iraq had, and had used, chemical weapons, and that Iran, Syria, and Libya were hell-bent on matching or exceeding Iraq's capability. Now, we know beyond question that Libya is on the verge of achieving a massive chemical weapons production capacity, and—as this week's news reports attest—moving ahead feverishly to develop the capability to deliver such weapons far beyond its own borders.

The genie is out of the bottle. And this—these next months—represents our last real chance to get it back under control. This bill will not do the job, by itself. But I and my cosponsors are convinced that this bill encompasses an approach that must—must—be part of any serious, effective effort to bring these terrible weapons of mass destruction under the control of some kind of international regime.

The ultimate goal must be an international regime, in which all the nations of the Earth join to wipe out all chemical weapons, and establish an effective control mechanism to insure they will never reappear. In the medium term, we must aim at an international regime to halt the spread of chemical weapons capability to all nations—but especially those whose pattern of international conduct has been patently irresponsible and dangerous.

My bill makes clear we must bend every effort to these ends, through multilateral and bilateral diplomacy, and the full force of influence and leverage we can bring to bear around the world.

But, even as we pursue those goals, there is something that we can, and must, do now—and, at the outset, at least, do unilaterally. Something that will have a real impact; and something that will send a powerful signal around the world of American seriousness and resolve.

A chemical weapons capability is not a home grown product in Libya or any of the other countries of major concern—the expertise, and much of the equipment and material, must be imported. Those imports can come from only two sources—the East bloc states, and the private sector of the Free World. In fact, while their record is far from perfect, it now appears that the Soviets and their East bloc allies may be waking up to the danger that the proliferation of chemical weapons represents to them, as well as to us. Though there is a long way to go, there is some hope that they might join us in an effective, international control regime.

Meanwhile, though, we must cope with this sad and dangerous fact: that some Free World companies are not only capable, but willing, to make a buck by peddling chemical weapons-related technology and material to Libya and other states of its ilk. We must do everything we can to stop the flow of that technology and material, before it is too late.

Our bill, which will amend the Export Administration Act, attacks both halves of the problem—the real world fact that foreign firms are already aiding and abetting Libya and other nations acquire a chemical weapons capability; and the potential that American firms, perhaps inadvertantly, might, too.

In regard to the foreign firms—which are beyond the direct reach of our laws and export control systems—we rely upon the powerful leverage of the marketplace and economic reality. Our bill will require a report from the President on which foreign companies are aiding and abetting the spread of chemical weapons to target countries—those whose possession of chemical weapons would raise a clear and present danger to their neighbors and regional stability, and might well contemplate their first use. Listing of any firm will trigger sanctions against that firm, totally shutting it out of the American market for a long time—in most cases, at least 2 years, even should it stop its activities with the target country immediately upon publication of the report.

The leverage we have and propose to use is real. The experience we have had with the so-called Toshiba case is one bit of evidence to that effect. In addition, we know of one major foreign firm which severed its ties with Libya, largely because of just the introduction of our similar bill of last year. The message is loud and clear to board rooms around the world—do buisness with the likes of Qadhafi, and you can kiss goodbye to the American market. That threat might not be relevant to some very small firms, or those which think themselves smart enough to hide their activities—again, we are not claiming this is the whole answer. But we think logic and the track record to date indicates this approach can work, in many important cases. It can scare some people out of this unsavory business; and it can keep a whole lot more from being tempted to get involved in the first place.

I should also add that our bill provides strong safeguards, to insure that the Presidential report need not compromise any sensitive intelligence activities, or undermine any other efforts to halt the proliferation of chemical weapons.

The other half of the bill makes sure that we have our own house in order, too. That is important in its own right, and important to insure that our signal to our allies, and to foreign firms, is credible. The bill will establish a new, tough control regime on our own exports of technology and material that is directly relevant to a chemical weapons capability—to insure that no such exports go from American firms to target countries. It will require the President to identify the relevant technology and material, and the target countries, and then require licenses for the export of any listed technology/material to any listed country. Penalties would be of the same kind as exist under other sections of the Export Administration Act—fines, and even imprisonment, for violators.

That is the essence of the legislation. A more detailed summary of its provisions is included at the end of this statement.

Let me again stress that we are not proposing an American go-it-alone or ally-bashing approach. We must continue the effort, manifest in the Australia group discussions and the Paris Chemical Weapons Conference, to establish an effective international regime to stop the spread of chemical weapons. We must use our diplomatic skills and political influence to enlist the voluntary support of both our allies and adversaries in this effort.

Meanwhile, however, this bill can both buttress and add teeth to that effort, while having some real impact on the problem in the immediate future. This bill can spur other nations to act responsibly, and can back up any international regime which is established.

The problem is very serious; the hour is very late. It is time for us to act. I hope all Senators will join me and my cosponsors in this important act, by joining us in sponsoring and passing this vital piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and an analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 8

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) proliferation of the material and technology to produce and deliver chemical and biological weapons threatens American national security interests and regional stability;

(2) reliable reports of Libya's attempt to acquire a chemical weapons production and delivery capability, efforts by Iran and Syria to do likewise, and Iraq's use of chemical weapons against its Kurdish minority are of grave concern to the other states of the Middle East/Persian Gulf region and to the United States;

(3) any efforts by Communist-bloc countries to aid and abet the production or use of chemical or biological weapons, or the development and deployment of delivery systems for chemical or biological weapons, by any state are deplorable;

(4) there are increasing reports that major corporations in certain non-Communist countries have aided and abetted the reported efforts of Libya, Iraq, Iran, and Syria to acquire chemical weapons production and delivery capabilities and, if true, any such activity by those companies is deplorable and represents a threat both to American security interests and the peace and stability of the Middle East/Persian Gulf region;

(5) the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade recognizes that national security concerns may serve as a legitimate basis for constricting free and open trade; title XXI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade states that "[n]othing in this Agreement shall be construed . . . to prevent any contracting party from taking any action which it considers necessary for the protection of its essential security interests . . . ."; and

(6) international cooperation has so far been unable to stem the trade in materials essential to produce chemical weapons and their industrial inputs.

SEC. 3. POLICY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—It should be the policy of the United States to take all appropriate measures—

(1) to discourage the proliferation of the material and technology necessary and intended to produce or deliver chemical or biological weapons;

(2) to discourage Communist-bloc countries from aiding and abetting any states from acquiring such material and technology;

(3) to implement a United States control regime to prohibit the flow of United States materials, equipment, and technology that would assist countries in acquiring the ability to produce or deliver chemical or biological weapons; and

(4) to discourage private companies in non-Communist countries from aiding and abetting any states in acquiring such material and technology.

(b) MULTILATERAL DIPLOMACY.—The United States should seek to pursue the policy described in subsection (a) to the extent practicable and effective through multilateral diplomacy, including through efforts such as the efforts of the so-called "Australia Group" and the recently concluded Paris conference on chemical weapons.

(c) UNILATERAL ACTIONS.—The United States retains the right to and should take unilateral actions to pursue the objectives in subsection (a) until such multilateral efforts prove effective and, at that time, to support and enhance the multilateral efforts.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

Section 16 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2415) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (7) and (8) as paragraphs (9) and (10), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following:

"(7) the term 'biological weapons' refers to—

"(A) microbal or other biological agents or toxins, whatever their origin or method of production, of types and in quantities that have no justification for prophylactic, protective, or other peaceful purposes; and

"(B) weapons, equipment, or means of delivery designed to use such agents or toxins for hostile purposes or in armed conflict;

"(8) the term "chemical weapons" refers to—

"(A) toxic chemicals, including supertoxic lethal chemicals, other lethal chemicals, other harmful chemicals and their precursors, including key precursors, except such chemicals intended for peaceful purposes as long as the types and quantities involved are consistent with such purposes; and

"(B) munitions and devices specifically designed to cause death or other harm through the toxic properties of such toxic chemicals which would be released as a result of the employment of such munitions and devices;".

SEC. 5. AMENDMENT TO THE EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1979.

Section 6 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App 2405) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (k) through (o) as subsections (l) through (p), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (j) the following:

"(k) CHEMICAL WEAPONS.—(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, shall establish and maintain, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (m)—

"(A) a comprehensive list of goods or technology, whether military or dual-use items, that would assist a country in acquiring the ability to produce or deliver chemical or biological weapons; and

"(B) a list of those foreign countries which are pursuing or expanding such ability, as determined by the President.

"(2) The Secretary shall require a validated license for any export of goods or technology listed under paragraph (1)(A) to a country listed under paragraph (1)(B). The Secretary shall deny any application for such a license if the Secretary has reason to believe that the goods or technology will be used by a country described in paragraph (1)(B) in producing or delivering chemical or biological weapons or will otherwise be devoted to such purposes. Issuance of a license by the Secretary shall be the only approval required for the shipment of goods or technology on the list.

"(3)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a determination of the Secretary to approve or deny an export license application for the export of goods or technology under this subsection may be made only after consultation with the Secretary of State, subject to subparagraph (B). In any case where the Secretary of Commerce proposes to take an action under this subsection without the concurrence of the Secretary of State, the matter shall be referred to the President for resolution.

"(B) In any case where an application subject to this subsection involves a military item, a determination to approve or deny such an application may be made only after consultation with the Secretaries of Defense and State. In any case where the Secretary of Commerce proposes to take an action under this subsection without the concurrence of the Secretary of Defense or State, the matter shall be referred to the President for resolution.".

SEC. 6. REPORT.

Section 14 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2413) is amended—

(1) by striking the section heading and inserting "REPORTS";

(2) by striking "CONTENTS" in subsection (a) and inserting "ANNUAL REPORTS"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(g) REPORTS ON CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS MATTERS.—(1) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, and every 180 days thereafter, the President shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Minority Leader of the House of Representatives, the Majority Leader and Minority Leader of the Senate, the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate a report on the efforts of all foreign countries to acquire the material and technology to produce and deliver chemical and biological weapons, together with an assessment of the present and future capability of those countries to produce and deliver such weapons.

"(2) Each report under this subsection shall include an assessment of whether and to what degree any Communist-bloc country has aided or abetted any foreign country in its efforts to acquire the material and technology described in paragraph (1).

"(3) Each such report shall also list—

"(A) each company which in the past has aided or abetted any foreign country in those efforts; and

"(B) each company which continues to aid or abet any foreign country in those efforts, as of the date of the report.

"(4) Such report shall also include an assessment as to whether any company listed in paragraph (3)(A) or (3)(B) was aware that the assistance provided was for the purpose of developing a chemical and biological weapons production and delivery capability.

"(5) Each report under this subsection shall provide any confirmed or credible intelligence or other information that any non-Communist country has aided or abetted any foreign country in those efforts, either directly or by facilitating the activities of the companies listed in paragraph (3)(A) or (3)(B), or had knowledge of the activities of the companies listed in paragraph (3)(A) or (3)(B), but took no action to halt or discourage such activities.

"(6) Nothing in this section—

"(A) requires the disclosure of information in violation of Senate Resolution 400 of the Ninety-fourth Congress or otherwise alters, modifies, or supersedes any of the authorities contained therein; or

"(B) shall be construed as requiring the President to disclose any information which, in his judgment, would seriously—

"(i) jeopardize the national security of the United States;

"(ii) undermine existing and effective efforts to meet the policy objectives outlined in section 4; or

"(iii) compromise sensitive intelligence operations, with resulting grave damage to the national security interests of the United States.

"(7) If the President, consistent with paragraph (6)(B), decides not to list any company in that part of the report required under paragraphs (3) and (5) which would have been listed otherwise, the President shall include that fact in that report, with his reasons therefor.".

SEC. 7. SANCTIONS AGAINST FOREIGN COMPANIES.

The Export Administration Act of 1979 is amended by inserting after section 11A the following:

"CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS CONTROL VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 11B. (a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT.—The President, subject to subsection (c), shall apply sanctions under subsection (b) if the President determines that—

"(1) any foreign company has in the past aided or abetted a country on the country list prepared pursuant to section 6(k)(1)(B) of this Act in acquiring goods or technology that were used in producing or delivering chemical or biological weapons or were otherwise devoted to such purposes; or

"(2) any foreign company continues to aid or abet a country on the country list prepared pursuant to section 6(k)(1)(B) of this Act in acquiring goods or technology that are being used in producing or delivering chemical or biological weapons or were otherwise devoted to such purposes.

"(b) SANCTION.—(1) Before October 1, 1990, the United States Government shall not procure, or contract for the procurement of, any goods or services from any company referred to in subsection (a)(1).

"(2) The United States Government shall not procure, or contract for the procurement of, any goods or services from any company referred to in subsection (a)(2). The provisions of the preceding sentence shall cease to apply upon the expiration of 2 years after the President certifies to the Congress that—

"(A) conclusive intelligence or other information demonstrates that such company has totally ceased to aid or abet any foreign country in its efforts to acquire goods and technology described in section 6(k)(1)(A); and

"(B) in the President's judgment, it would be in the national interest of the United States to again procure, or contract for the procurement of, goods and services from such company.

"(3) The importation into the United States—

"(A) before October 1, 1990, of products produced by a company referred to in subsection (a)(1), and

"(B) before the close of the 2-year period described in paragraph (2), of products produced by a company referred to in subsection (a)(2) with respect to which a certification under paragraph (2) was made, is prohibited.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section—

"(1) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

"(A) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including the exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;

"(B) if the President determines that the person or other entity to which the sanctions would otherwise be applied is a sole source supplier of essential defense articles or services and no alternative supplier can be identified; or

"(C) if the President determines that such articles or services are essential to the national security under defense coproduction agreements;

"(2) to—

"(A) products or services provided under contracts entered into before the date on which the President notifies the Congress of the intention to impose the sanctions;

"(B) spare parts;

"(C) component parts, but not finished products, essential to United States products or production;

"(D) routine servicing and maintenance of products; or

"(E) information and technology; or

"(3) to companies which in the President's assessment provided so-called "dual-use" material or technology, and were unaware that the intended use of that material or technology was the development of a chemical weapons production or delivery system.

"(d) REVIEW OF RELATIONS.—The United States Government should review the full range of its security, political, economic, and commercial relations with any country named in a report submitted under section 14(g) for the purpose of paragraph (2) or (5) of such section.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'component part' means any article which is not usable for its intended functions without being imbedded in or integrated into any other product and which, if used in production of a finished product, would be substantially transformed in that process;

"(2) the term 'dual-use', when used in the context of chemical materials or technology, means chemical material or technology which may be utilized both in the production or delivery of chemical weapons and in the production or application of chemicals for other uses;

"(3) the term 'finished product' means any article which is usable for its intended functions without being imbedded or integrated into any other product, but in no case shall such term be deemed to include an article produced by a person other than a sanctioned person that contains parts or components of the sanctioned person if the parts or components have been substantially transformed during production of the finished product; and

"(4) the term 'sanctioned person' means a person, and any parent or successor entity of the person, upon whom sanctions have been imposed under this section.".

CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS CONTROL ACT

Findings on efforts by Libya, Syria and Iran to acquire weapons; Iraq's use of chemical weapons; reports of assistance from Communist states and major Western corporations; and the failure of international cooperation to stem the problem.

POLICY

To discourage proliferation of materials and technology necessary to produce or deliver chemical/biological weapons;

To discourage assistance to these countries by Communist countries and Western companies;

To implement a U.S. control regime for all U.S. technology that could assist this capability;

To pursue multilateral efforts to control these weapons; and

To take unilateral actions, where necessary, to pursue these objectives.

Definitions of biological and chemical weapons.

U.S. EXPORT CONTROLS

New subsection of the Export Administration Act creating a chemical/biological warfare control regime, including a comprehensive list of controlled materials/technologies and controlled countries.

Shipments of controlled technologies would require licenses, with presumption of denial to "problem projects."

Commerce would license in cooperation with State and DoD, as appropriate.

Penalties for violations by companies subject to U.S. law would be those under the EAA (administrative penalties, denial of export privileges, fines and imprisonment).

Report due semiannually on—

Proliferation of material and technology to produce and deliver chemical/biological weapons; and Assistance from Communist states and Western companies in providing these capabilities.

Bill provides for protection of classified information and Presidential discretion not to name companies if this would jeopardize national security, intelligence sources or efforts to meet objectives of the law.

SANCTIONS AGAINST FOREIGN COMPANIES

If the President finds that a foreign company is aiding or abetting the chemical/biological warfare capability of a country listed under the C/B warfare control regime in the EAA, sanctions shall be imposed—in the case of companies that have provided assistance in the past, denial of the privilege to import goods into the United States or participate in USG procurement through October 1, 1990; in the case of companies continuing to provide assistance, import and procurement sanctions for a period of two years after the President certifies such assistance has stopped or that it is in the national interest to resume USG procurement.

USG review of all security, political, economic and commercial relations with countries aiding and abetting such proliferation:

Waivers for certain defense procurement; space and component parts; routine service and maintenance; and for companies the President determines were unaware of the intended use of "dual use" materials and technology provided.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I believe that we are taking actions today that will have a major impact on the future of our Nation and the world. The threat of chemical and biological weapons is ultimately as serious as the threat of nuclear weapons. While such weapons may not be as lethal, they are far easier to acquire and far cheaper to use, and biological weapons open up the spectre of genetic engineering and a long-term threat to the existence of our race.

I strongly support the efforts of the Reagan and Bush administrations to attack the problem of the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons by strengthening the Geneva protocols, and the 1972 treaty on biological weapons. I believe that we need to press all nations to ratify such treaties and agreements, that we need to move toward international inspection, and that we need to halt or minimize any "defensive" research whose true purpose could be the production of chemical and biological weapons.

At the same time, treaties will never be enough. Anyone can sign or ratify a treaty that involves no punishments, and no inspection and verification. Anyone can pass laws that appear to block the sale of equipment and transfer of technology. The entire history of arms control tells us that agreements without teeth are worse than meaningless: They bury the problem, rather than solve it. They withdraw the problem from public attention without halting the threat to peace and to humanity.

We already have firm evidence that these problems will reoccur in the case of chemical and biological weapons. Countries like Iraq, Iran, Libya, and Syria have already signed the agreements and treaties dealing with chemical and biological weapons. Nations like West Germany and Japan have repeatedly assured the United States they would never knowingly sell the equipment to develop and produce chemical weapons.

It is painfully clear that the world has heads of state whose word is nearly worthless, and whose signature on new agreements will be equally worthless. We know all to well that Iran and Iraq have used chemical weapons. We know that all their recent statements and assurances have done nothing to slow down the production of more weapons, or the restructuring of their forces to use them. We know that Libya and Syria are actively following in their footsteps.

We also know that Iran, Iraq, and Syria have long been interested in producing biological weapons, and we have growing reason to suspect that Iraq is actually producing such weapons. Further, we know that Iraq has already misused international agreements to obtain tularemia virus from the United States. This Iraqi action is particularly important because this disease is nearly 10 times more lethal in weapon form than anthrax, and because the United States obtained this culture from the U.S.S.R., which seems to have developed it for weapons purposes in the period before the 1972 treaty. We have every reason to assume that Iraq may soon weaponize two of the three most lethal biotoxins—anthrax and tuleremia—and it may well be on the way to weaponizing the third—equine encephelitis.

Further, we know that we cannot trust even our closest allies to make honest efforts to halt the sale of technology, feedstock, and equipment. We have tried since the early 1980's to persuade Western European states and Japan to come to grips with the problem of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. The result has been promises and lies.

We have seen the Government of Japan and Japanese companies repeatedly deny their involvement in activities like the chemical weapons plant in Libya when they either continued to support proliferation or deliberately ignored the warnings of the United States. If there is any honor or "face" within the Japanese Government on this issue, it certainly is not apparent to me.

Worse, it is becoming all too clear that the most senior officials and ministers of the West German Government have known since the early 1980's that West German firms were contributing to the proliferation of chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons. My good friend Senator HELMS has already issued a roll of dishonor listing the companies that have publically been associated with the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons. My office has updated and expanded that list, and there are now 34 German companies on this list.

Let me also be blunt, I know that the West German Government is denying that it knew what was going on in Libya, and that its Foreign Minister is claiming to be shocked by what happened. The problem with these statements is that it is clear that the West German Government first denied what it already knew to be the truth, and that it has known for half a decade that West German firms have been assisting nations like Iraq and Syria to produce their chemical weapons.

It is inconceivable, that the Foreign Minister of West Germany could really be shocked by what happened in Libya. In 1983 and 1984, and long before the current investigations of what happened in Libya, the West German Government and the West German Foreign Office were warned in great detail that West German firms were already involved in the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

It is inconceivable the United States intelligence data that was then provided to West Germany did not reach the Foreign Minister. It is inconceivable that the West German Government ever really made the efforts it promised to make to investigate what was happening and to halt such proliferation, and it is inconceivable that it did not at least tacitly tolerate what was happening. In fact, if West Germany conducted even half the investigation of West Germany's contribution to nuclear, chemical, and biological proliferation that we in the United States conducted of the Iran-Contra scandal, I believe that Foreign Minister Genscher would be forced to resign.

In short, it is painfully clear that we cannot place our trust in treaties and good intentions alone. We have to find means of enforcing these treaties, and we have to make it clear that we intend to fight proliferation with something more effective than quiet warnings and polite diplomacy. It has to be clear that the foreign governments and companies have a clear choice: They cannot support or tolerate proliferation and maintain close relations, or do business with, the United States.

This is why I am happy to cosponsor the legislation being proposed today by Senator PELL and Senator DOLE. While these two bills differ in scope, they shape the range of action we must take during the coming session. At a minimum, they will establish serious sanctions against any use of such weapons and will expose the governments and companies that aid proliferation.

I hope, however, that we can go further, and make it clear that any company that assists in the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction will not be allowed to do business in the United States.

I also must state that this is one case where I believe that the evidence indicates that such companies must be judged guilty until proven innocent. We have heard excuse after excuse, and denial after denial. We have seen companies use fronts, Swiss companies and banks, and any form of plausible deniability they can think of.

This country has no obligation to excuse firms that aid proliferation, regardless of their excuse. We cannot excuse our own firms, and our support of free trade has never meant the support of a free trade in death.

Firms are going to have to learn that they cannot sell any element of chemical or biological weapons without our making every effort to drive them out of business, whether or not their acts are deliberate or were fully understood by every member of the board. To put it bluntly, I hope that we can agree on legislation that has only one message: One strike and you're out!

In summary, I believe that this is one of those times when a combination of firm diplomacy and firm legislation can really help avert a global tragedy. We have already lived under the threat of nuclear war for far too long. The threat posed by the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons is equally dangerous, and we must have the courage to deal with that threat before it comes to shape the world we live in.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I rise today to join the Republican leader and my other colleagues to put forth a bill intended to stop the spread of chemical weapons and delivery systems to terrorist states.

As you know, during my 14 years in the U.S. Senate, it has been a primary goal of mine to stop the transfer of Western weapons and technology into the arsenals of our adversaries, experience has shown that while technology security is vital, it is extremely difficult to achieve and protect. We are attempting to control the spread that, in many cases, is relatively unsophisticated, but still deadly.

This bill we are offering, attempts to ensure that we do not arm terrorists or terrorist states with weapons capable of mass destruction. This bill also ensures that we stop the transfer and spread of weapons that the civilized nations agreed not to use at the 1925 Paris Conference. This was reaffirmed by 149 nations at the Paris Conference last month.

Use of sanctions is sure to raise voices of protest from governments and industry. But, just as in the Toshiba-Kongsberg case, we must send the signal to the world realize that there are some crimes the United States will not tolerate. We must stand ready to take unilateral action to stop the export of such destructive technology.

I welcome the opportunity to cosponsor this proposal and look forward to working with my colleagues who are searching for a solution to this threat to world peace.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today the United States is faced with a moral and political crisis that may very well alter our entire concept of international relations. Through an almost universal consensus, nuclear weapons and effective delivery systems have been limited to the United States, the Soviet Union, and a handful of other nations. To a large degree, the close control of these weapons has been related to the relative peace of the last 44 years. This is not to imply that many long and bloody wars have not been fought, but rather that they have not been allowed to escalate into a superpower confrontation. Equally important, the belligerents have not been able to drag each other into nuclear oblivion.

The spread of biological and chemical weapons may change this situation. The use of chemical weapons as a "poor man's nuke" will upset the current international balance of power and will enable irrational countries, such as Libya, to conduct terrorism at a much more dangerous and grisly level. It is our duty to prevent this from happening.

Chemical and biological weapons have a long, infamous history. During Ghengis Khan's march into Europe he herded disease-infected peasants and animals ahead of him to spread contagians in order to aid his conquest. Several hundred years later, the Turks flung plague infested bodies into Constantinople during the siege. The 20th century, however, has seen the most extensive use of such weapons. World War I was characterized by the development and use of chlorine, phosphene, and mustard gas, all of which were developed during the war. In spite of the 1925 Geneva protocol which banned the use of chemicals as weapons, the practice continued. The Italians and Japanese used chemicals during the 1930's in their attempted subjugation of Ethiopia and China, respectively.

The 1970's and 1980's have seen even more use of these hideous devices. The Soviets have used the most contemporary chemical weapons in their occupation of Afghanistan. The Iranians and Iraqis gassed each other, and their own people, in spite of international condemnation. In Southeast Asia there have been numerous instances of yellow rain and several chemical attacks conducted by the Vietnamese against the Cambodians. In addition, the Journal of Defense and Diplomacy has reported many cases of chemical use in Africa. The Libyans have used chemicals many times against Chadian forces. Furthermore, the Marxist regimes of Ethiopia, Angola, and Mozambique have each used a variety of chemical devices against anti-Communist resistance movements.

The result of all these cases, especially the Iraqi one, has been the establishment of precedent. Each time a country gets away with this intentional outrage, it becomes easier for it to happen again. The Iraqis ignored the international community and used a variety of chemical systems against poorly protected Iranian forces. Iran, with a population three times that of Iraq, was stalemated. Regardless of the fact that it possessed a 3-to-1 superiority, which in military circles is the requirement for a successful attack, Iran was forced to the negotiating table. The use of chemical weapons by Iraqi forces was a major factor in their success. Furthermore, what was previously considered an unacceptable weapon was used in massive proportions in spite of the public outcry. Thus, what was once considered to be an extravagant luxury only for the superpowers may soon be considered a necessity for Third World nations.

In order to prevent the rampant spread of chemical weapons, especially to unstable, irrational, or morally deviant nations, the United States must act now. It is for this reason that I join Senator DOLE, Senator GARN, Senator DODD, and others in sponsoring the Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act. The primary goal of the bill is to discourage the proliferation of technology and materials necessary to produce chemical and biological weapons and their delivery systems. In order to facilitate this, the bill also creates a domestic control system by which U.S. technology and material are controlled to problem countries.

Mr. President, this bill is designed to impact only on those who choose to aid morally deviant nations. Essentially, it creates a three-tiered system for domestic controls. Any company who follows these guidelines will have no difficulty whatsoever. Only those firms who choose to violate this process will face repercussions.

The first tier is a list of countries, to be compiled by the President, who have either attempted, or are currently attempting, to acquire material and technology utilized in biological or chemical weapons.

The second tier is a list of materials which are unique or particular to the production of such substances or to their delivery systems. Items on this list are to be considered controlled materials requiring a special license for export and may not be sold to any of the nations listed in the first tier.

The third tier is comprised of ordinary items which are considered to be dual use in that they are utilized in the production of both ordinary items and chemical-biological weapons. These items are not to be controlled in most circumstances, unless they are sold; first, to nations listed in the first tier; second, in conjunction with items listed in the second tier; or third, they are sold to nations who are currently receiving shipments of components from the second tier but not from the same company who is selling the dual use items. In these cases exports of dual use items must be subject to license for export.

Mr. President, this bill differs from other measures which put a blanket halt on American goods as a tactic of foreign policy, as President Carter's 1980 grain embargo and President Reagan's 1982 pipeline embargo did. These measures only hurt American firms while barely affecting the Soviet Union. This bill will only limit trade to certain countries in a few particular items. Furthermore, we hope that our friends and allies will follow our lead in this area and will help to place an effective quarantine on undesirable nations to keep them from acquiring chemical weapons capabilities. It would be ideal if all countries would accept the responsibility of ensuring that their businesses adhered to the same moral standards by which nations are judged. Companies like Toshiba and Imhausen would then be much less inclined to put profits before the people of the world.

Nevertheless, should others shrink from their responsibility, the bill provides for action against foreign companies who violate these standards. While the United States can neither fine nor imprison violators, sanctions can be imposed by the President. Such companies can be denied the privilege to import goods into the United States or to participate in U.S. Government procurement procedures. While we sincerely hope that such measures will not have to be taken, they will be if businesses refuse to accept their moral and social responsibilities.

Mr. President, it is well known that I am not one to join country of the month movements. I do not see how such improvised schemes further the role and the respectability of the United States and its Congress. Yet sometimes they contain the roots of the problem, and if refined can be a useful and responsible solution. This bill is an outgrowth of such a movement. It has evolved from focusing on four specific countries to addressing the proliferation of biological and chemical weapons world-wide. It has been honed and refined to meet both current and future needs of the United States, criteria that all legislation should be expected to maintain.

The threat is very real, very present. Maybe not today, not tomorrow, or possibly not even next month, but soon. Sooner than we all wish, irresponsible nations will be threatening civilized society and holding chemical and biological weapons over each others' heads. We must act now to bring some sense into this most dangerous situation.

Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. WILSON, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. HELMS, and Mr. ROTH):

S. 9. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to phase out the earnings test over a 5-year period for individuals who have attained retirement age, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

LIBERALIZATION OF EARNINGS TEST PROVISIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, President Bush in his inaugural address called for a rebirth of personal activism, saying, "we must bring in the generations, harnessing the unused talent of the elderly * * *."

Mr. President, the best way to harness the unused talent of the elderly is to repeal the very law that discourages senior citizens from using their talent, the Social Security earnings limit.

Together with Senator ARMSTRONG, today I introduce legislation to phase out the Social Security earnings limit for those over age 65. This proposal is substantially similar to one adopted by the Senate in 1983 as part of the Social Security solvency amendments. Regrettably, the final 1983 bill included only a partial rollback of the earnings limit.

Congress should now follow the Senate's leadership in getting rid of the earnings limit.

Under current law, Social Security beneficiaries under age 70 face sharp reductions in their monthly benefit if their earnings exceed a specified amount. These seniors will lose $1 of benefits for every $2 of income they receive above $8,880. Next year, a modest change will allow elderly workers to lose only $1 for every $3 they earn above $9,240. I report this change in the law with a mixture of pride and regret. I am proud to have achieved this modest change as part of the 1983 bill; I regret the House of Representatives refused further reform.

Simply stated, this law is unfair and counterproductive. This provision penalizes senior citizens who want to continue working. By forcing those Americans out of the job market, we are effectively reducing our Nation's wealth.

Under this bill, the earnings limit would be increased by $3,000 a year beginning in 1990 and eliminated entirely in 1995 for beneficiaries above the normal retirement age, currently age

65. The legislation would also accelerate the effective date of the 8 percent delayed retirement credit contained in current law from 2009 to 1995.

It is rather ironic that we want our senior citizens to remain active, but present them with incentives to do exactly the opposite. Indeed, we explicitly recognize that senior citizens possess great stores of wisdom, the kind of knowledge and experience our Nation needs. Certainly it is neither justified nor just that we punish these worthy citizens. And that, my colleagues, is precisely what we do.

America's elderly have already borne the burden of decades of hard work. They have paid Social Security taxes throughout their working lives. It is fair that they lose some of those benefits simply because they choose to continue offering their abilities to America?

The earnings limit effectively denies benefits to those retirees making more than a certain amount of money per year. It does not matter that these retirees contributed a significant portion of their income throughout their careers in order to enjoy these benefits.

At a time when our 41st President is calling for the continued contributions of our Nation's seniors, we are offering them a choice that can't help but drive productive individuals to a full retirement or force them to forgo benefits they've worked for over a lifetime. With many economists predicting that shortages of workers will be one of the most severe economic problems we will face in the 1990's, it would certainly seem wise to reform policies which discourage workers who have a lifetime of experience.

The marginal tax rates imposed by the earnings limit is beyond reason. By its own terms, the test establishes a 50-percent marginal tax rate on individuals who earn in excess of the trigger amount. With other Federal and State tax liabilities figured in, this marginal tax rate may approach 73 percent. The situation will improve next year, but not enough. There is no justification for any extra tax on elderly workers. How many of us would choose to continue our efforts faced with that kind of disincentive?

If the earnings test is such a bad idea, some may ask, why was it part of earlier legislation? The answer to this question lies in the economic climate of our Nation at that point in history. Social Security was started in the wake of the Great Depression—a time when Government wanted to make it more attractive for the elderly to leave the workforce, thereby opening jobs to others. Toward that end, the earnings test was an important step. In this day and age, however, there is no social or economic excuse for this tax on senior citizens.

Finally, there is the all important issue of cost. eliminating the earnings test immediately for all beneficiaries would cost $11 billion in the first year alone and approximately $60 billion over 5 years. By limiting repeal to those over age 65, delaying implementation until 1990, and phasing out the limit over 5 years, the cost of the proposal drops to $500 million in the first year and $6.7 billion over 5 years, a fraction of the projected trust fund surpluses during this peroid.

Moreover, there's good reason to believe the cost of this proposal would be much less than this since the estimate does not take into account additional revenues flowing to the Government as the result of a larger workforce paying income and Social Security payroll taxes, higher wage levels subject to taxation for those no longer constrained by the earnings limit, and additional revenues derived from the existing tax on Social Security benefits. The Social Security Administration estimates that the long-term cost of this proposal to the trust fund is just 0.01 percent of taxable payroll.

Lets accept the challenge issued by President Bush and harness the unused talent of the elderly—repealing the senior citizens earnings limitation is a first step in the right direction.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 9

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LIBERALIZATION OF EARNINGS TEST OVER THE PERIOD 1990–1994 FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE ATTAINED RETIREMENT AGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1989, subparagraph (D) of section 203(f)(8) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the exempt amount which is applicable to an individual who has attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) before the close of the taxable year involved shall be increased by $3,000 in each taxable year over the exempt amount for the previous taxable year, beginning with any taxable year ending after 1989 and before 1991.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The second sentence of section 223(d)(4) of such Act is amended by striking out "which is applicable to individuals described in subparagraph (D) thereof" and inserting in lieu thereof "which would be applicable to individuals who have attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) without regard to any increase in such amount resulting from a law enacted in 1987".

SEC. 2. REPEAL OF EARNINGS TEST IN 1995 FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE ATTAINED RETIREMENT AGE.

Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1994—

(1) clause (B) in the third sentence of section 203(f)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "age seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))"; and

(2) section 203(f)(3) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "33⅓ percent" and all that follows through "other individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "50 percent of his earnings for such year in excess of the product of the applicable exempt amount as determined under paragraph (8)", and

(B) by striking out "age 70" and inserting in lieu thereof "retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING AND RELATED AMENDMENTS.

Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1994—

(1) section 203(c)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "is under the age of seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "is under retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))";

(2) the last sentence of subsection (c) of section 203 of such Act is amended by striking out "nor shall any deduction" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "nor shall any deduction be made under this subsection from any widow's or widower's insurance benefit if the widow, surviving divorced wife, widower, or surviving divorced husband involved became entitled to such benefit prior to attaining age 60.";

(2) paragraphs (1)(A) and (2) of section 203(d) of such Act are each amended by striking out "under the age of seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "under retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))";

(3) section 203(f)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out clause (D) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(D) for which such individual is entitled to widow's or widower's insurance benefits if such individual became so entitled prior to attaining age 60, or";

(4) subparagraph (D) of section 203(f)(5) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "(D) In the case of" and all that follows down through "(ii) an individual" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(D) An individual";

(B) by striking out "became entitled to such benefits" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "became entitled to such benefits, there shall be excluded from gross income any such other income."; and

(C) by shifting such subparagraph as so amended to the left to the extent necessary to align its left margin with that of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of such section;

(5) section 203(f)(8)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "the new exempt amounts (separately stated for individuals described in subparagraph (D) and for other individuals) which are to be applicable" and inserting in lieu thereof "the new exempt amount which is to be applicable";

(6) section 203(f)(8)(B) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out all that precedes clause (i) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) The exempt amount which is applicable for each month of a particular taxable year shall be whichever of the following is the larger—";

(B) by striking out "corresponding" in clause (i); and

(C) by striking out "an exempt amount" in the matter following clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "the exempt amount";

(7) section 203(f)(8)(D) of such Act (as amended by section 1(a) of this Act) is repealed;

(8) section 203(f)(9) of such Act is repealed;

(9) section 203(h)(1)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "age 70" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))";

(10) section 203(j) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"Attainment of Retirement Age

"(j) For purposes of this section—

"(1) an individual shall be considered as having attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) during the entire month in which he attains such age; and

"(2) the term 'retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))', with respect to any individual entitled to monthly insurance benefits under section 202, means the retirement age (as so defined) which is applicable in the case of old-age insurance benefits, regardless of whether or not the particular benefits to which the individual is entitled (or the only such benefits) are old-age insurance benefits.";

(11) section 202(w)(2)(B)(ii) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "either"; and

(B) by striking out "or suffered deductions under section 203(b) or 203(c) in amounts equal to the amount of such benefit"; and

(12) the second sentence of section 223(d)(4) of such Act (as amended by section 1(b) of this Act) is further amended by striking out "without regard to any increase in such amount resulting from a law enacted in 1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "but for the liberalization and repeal of the earnings test for such individuals in 1990".

SEC. 4. ACCELERATION OF 8 PERCENT DELAYED RETIREMENT CREDIT.

Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1990, paragraph (6) of section 202(w) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "2005" in subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "1989"; and

(2) by striking out "2004" in subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "1988".

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am glad to join in submitting legislation to phase out the Social Security earnings limit for beneficiaries over age 65.

This is an issue I care deeply about, and believe strongly that the existing Social Security earnings limit creates a serious injustice to our Nation's elderly.

The Social Security earnings limit must be repealed.

What's so wrong with the earnings test?

For one thing, it practically forces elderly citizens into retirement. After contributing to Social Security for decades and reaching age 65, the elderly are presented with a stark choice: eliminate virtually all significant earnings or face big cuts in the Social Security benefits to which they're otherwise entitled. A cruel choice between a productive life or the benefits they've counted on for a lifetime.

Many elderly citizens, while ready to reduce their workload at age 65, do not want to withdraw completely from the labor force. They want to remain productive and useful members of society. Still others need to earn more to meet increased expenses. Yet because of the low-earnings limit, there is seldom a real alternative to full retirement.

Under current law, Social Security beneficiaries under age 70 face sharp reductions in their monthly benefits if their earnings exceed a specified amount. In 1987, the earnings limit for those age 65 to 70 is $8,160. Those earning above this will receive a cut in Social Security of $1 for every $2 earned above the limit. In 1990, the ratio improves slightly to a cut of $1 for every $3 earned above the limit. The test does not apply to beneficiaries over age 70.

Under my proposal, the earnings limit would be increased by $3,000 a year beginning in 1990 and eliminated entirely in 1995 for beneficiaries above the normal retirement age, currently age 65. The legislation would also accelerate the effective date of the 8 percent delayed retirement credit contained in current law from 2009 to 1995.

It is my hope this legislation will help rekindle debate in the Senate on a provision of law which has so many harmful effects on elderly citizens.

First, the earnings test imposes a terrible disincentive on elderly citizens who want to continue working. After contributing to the Social Security Program for decades and reaching age 65, the elderly are presented with a stark choice: eliminate virtually all significant earnings when retired or face stiff cuts in the benefits to which they are otherwise entitled. A choice like that can't help but drive productive individuals to a full retirement or force them to forgo benefits they've worked for over a lifetime.

Many elderly citizens, while ready to reduce their work activity at age 65, do not want to withdraw from the work force completely. Many desire to remain productive and contributing members of society. Some need additional earnings to meet living and health care expenses at a time when their principle sources of income are fixed. Yet because of the low earnings limit, there is seldom a viable choice but to stop working.

Second, the marginal tax rates imposed by the earnings limit are, simply put, confiscatory. By its own terms, the test establishes a 50 percent marginal tax rate on individuals who earn in excess of $8,880. When other Federal and State tax liabilities are figured in, this marginal tax rate may approach 73 percent. No one supports tax levies on the elderly of that magnitude, but that is precisely what can happen under current Social Security law.

Third, the earnings limit is an administrative monster. The Social Security Administration spends over $200 million a year and uses 8 percent of its employees to police the income levels of beneficiaries. SSA estimates that 60 percent of all overpayments and 45 percent of underpayments are attributable to the limit. For beneficiaries, the earnings limit can mean confusion and frustration at requirements to monitor, estimate, and report income levels. The result is often a sense of disillusionment in the Government and in a program many believed would pay full benefits when they turned 65.

When Social Security was started in the wake of the depression, it was deemed appropriate to establish incentives for the elderly to leave the work force to open jobs for others. The earnings test was born of that notion. Today, that view is a complete anachronism. Congress is now interested in encouraging people to work longer. In the past decade, mandatory retirement laws have been repealed and the normal retirement age under social security was slated to increase to 67 in the next century.

These changes were motivated by several considerations. One was that the elderly shouldn't automatically be shunted aside when they reached a certain age. Another was that life expectancy continues to increase and the elderly are more healthy and productive than 40 years ago. At the same time, birth rates have dropped sharply and the demand for experienced labor is on the rise. There is, in short, a real need to encourage people to continue working, if that is their desire. Directing people into retirement through excessive benefit reductions is obviously inconsistent with that goal.

Let me acknowledge that this proposal is not without some critics. Some may say that retirement benefits should not be paid to people who still work. Again, that view would either discourage senior citizens from pursuing productive lives, or deny them the benefits of a program they contributed to during their working days.

Some may also say this proposal benefits the rich among Social Security beneficiaries, those able to continue working and earn extra income. This view certainly doesn't account for the many who have already opted out of the work force in part because of the earnings limit. Beyond this, it should be noted that over two-thirds of the additional benefits that would be paid under this proposal would go to recipients with incomes below $40,000.

More importantly, this proposal would actually mitigate one of the more egregious anomalies under present law whereby Social Security beneficiaries with unlimited unearned income from pensions, investments, or stock dividends, face no reductions in benefits through the earnings test while those who work to earn $8,880 a year have their benefits cut. Rather than favoring the well-to-do, this proposal should restore some sense of equity in the tax treatment of retired citizens.

Finally, there is the all important issue of cost. Eliminating the earnings test immediately for all beneficiaries would cost $11 billion in the first year alone and about $60 billion over 5 years. By limiting repeal to those over age 65, delaying implementation until 1990, and phasing out the limit over 5 years, the cost of the proposal drops to $500 million in the first year and $6.7 billion over 5 years, a fraction of the projected trust fund surpluses during this period.

Moreover, there's good reason to believe the cost of this proposal would be much less than this since the estimate does not take into account additional revenues flowing to the Government as the result of a larger work force paying income and Social Security payroll taxes, higher wage levels subject to taxation for those no longer constrained by the earnings limit, and additional revenues derived from the existing tax on Social Security benefits. The Social Security Administration estimates that the long-term cost of this proposal to the trust fund is a just 0.01 percent of taxable payroll.

Further ways to minimize the short term cost of the proposal should be explored. But the inequities imposed by the earnings limit on over 1 million elderly citizens are so great, that the time to again consider repealing this law has arrived. I hope my colleagues will join me in pursuing this proposal, reaffirming the Senate's position of 1983, and helping to make the retirement years of the elderly as productive and prosperous as possible.

I ask that the text of the legislation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. INOUYE, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 10. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to ensure that Medicare-dependent, small, rural hospitals receive for a 3-year period at least their reasonable costs for inpatient hospital services furnished under the Medicare Program; to the Committee on Finance.

PAYMENT FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today, joined by a number of my colleagues, I am again introducing legislation which will provide a measure of support to some of our small rural hospitals. Small or rural hospitals account for more than 50 percent of total hospitals in eight of nine census regions. In these parts of the country where there are a number of large, remote areas with low population density, access to care becomes critical. If weather or distance are a problem, these communities need accessible local hospitals.

When we first put the Medicare prospective payment system into place we acknowledged that this new system might well have a negative impact on certain institutions, including rural hospitals. These hospitals tend to be smaller, have fewer patients, fewer specialized areas, and often serve a population older than average.

A payment system like the DRG system which is based on averages just doesn't work for these hospitals. They face the combined problem of having too few patients many of which are costly.

We have in years since the enactment of the DRG system agreed to a number of changes designed to assist these hospitals, but for some, it just hasn't been enough. Since 1983, 188 rural hospitals have closed. In 1988 alone, 46 rural hospitals closed. And as those of you from rural areas know, many of our communities cannot afford to lose their hospitals as they provide the only reasonably accessible health services.

Our legislation simply helps those hospitals of 100 beds or less, in which Medicare patients comprise at least 70 percent of their discharges. We would, for a period of 3 years, ensure that these institutions receive in payment at least their reasonable costs.

The solution we propose, which arguably moves us away from the prospective payment system, is not a perfect answer to the problem. It is for this reason that we have provided for a sunset of the provision. The 3 years the provision is in place will give us an opportunity to examine more carefully how we might do away with the current payment bias against rural institutions thereby insuring that our citizens in rural communities will have access to services in the future. In fact, I am working with my distinguished colleague Senator BENTSEN on a proposal that would have us solve the problem over the long term by moving to a national rate for all hospitals.

However, Mr. President, in the short run we cannot allow our rural health care system to further decline. This bill provides a small step in an effort to prevent that from occurring.

Mr. President, I ask, unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 10

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ENSURING ADEQUATE PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES FURNISHED BY MEDI-CARE-DEPENDENT, SMALL, RURAL HOSPITALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1886(d)(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 139ww(d)(5)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(G)(i) For cost reporting periods beginning after September 30, 1989, and ending before October 1, 1992, the Secretary shall provide for an additional payment amount for each Medicare-dependent, small, rural hospital (as defined in clause (ii)) to ensure that the total of the payments made to the hospital under this section (including this clause) for any such cost reporting period is at least equal to the reasonable costs associated with the hospital's operating costs of inpatient hospital services for that period. In determining the reasonable costs of a hospital under the previous sentence, limitations under sectin 1861(v) on such cost shall not apply. In the case of a hospital receiving payments on periodic interim basis under section 1815(e)(1) and entitled to additional payment amounts under this subparagraph, such additional payment amounts shall be included in the payments made under section 1815(e)(1).

"(ii) In clause (i), the term 'Medicare-dependent, small, rural hospital' means, for a cost reporting period with respect to which such clause applies, a subsection (d) hospital—

"(I) that is located in a rural area (as defined in subsection (d)(2)(D)) and has no more than 100 beds; and

"(II) for which period at least 70 percent of inpatient hospital services (determined, at the hospital's option, on a per diem basis or on a discharge basis) are attributable to inpatients who are entitled to benefits under part A.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 11. A bill to provide for the protection of the public lands in the California desert; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CALIFORNIA DESERT PROTECTION ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing the California Desert Protection Act to provide lasting protection for the beauty and wildness of the California Desert.

In 1987 and 1988 I made three trips to the California desert accompanied by naturalists, environmentalists, and scientists. We camped out on the desert floor. We hiked mountains. We trekked up and through narrow desert wilderness canyons. We found snakes, lizards and other animals on huge, wild sand dunes. We looked at recreational sites for ORVs—dune buggies, ATVs, and motorcycles. We saw countless varieties of flowers and plants, including an 11,000-year-old creosote bush which may be the oldest living organism on the planet earth. We drove hundreds of miles over dirt and paved roads through Death Valley and Joshua Tree National Monuments and the East Mojave National Scenic Area. We flew over huge mining operations, water projects, military installations and miles of farming and ranching lands. We held lizards in our hands and saw nighttime skies of incredible beauty and the myriad stars of endless galaxies.

One sunset we climbed the Eureka Dunes, looming, awesome sand structures that are a miniature ecosystem of incredible complexity. The dunes are surrounded by towering mountain ranges of rugged, stark and massive igneous rocks whose antiquity and structure bespeak of geological aeons of long ago.

Climbing the 8,500 foot Last Chance mountain peak, we saw a sweeping, 360-degree view, the snow-capped Sierra Nevada in the west and, far to the south, Death Valley Sink, 280 feet below sea level.

The overwhelming presence of time and force surround you in the desert. There is an immense, almost incomprehensible beauty there that attracts people from all over the world, totalling some 16 million visitor days a year.

The desert is a land of many uses and many resources. And it is vast enough to support the varied demands being made upon it—by campers, hikers, tourists, the military, residents, energy developers, miners, rockhounds, hunters, ranchers, naturalists, scientists, and educators. The desert can support all these diverse interests, but only if the demands made upon it are in concert with the ecological and economic realities of the region.

In 1976, Congress enacted the Federal Land Policy and Management Act [FLPMA] which established the California Desert Conservation Area and started a process for protecting the resources of the California Desert. FLPMA also called for wilderness review of the public lands administered by the BLM, including those in the California Desert.

The California Desert Protection Act continues this process of providing for appropriate protection of significant resources of the public lands in the California Desert.

Like S. 7 which I sponsored in the 100th Congress, this bill designates 81 separate areas, comprising approximately 4.5 million acres of land in the California Desert, as wilderness to be administered by the Bureau of Land Management.

The BLM itself has identified 5.7 million acres in the California Desert as potential wilderness, and has designated these lands wilderness study areas are to be managed to protect their wilderness values until Congress acts on the BLM wilderness recommendations.

Also like S. 7, the bill I am introducing today creates three new national parks in the California Desert—Death Valley, Joshua Tree, and Mojave.

For each of these parks, I have drawn from the recommendations of the Bureau of Land Management's own desert plan staff and the 1977 and 1987 recommendations of the western regional office of the National Park Service.

However, in response to testimony presented on S. 7 at hearings of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests in July 1987 and information provided subsequently, I am making a number of significant changes in the California Desert Protection Act.

First, I have included new bill language regarding military activities in the California Desert.

As my colleagues may be aware, the areas proposed for addition to the national park and wilderness systems in this legislation are located in a region which is used extensively by the Department of Defense for training, research and development. These military activities have not impaired the natural and cultural values of the proposed parks and wilderness areas. However, the Department of Defense has expressed concern about the continued availability of these lands and airspace as there is a lack of alternative sites available for these military training, testing, and research activities.

I have, therefore, amended the California Desert Protection Act to clarify that the legislation has no impact on the military's existing use of airspace in the California Desert region.

I also have amended the legislation to provide for continued military use of public lands in the California Desert. The bill withdraws 1,100,000 acres for China Lake Naval Weapons Center and 227,369 acres for the Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range. The lands are currently being used by the Department of the Navy, for research, development, testing and training purposes. However, the Engle Act provides that peacetime withdrawals of 5,000 acres or more of public land can only be accomplished by an Act of Congress. This legislation will meet the requirements of the Engle Act.

Additionally I have amended the boundaries of the parks and a number of the proposed wilderness areas to accommodate important non-wilderness uses and to correct map errors.

These changes in the following areas include:

Argus wilderness: Deletion of a road and limestone quarry;

Chuckwalla Mountains: Deletion of microwave site, road, and mine;

Clipper Mountains: Deletion of a road and pipeline;

Dead Mountains: Deletion of a road and rock quarry;

Inyo Mountains: Exclusion of mining claims;

Fish Creek: Exclusion of mine;

Hollow Hills: Deletion for utility corridor;

Jacumba: Deletion of transmission line and quarry;

Kelso Dunes: Deletion of gas pipeline;

Kingston Range: Deletion for utility corridor;

Malpais Mesa: Exclusion of mining claims;

Mecca Hills: Deletion of pipeline and map correction to complete boundary;

Mesquite: Deletion for utility corridor;

North Mesquite: Deletion of private property;

Orocopia: Exclusion for utility corridor;

Picacho Peak: Addition of lands;

Piper Mountains: Deletion for utility corridor;

Piute Mountains; Deletion of gas pipeline;

Resting Spring: Deletion of mining road;

Rodman: Deletion of gas pipeline;

Slate Range: Deletion of patented lands;

Soda Mountains: Exclusion for utility corridor;

South Algodones Dunes: Deletion of microwave tower;

Trilobite; Deletion of gas pipeline;

White Mountains WSA: Exclusion for utility corridor;

Mojave National park; Map correction;

Mojave Park wilderness: Deletion of gas pipeline in Granite Mountains portion, map correction and road deletion in Mid Hills portion, deletion of gas pipeline in Providence Mountains portion, map correction and utility corridor deletion in Clark Mountains portion;

Joshua Tree Park additions and wilderness: Deletion of mining claims in Eagle Mountains portion; and

Red Rock Canyon State park additions: Map clarification;

I have also amended the California Desert Protection Act to facilitate and expedite exchanges of lands with State and private property owners in the park and wilderness areas. The revised bill language should be particularly helpful in instances where mineral interests are involved. I intend to continue to work with the two major nonfederal owners of California Desert lands, the State of California and Santa Fe-Southern Pacific, in an effort to reduce conflicts and identify specific parcels for exchange.

Additionally, I have included new language to ensure that Native Americans will continue to have access to the park and wilderness areas for continued traditional cultural and religious use.

I have also included new language to clarify that the important research and educational activities of the University of California at its Granite Mountain Natural Reserve in the East Mojave will continue under a cooperative management agreement with the National Park Service.

Grazing in wilderness areas is a permitted activity and is not affected by this legislation. However, S. 7 provided that grazing in the new Mojave National Park be phased out as the current grazing permits expire. The 10 cattle ranching operations in the East Mojave are not a major contribution to the economy of the State or even the local area. However, the ranching families affected have made a strong case for continuation of their grazing activities beyond the expiration of the current permits. At the same time, I have received new information that the decline in bighorn sheep populations in the desert stems from diseases transmitted by domestic sheep and cattle. I want to study this issue further and review additional hearing testimony before crafting the final grazing provision in the legislation.

S. 7 also called for the establishment of the Indian Canyons National Historic Site, comprising 490 acres rich in archeological sites. This property is now under active threat of development. Last June 1988 the voters of California approved Proposition 70, the California Wildlife, Coastal and Park Land Bond Act which includes $19 million for acquisition of lands in the Indian Canyons region. It's my understanding the California Department of Parks and Recreation is particularly interested in purchasing the 490 acres, but it's unclear whether $19 million will be sifficient to acquire the entire property. No appraisal has yet been made. Thus, I am again including in the California Desert Protection Act a provision to establish the Indian Canyons National Historic Site. I will be following the California Department of Parks and Recreation's efforts to acquire the Indian Canyons and will modify my legislation at a future date as necessary based upon the State's actions.

Mr. President, I am aware that many people are interested in maintaining vehicular access to their favorite areas of the desert. In drawing the boundaries of the wilderness areas designated by this bill, I have been careful to exclude roads and areas receiving the heaviest ORV use. Unaffected by the legislation and available for vehicular use are 15,000 miles of unmaintained dirt routes—enough to go half way around the world. Another 15,000 miles of paved and maintained dirt roads also would remain open. Also the legislation does not affect 7,000 miles of vehicle accessible washes. In addition, over 740,000 acres of BLM open areas are outside the proposed parks and wilderness areas and remain available exclusively for ORV use. Additionally more than 30,000 acres on State and private lands in the desert are available to ORVers. Nonetheless, I will be reviewing the need for additional vehicular access. Mr. President, the time has come to protect the California desert.

A September 1988 survey conducted by the Field Institute found that the vast majority of Californians support more parks and wilderness in the California Desert. Seventy-five percent of those polled said they want to see more protection for desert wildlife and ecology. Fifty-eight percent expressed a desire for more primitive areas and wilderness. And 67 percent said they want to see the creation of more national parklands in the desert. Only 17 percent said they favor more roads for four-wheel drive vehicles, while a third of the public said they want fewer roads for this purpose. Less than 17 percent said they want to see more open areas for the use of off-road vehicles like dune buggies and motorcycles. Also only a quarter of the respondents said they wanted to see more energy development such as gas and oil exploration and mining in the desert.

The major newspapers throughout the State of California have called for increased protection for the California desert. Most have endorsed the California Desert Protection Act.

The Los Angeles Times says,

The Cranston bill would provide enhanced enjoyment of the desert by present visitors, and give it true lasting protection. (June 14, 1987)

The Sacramento Bee explains,

Cranston's bill wouldn't foreclose on any private property or terminate any current valid mining claims or even add very much to what the government is already spending to administer these lands. It would simply . . . ensure that the most important natural, scenic and scientific values of this complex, fragile resource would be preserved . . . Congress should support its basic purpose. (June 3, 1987)

The San Francisco Chronicle urges,

The passage of the California Desert Protection Act, one of the most important pieces of legislation affecting this state to be introduced in many years, should be one of Congress' top priorities. (April 19, 1987)

The Fresno Bee writes,

Much of the desert already has been put to use—and forever changed—by such things as mining operations, military bases, recreational uses and often abortive agricultural projects. A portion of it, close to its original state, must be preserved for future generations. This bill, introduced by Sen. Alan Cranston would do just that. (March 16, 1986)

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 11

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "California Desert Protection Act of 1989".

FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the federally owned desert lands of Southern California constitute a public wildland resource of extraordinary and inestimable value for this and future generations;

(2) these desert wildlands display unique scenic, historical, archeological, environmental, ecological, wildlife, cultural, scientific, educational, and recreational values used and enjoyed by millions of Americans for hiking and camping, scientific study and scenic appreciation;

(3) the public land resources of the California desert now face and are increasingly threatened by adverse pressures which would impair, dilute, and destroy their public and natural values;

(4) the California desert, embracing wilderness lands, units of the National Park System, other federal lands, state parks and other state lands, and private lands, constitutes a cohesive unit posing unique and difficult resource protection and management challenges;

(5) through designation of national monuments by Presidential proclamation, through enactment of general public land statutes (including section 601 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 90 Stat. 2743, 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.) and through interim administrative actions, the federal government has begun the process of appropriately providing for protection of the significant resources of the public lands in the California desert; and

(6) statutory land unit designations are needed to afford the full protection which the resources and public land values of the California desert merit.

(b) In order to secure for the American people of this and future generations an enduring heritage of wilderness, national parks, and public land values in the California desert, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that—

(1) appropriate public lands in the California desert shall be included within the National Park System and the National Wilderness Preservation System, in order to—

(A) preserve unrivaled scenic, geologic, and wildlife values associated with these unique natural landscapes;

(B) perpetuate in their natural state significant and diverse ecosystems of the California desert;

(C) protect and preserve historical and cultural values of the California desert associated with ancient Indian cultures, patterns of western exploration and settlement, and sites exemplifying the mining, ranching and railroading history of the Old West;

(D) provide opportunities for compatible outdoor public recreation, protect and interpret ecological and geological features, and historic, paleontological, and archeological sites, maintain wilderness resource values, and promote public understanding and appreciation of the California desert; and

(E) retain and enhance opportunities for scientific research in undisturbed ecosystems.

TITLE I—WILDERNESS ADDITIONS

FINDINGS

SEC. 101. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) wilderness is a distinguishing characteristic of the public lands in the California desert, one which affords an unrivaled opportunity for experiencing vast areas of the Old West essentially unaltered by man's activities, and which merits preservation for the benefit of present and future generations;

(2) the wilderness values of desert lands are increasingly threatened by and especially vulnerable to impairment, alteration, and destruction by activities and intrusions associated with incompatible use and development; and

(3) preservation of desert wilderness necessarily requires the highest forms of protective designation and management.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS

SEC. 102. In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 890, 16 U.S.C. 1131 et seq.), and sections 601 and 603 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 2743, 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), the following lands in the State of California, as generally depicted on maps, appropriately referenced, dated February 1986, (except as otherwise dated) are hereby designated as wilderness, and therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System—

(1) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately seventy-four thousand eight hundred ninty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Argus Range Wilderness—Proposed", dated Janaury 1989, and which shall be known as the Argus Range Wilderness;

(2) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately sixty-one thousand three hundred twenty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Avawatz Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Avawatz Mountains Wilderness;

ADMINISTRATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS

SEC. 103. Subject to valid existing rights, each wilderness area designated under this title shall be administered by the appropriate Secretary in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act: Provided, That any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this title and any reference to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deemed to be a reference to the Secretary who has administrative jurisdiction over the area.

FILING OF MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 104. As soon as practicable after enactment of this title, a map and a legal description on each wilderness area designated under this title shall be filed by the Secretary concerned with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, and each such map and description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title: Provided, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in each such legal description and map may be made. Each such map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, or the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, as is appropriate.

WILDERNESS REVIEW

SEC. 105. The Congress hereby finds and directs that lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management not designated as wilderness or wilderness study areas by this Act have been adequately studied for wilderness designation pursuant to section 603 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (90 Stat. 2743, 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), and are no longer subject to the requirement of section 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act pertaining to the management of wilderness study areas in a manner that does not impair the suitability of such areas for preservation as wilderness.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS STUDY AREA

SEC. 106. In furtherance of the provisions of the Wilderness Act of 1964, certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area of the Bureau of Land Management which comprise eleven thousand two hundred acres as generally depicted on a map entitled "White Mountains Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated January 1989, are hereby designated the White Mountains Wilderness Study Area and shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of section 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act.

TITLE II—DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL PARK

FINDINGS

SEC. 201. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) proclamations by Presidents Herbert Hoover in 1933 and Franklin Roosevelt in 1937 established and expanded the Death Valley National Monument for the preservation of the unusual features of scenic, scientific, and educational interest therein contained;

(2) Death Valley National Monument is today recognized as major unit of the National Park System, having extraordinary values enjoyed by millions of visitors;

(3) the Monument boundaries established in the 1930's exclude and thereby expose to incompatible development and inconsistent management, contiguous federal lands of essential and superlative natural, ecological, geological, archeological, paleontological, cultural, historical and wilderness values;

(4) Death Valley National Monument should be substantially enlarged by the addition of all contiguous federal lands of national park caliber, and afforded full recognition and statutory protection as a national park; and

(5) the wilderness within Death Valley should receive maximum statutory protection by designation pursuant to the Wilderness Act.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL PARK

SEC. 202. There is hereby established the Death Valley National Park, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Death Valley National Park," dated February 1986, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior. The Death Valley National Monument is hereby abolished as such, and the lands and interests therein are hereby incorporated within and made part of the new Death Valley National Park.

TRANSFER AND ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 203. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 202 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service for administration as part of the National Park System. The boundaries of the public lands and the national parks shall be adjusted accordingly. The areas added to the National Park System by this title shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 204. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated under this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 202. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

DISPOSITION UNDER MINING LAWS

SEC. 205. Subject to valid existing rights, the federal lands and interests therein added to the park system by this title are withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

STUDY AS TO VALIDITY OF MINING CLAIMS

SEC. 206. The Secretary shall not approve any plan of operation prior to determining the validity of any unpatented mining claims within the additions to the park system and submit to Congress recommendations as to whether any valid or patented claims should be acquired by the United States, including the estimated acquisition costs of such claims, and a discussion of the environmental consequences of the extraction of minerals from these lands.

TITLE III—JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL PARK

FINDINGS

SEC. 301. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) a proclamation by President Franklin Roosevelt in 1936 established Joshua Tree National Monument to protect various objects of historical and scientific interests;

(2) Joshua Tree National Monument today is recognized as a major unit of the National Park System, having extraordinary values enjoyed by millions of visitors;

(3) the Monument boundaries as modified in 1950 and 1961 exclude and thereby expose to incompatible development and inconsistent management, contiguous federal lands of essential and superlatives natural, ecological, archeological, paleontological cultural, historical and wilderness values;

(4) Joshua Tree National Monument should be enlarged by the addition of contiguous federal lands of national park caliber, and afforded full recognition and statutory protection as a national park; and

(5) the non-designated wilderness within Joshua Tree should receive maximum statutory protection by designation pursuant to the Wilderness Act.

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL PARK

SEC. 302. There is hereby established the Joshua Tree National Park, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Joshua Tree National Park," dated January 1989, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior. The Joshua Tree National Monument is hereby abolished as such, and the lands and interests therein are hereby incorporated within and made part of the new Joshua Tree National Monument.

TRANSFER AND ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 303. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 302 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service for administration as part of the National Park System. The boundaries of the public lands and the national parks shall be adjusted accordingly. The areas added to the National Park System by this title shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 304. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated by this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 302. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

TRANSFER AND ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 303. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 302 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service for administration as part of the National Park System. The boundaries of the public lands and the national parks shall be adjusted accordingly. The areas added to the National Park System by this title shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 304. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated by this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 302. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

DISPOSITION UNDER MINING LAWS

SEC. 305. Subject to valid existing rights, federal lands and interests therein added to the park system by this title are withdrawn from disposition under the public lands laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from the operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

STUDY AS TO VALIDITY OF MINING CLAIMS

SEC. 306. The Secretary shall not approve any plan of operation prior to determining the validity of any unpatented mining claims within the park and submit to Congress recommendations as to whether any valid or patented claims should be acquired by the United States, including the estimated acquisition costs of such claims, and a discussion of the environmental consequences of the extraction of minerals from these lands.

TITLE IV—MOJAVE NATIONAL PARK

FINDINGS

SEC. 401. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) Death Valley and Joshua Tree National Parks, as established by this Act, protect unique and superlative desert resources, but do not embrace the particular ecosystems and transitional desert type found in the Mojave Desert area lying between them on public lands now afforded only impermanent administrative designation as a national scenic area;

(2) the Mojave Desert area possesses outstanding natural, cultural, historical, and recreational values meriting statutory designation and recognition as a unit of the National Park System;

(3) the Mojave Desert area should be afforded full recognition and statutory protection as a national park; and

(4) the wilderness within the Mojave Desert should receive maximum statutory protection by designation pursuant to the wilderness Act.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE MOJAVE NATIONAL PARK

SEC. 402. There is hereby established the Mojave National Park, comprising approximately one million five hundred thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mojave National Park," dated February 1986, which shall be on file and available for inspection in the offices of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

TRANSFER OF LANDS

SEC. 403. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary" (shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 402 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service. The boundaries of the public lands shall be adjusted accordingly.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 404. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated under this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 402. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

ABOLISHMENT OF SCENIC AREA

SEC. 405. The East Mojave National Scenic Area, designated on January 13, 1981 (46 FR 3994) and modified on August 9, 1983 (48 FR 36210), is hereby abolished.

ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 406. The Secretary shall administer the park in accordance with this title and with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System, including the Act entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535; 16 U.S.C. 1-4).

DISPOSITION UNDER MINING LAWS

SEC. 407. Subject to valid existing rights, federal lands within the park, and interests therein, are withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

STUDY AS TO VALIDITY OF MINING CLAIMS

SEC. 408. The Secretary shall not approve any plan of operation prior to determining the validity of any unpatented mining claims within the park and submit to Congress recommendations as to whether any valid or patented claims should be acquired by the United States, including the estimated acquisition costs of such claims, and a discussion of the environmental consequences of the extraction of minerals from these lands.

REGULATIONS OF MINING

SEC. 409. Subject to valid existing rights, all mining claims located within the park shall be subject to such reasonable regulations as the Secretary may prescribe to assure that mining will, to the maximum extent practicable, be consistent with the protection of the scenic, scientific, cultural and other resources of the park, and any patent which may be issued after the date of enactment of this title shall convey title only to the minerals together with the right to use the surface of lands for mining purposes subject to such reasonable regulations.

GRAZING RIGHTS

SEC. 410. The Secretary shall permit those persons holding currently valid grazing permits within the boundary of the park to continue to exercise such permits consistent with other applicable law: Provided, however, that upon expiration of the current term of such permits, the permits shall not be renewed.

UTILITY RIGHTS OF WAY

SEC. 411. Nothing in this title shall have the effect of terminating any validity issued right-of-way or right-of-use within the boundary of the part issued, granted, or permitted for—

(a) systems for transmission or distribution of electric energy,

(b) pipelines for the transmission or distribution of natural gas or oil, and

(c) communication cables or lines.

PREPARATION OF MANAGEMENT PLAN

SEC. 412. Within three years of the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall submit to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives a detailed and comprehensive management plan for the park. Such plan shall place emphasis on historical and cultural sites and ecological and wilderness values within the boundaries of the park and shall evaluate the feasibility of using the Kelso Depot and existing railroad corridor to provide public access to and a facility for special interpretive, educational and scientific programs within the park.

GRANITE MOUNTAIN NATURAL RESERVE

SEC. 413. (a) There is hereby designated the Granite Mountains Natural Reserve within the park comprising approximately 9,000 acres as generally depicted on a map entitled "Granite Mountains Natural Reserve", dated January 1989.

(b) Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall enter into a cooperative management agreement with the University of California for the purposes of managing the lands within the Granite Mountains Natural Reserve. Such cooperative agreement shall ensure continuation of arid lands research and educational activities of the University of California, consistent with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

CONSTRUCTION OF VISITOR CENTER

SEC. 414. The Secretary is authorized to construct a visitor center in the park for the purpose of providing information through appropriate displays, printed material, and other interpretive programs, about the resources of the park.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS

SEC. 415. The Secretary is authorized to acquire all lands and interest in lands within the boundary of the park by donation, purchase, or exchange, except that—

(1) any lands or interests therein within the boundary of the park which are owned by the State of California, or any political subdivision thereof, may be acquired only by donation or exchange; and

(2) lands of interests therein within the boundary of the park which are not owned by the State of California or any political subdivision thereof may be acquired only with the consent of the owner thereof unless the Secretary determines, after written notice to the owner and after opportunity for comment, that the property is being developed, or proposed to be developed, in a manner which is detrimental to the integrity of the park or which is otherwise incompatible with the purposes of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 417. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

TITLE V—NATIONAL PARK WILDERNESS

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS

SEC. 501. The following lands are hereby designated as wilderness in accordance with section (3) of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890; 16 U.S.C. 1132(c)) and shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Wilderness Act:

(1) Death Valley National Park Wilderness, comprising approximately three million one hundred fifty-nine thousand seven hundred twenty acres, and potential wilderness additions comprising approximately twenty thousand four hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Death Valley National Park Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1987, and which shall be known as the Death Valley Wilderness;

(2) Joshua Tree National Park Wilderness Additions, comprising approximately one hundred thirty-three thousand five hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Joshua Tree National Park Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which are hereby incorporated in, and which shall be deemed to be a part of the Joshua Tree Wilderness as designated by Public Law 94-567; and

(3) Mojave National Park Wilderness, comprising approximately seven hundred forty-seven thousand nine hundred forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mojave National Park Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which shall be known as the Mojave Wilderness.

FILING OF MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 502. A map and description of the boundaries of the areas designated in section 501 of this title shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, and in the Office of the Superintendent of each area designated in section 501. As soon as practicable after this title takes effect, maps of the wilderness areas and descriptions of their boundaries shall be filed with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, and such maps and descriptions shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title: Provided, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in such maps and descriptions may be made.

CESSATION OF CERTAIN USES

SEC. 503. Any lands (in section 501 of this title) which represent potential wilderness additions upon publication in the Federal Register of a notice by the Secretary of the Interior that all uses thereon prohibited by the Wilderness Act have ceased, shall thereby be designated wilderness. Lands designated as potential wilderness additions shall be managed by the Secretary of the Interior insofar as practicable as wilderness until such time as said lands are designated as wilderness.

ADMINISTRATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS

SEC. 504. The areas designated by section 501 of this title as wilderness shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that title as wilderness, except that any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this title, and where appropriate, and reference to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deemed to be a reference to the Secretary of the Interior.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

TRANSFER OF LANDS TO RED ROCK CANYON STATE PARK

SEC. 601. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall transfer to the State of California certain lands within the California Desert Conservation Area, California, of the Bureau of Land Management, comprising approximately twenty thousand five hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Red Rock Canyon State Park Additions", dated January 1989, for inclusion in the State of California Park System. Should the State of California cease to manage these lands as part of the State park system, ownership of the lands shall revert to the Department of the Interior to be managed as part of the California Desert Conservation Area to provide maximum protection for the area's scenic and scientific values.

DESERT LILY SANCTUARY

SEC. 602. (a) There is hereby established the Desert Lily Santuary within the California Desert Conservation Area, California, of the Bureau of Land Management, comprising approximately two thousand and forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Desert Lily Sanctuary", dated February 1986. The Secretary of the Interior shall administer the area to provide maximum protection to the desert lily.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, federal lands within the sanctuary, and interests therein, are withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

INDIAN CANYONS NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

SEC. 603. (a) There is hereby established the Indian Canyons National Historic Site, comprising approximately four hundred and ninety acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Indian Canyons National Historic Site", dated February 1986.

(b) Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall enter into negotiations to acquire by exchange the privately owned lands or interests therein within the national historic site designated by subsection (a). The value of the properties so exchanged either shall be equal or, if they are not equal, the values shall be equalized by the payment of cash to the grantor or to the Secretary as the circumstances require.

(c) The Secretary shall enter into a cooperative management agreement with the Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians for the purposes of managing the Indian Canyons National Historic Site. Upon execution of the management agreement, the Secretary shall transfer title of the land to be held in trust for the Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians as part of the Agua Caliente Indian Reservation and such transfer shall remain effective so long as the agreement remains in force and in effect.

LAND TENURE ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 604. In preparing land tenure adjustment decisions within the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, the Secretary shall give priority to consolidating federal ownership within the national park units and wilderness areas designated by this Act.

STATE EXCHANGES

SEC. 605. (a) Upon the request of the State of California and pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall exchange public lands or interests in lands elsewhere in the State of California of approximately equal value and selected by the State of California, acting through the State Lands Commission, for any lands or interests therein owned by the State located within the boundaries of the wilderness or the parks which the State wishes to exchange with the United States.

(b) Within six months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall notify the Chairman of the State Lands Commission what state lands or interests therein are within the wilderness areas and national park units designated by this Act. The notice shall contain a listing of all public lands or interests therein within the boundaries of the State of California which have not been withdrawn from entry and which the Secretary, pursuant to the provisions of section 202 and 206 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, has identified as appropriate for transfer to the State in exchange for state lands. Such listing shall be updated at least annually.

(c) If the Chairman of the State Lands Commission gives notice to the Secretary of the State's desire to obtain public lands so listed, the Secretary shall notify the Chairman in writing whether the Department of the Interior considers the state lands within the wilderness areas and national park units to be of equal value to the list of lands the Chairman has indicated the State wishes to obtain. It is the sense of the Congress that the exchange of lands and interests therein with the State pursuant to this section should be completed within two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

MINERAL EXCHANGES

SEC. 606. (a) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to exchange the Federal mineral interests in lands within the State of California for private mineral interests in lands located within the boundaries of the wilderness areas and national park units designated by this Act if—

(1) the owner of such private mineral interests has made available to the Secretary all information requested by the Secretary as to the respective values of the private and Federal mineral interests to be exchanged; and

(2) on the basis of information obtained pursuant to paragraph (1) and any other information available, the Secretary has determined that the mineral interests to be exchanged are of approximately equal value; and

(3) the Secretary has determined—

(A) that except insofar as otherwise provided in this section, the exchange is not inconsistent with the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976; and

(B) that the exchange is in the public interests.

(b) The Secretary shall file a legal description of the mineral interest areas exchanged pursuant to this section with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior.

(c) It is the sense of the Congress that all exchanges pursuant to this section shall be completed no later than three years after the date of enactment of this Act.

NATIVE AMERICAN USES

SEC. 607. In recognition of the past use of the parks and wilderness areas by Indian people for traditional cultural and religious purposes, the Secretary shall insure nonexclusive access to the parks and wilderness areas by Indian people for such traditional cultural and religious purposes. Such access shall be consistent with the purpose and intent of the American Indian Religious Freedom Act of August 11, 1978 (42 U.S.C. 1996).

TITLE VII—MILITARY ACTIVITIES

MILITARY OVERFLIGHTS

SEC. 701. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) The national parks and wilderness areas designated by this Act lie within a region critical to providing training, research, and development for the Armed Forces of the United States and its allies;

(2) there is a lack of alternative sites available for these military training, testing and research activities;

(3) continued use of lands and airspace in the California desert region is essential for military purposes; and

(4) these military activities in the California desert have not impaired the natural and cultural values of the areas designated as parks and wilderness by this Act.

SEC. 702. Nothing in this Act, including the designation of new units of the National Park or Wilderness Preservation Systems (or any additions to existing units), shall preclude, limit, or otherwise affect low level overflights of military aircraft in the California Desert in approximately the same location and degree as existed prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

MILITARY WITHDRAWALS

SEC. 703. (a) CHINA LAKE.—(1) Subject to valid existing rights and except as otherwise provided in this title, the Federal lands referred to in paragraph (2), and all other areas within the boundary of such lands as depicted on the map specified in such paragraph which may become subject to the operation of the public land laws, are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the public land laws (including the mining laws and the mineral leasing laws). Such lands are reserved for use by the Secretary of the Navy for—

(A) use as a research, development, test, and evaluation laboratory;

(B) use as a range for air warfare weapons and weapon systems;

(C) use as a high hazard training area for aerial gunnery, rocketry, electronic warfare and countermeasures, tactical maneuvering and air support; and

(D) subject to the requirements of section 4(f), other defense-related purposes consistent with the purposes specified in this paragraph.

(2) The lands referred to in paragraph (1) are the Federal lands, located within the boundaries of the China Lake Naval Weapons Center, comprising approximately 1,100,000 acres in Inyo, Kern, and San Bernardino Counties, California, as generally depicted on a map entitled "China Lake Naval Weapons Center Withdrawal—Proposed", dated January 1985, and filed in accordance with section 704.

(b) CHOCOLATE MOUNTAINS.—(1) Subject to valid existing rights and except as otherwise provided in this title, the Federal lands referred to in paragraph (2), and all other areas within the boundary of such lands as depicted on the map specified in such paragraph which may become subject to the operation off the public land laws, are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the public land laws (including the mining laws and the mineral leasing and geothermal leasing laws.) Such lands are reserved for use by the Secretary of the Navy for—

(A) testing and training for aerial bombing, missile firing, tactical maneuvering and air support; and

(B) subject to the provisions of section 4(f), other defense-related purposes consistent with the purposes specified in this paragraph.

(2) The lands referred to in paragarph (1) are the Federal lands comprising approximately 227,369 acres in Imperial and Riverside Counties, California, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range Withdrawal" dated July 1987 and filed in accordance with section 704.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTIONS.

SEC. 702. (A) PUBLICATION AND FILING REQUIREMENT.—As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(1) publish in the Federal Register a notice containing the legal description of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this title; and

(2) file maps and the legal description of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this title with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives.

(b) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.—Such maps and legal descriptions shall have the same force and effect as if they were included in this title except that the Secretary of the Interior may correct clerical and typographical errors in such maps and legal descriptions.

(c) AVAILABILITY FOR PUBLIC INSPECTION.—Copies of such maps and legal descriptions shall be available for public inspection in the Office of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Washington, District of Columbia; the Office of the Director, California State Office of the Bureau of Land Management, Sacramento, California; the office of the commander of the Naval Weapons Center, China Lake, California; the office of the commanding officer, Marine Corps Air Station, Yuma, Arizona; and the Office of the Secretary of Defense, Washington, District of Columbia.

(d) REIMBURSEMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall reimburse the Secretary of the Interior for the cost of implementing this section.

MANAGEMENT OF WITHDRAWN LANDS

SEC. 705. (a) MANAGEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—(1) Except as provided in subsection (g), during the period of the withdrawal the Secretary of the Interior shall manage the lands withdrawn under section 701 pursuant to the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.) and other applicable law, including this title.

(2) To the extent consistent with applicable law and Executive orders, the lands withdrawn under section 703 may be managed in a manner permitting—

(A) the continuation of grazing pursuant to applicable law and Executive orders where permitted on the date of enactment of this title;

(B) protection of wildlife and wildlife habitat;

(C) control of predatory and other animals;

(D) recreation;

(E) the prevention and appropriate suppression of brush and range fires resulting from nonmilitary activities; and

(F) geothermal leasing on the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) (relating to China Lake).

(3)(A) All nonmilitary use of such lands, including uses described in paragraph (2), shall be subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be necessary to permit the military use of such lands for the purposes specified in or authorized pursuant to this title.

(B) the Secretary of the Interior may issue any lease, easement, right-of-way, or other authorization with respect to the nonmilitary use of such lands only with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy.

(b) CLOSURE TO PUBLIC.—(1) If the Secretary of the Navy determines that military operations, public safety, or national security require the closure to public use of any road, trail, or other portion of the lands withdrawn by this title, the Secretary of the Navy, after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, may take such action as the Secretary of the Navy determines necessary or desirable to effect and maintain such closure.

(2) Any such closure shall be limited to the minimum areas and periods which the Secretary of the Navy determines are required to carry out this subsection.

(3) Before and during any closure under this subsection, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(A) keep appropriate warning notices posted; and

(B) take appropriate steps to notify the public concerning such closures.

(c) MANAGEMENT PLAN.—The Secretary of the Interior (after consultation with the Secretary of the Navy) shall develop a plan for the management of each area withdrawn under section 703 during the period of such withdrawal. Each plan shall—

(1) be consistent with applicable law;

(2) be subject to conditions and restrictions specified in subsection (a)(3);

(3) include such provisions as may be necessary for proper management and protection of the resources and values of such area; and

(4) be developed not later than three years after the date of enactment of this title.

(d) BRUSH AND RANGE FIRES.—The Secretary of the Navy shall take necessary precautions to prevent and suppress brush and range fires occurring within and outside the lands withdrawn under section 703 as a result of military activities and may seek assistance from the Bureau of Land Management in the suppression of such fires. The memorandum of understanding required by subsection (e) shall provide for Bureau of Land Management assistance in the suppression of such fires, and for a transfer of funds from the Department of the Navy to the Bureau of Land Management as compensation for such assistance.

(e) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy shall (with respect to each land withdrawal under section 703) enter into a memorandum of understanding to implement the management plan developed under subsection (c). Any such memorandum of understanding shall provide that the Director of the Bureau of Land Management shall provide assistance in the suppression of fires resulting from the military use of lands withdrawn under section 703 if requested by the Secretary of the Navy.

(2) The duration of any memorandum shall be the same as the period of the withdrawal of the lands under section 703.

(f) ADDITIONAL MILITARY USES.—Lands withdrawn by section 703 may be used for defense-related uses other than those specified in such section. The Secretary of Defense shall promptly notify the Secretary of the Interior in the event that the lands withdrawn by this title will be used for defense-related purposes other than those specified in section 703. Such notification shall indicate the additional use or uses involved, the proposed duration of such uses, and the extent to which such additional military uses of the withdrawn lands will require that additional or more stringent conditions or restrictions be imposed on otherwise-permitted nonmilitary uses of the withdrawn land or portions thereof.

(g) MANAGEMENT OF CHINA LAKE.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior may assign the management responsibility for the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) to the Secretary of the Navy who shall manage such lands, and issue leases, easements, rights-of-way, and other authorizations, in accordance with this title and cooperative management arrangements between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy. In the case that the Secretary of the Interior assigns such management responsibility to the Secretary of the Navy before the development of the management plan under subsection (c), the Secretary of the Navy (after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior) shall develop such management plan.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior shall be responsible for the issuance of any lease, easement, right-of-way, and other authorization with respect to any activity which involves both the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) and any other lands. Any such authorization shall be issued only with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy and, to the extent that such activity involves lands withdrawn under section 703(a), shall be subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

(3) The Secretary of the Navy shall prepare and submit to the Secretary of the Interior an annual report on the status of the natural and cultural resources and values of the lands withdrawn under section 703(a). The Secretary of the Interior shall transmit such report to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate.

(4) Neither this title nor any other provision of law shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from issuing any lease for the development and utilization of geothermal steam and associated geothermal resources on the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) pursuant to the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.) but no such lease shall be issued without the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy.

(5) This title shall not affect the geothermal exploration and development authority of the Secretary of the Navy under section 2689 of title 10, United States Code, except that the Secretary of the Navy shall obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior before taking action under that section with respect to the lands withdrawn under section 703(a).

DURATION OF WITHDRAWALS

SEC. 706. (a) DURATION.—The withdrawal and reservation established by this title shall terminate 15 years after the date of enactment of this title.

(b) DRAFT ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENT.—No later than 12 years after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Navy shall publish a draft environmental impact statement concerning continued or renewed withdrawal of any portion of the lands withdrawn by this title for which the Secretary intends to seek such continued or renewed withdrawal. Such draft environmental impact statement shall be consistent with the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (41 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) applicable to such a draft environmental impact statement. Prior to the termination date specified in subsection (a), the Secretary of the Navy shall hold a public hearing on any draft environmental impact statement. Such hearing shall be held in the State of California in order to receive public comments on the alternatives and other matters included in such draft environmental impact statement.

(c) EXTENSIONS OF RENEWALS.—The withdrawals established by this title may not be extended or renewed except by an Act or joint resolution.

ONGOING DECONTAMINATION

SEC. 707. (a) PROGRAM.—Throughout the duration of the withdrawals made by this title, the Secretary of the Navy, to the extent funds are made available, shall maintain a program of decontamination of lands withdrawn by this title at lease at the level of decontamination activities performed on such lands in fiscal year 1986.

(b) REPORTS.—At the same time as the President transmits to the Congress the President's proposed budget for the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this title and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary of the Navy shall transmit to the Committees on Appropriations, Armed Services, and Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and to the Committees on Appropriations, Armed Services, and Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives a description of the decontamination efforts undertaken during the previous fiscal year on such lands and the decontamination activities proposed for such lands during the next fiscal year including:

(1) amounts appropriated and obligated or expended for decontamination of such lands;

(2) the methods used to decontaminate such lands;

(3) amount and types of contaminants removed from such lands;

(4) estimated types and amounts of residual contamination on such lands; and

(5) an estimate of the costs for full decontamination of such lands and the estimate of the time to complete such decontamination.

REQUIREMENTS FOR RENEWAL

SEC. 708. (a) NOTICE AND FILING.—(1) No later than three years prior to the termination of the withdrawal and reservation established by this title, the Secretary of the Navy shall advise the Secretary of the Interior as to whether or not the Secretary of the Navy will have a continuing military need for any of the lands withdrawn under section 703 after the termination date of such withdrawal and reservation.

(2) If the Secretary of the Navy concludes that there will be a continuing military need for any of such lands after the termination date, the Secretary shall file an application for extension of the withdrawal and reservation of such needed lands in accordance with the regulations and procedures of the Department of the Interior applicable to the extension of withdrawals of lands for military uses.

(3) If, during the period of withdrawal and reservation, the Secretary of the Navy decides to relinquish all or any of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this title, the Secretary shall file a notice of intention to relinquish with the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) CONTAMINATION.—(1) Before transmitting a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense, acting through the Department of Navy, shall prepare a written determination concerning whether and to what extent the lands that are to be relinquished are contaminated with explosive, toxic, or other hazardous materials.

(2) A copy of such determination shall be transmitted with the notice of intention to relinquish.

(3) Copies of both the notice of intention to relinquish and the determination concerning the contaminated state of the lands shall be published in the Federal Register by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) DECONTAMINATION.—If any land which is the subject of a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a) is contaminated, the Secretary of the Navy, determines that decontamination is practicable and economically feasible (taking into consideration the potential future use and value of the land) and that upon decontamination, the land could be opened to operation of some of all of the public land laws, including the mining laws, the Secretary of the Navy shall decontaminate the land to the extent that funds are appropriated for such purpose.

(d) ALTERNATIVES.—If the Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the Secretary of the Navy, concludes that decontamination of any land which is the subject of a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a) is not practicable or economically feasible, or that the land cannot be decontaminated sufficiently to be opened to operation of some or all of the public land laws, of if Congress does not appropriate a sufficient amount of funds for the decontamination of such land, the Secretary of the Interior shall not be required to accept the land proposed for relinquishment.

(e) STATUS OF CONTAMINATED LANDS.—If, because of their contaminated state, the Secretary of the Interior declines to accept jurisdiction over lands withdrawn by this title which have been proposed for relinquishment, or if at the expiration of the withdrawal made by this title the Secretary of the Interior determines that some of the lands withdrawn by this title are contaminated to an extent which prevents opening such contaminated lands to operation of the public land laws—

(1) the Secretary of the Navy shall take appropriate steps to warn the public of the contaminated state of such lands and any risks associated with entry onto such lands;

(2) after the expiration of the withdrawal, the Secretary of the Navy shall undertake no activities on such lands except in connection with decontamination of such lands; and

(3) the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Congress concerning the status of such lands and all actions taken in furtherance of this subsection.

(f) REVOCATION AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior, upon deciding that it is in the public interest to accept jurisdiction over lands proposed for relinquishment pursuant to subsection (a), is authorized to revoke the withdrawal and reservation established by this title as it applies to such lands. Should the decision be made to revoke the withdrawal and reservation, the Secretary of the Interior shall publish in the Federal Register an appropriate order which shall—

(1) terminate the withdrawal and reservation;

(2) constitute official acceptance of full jurisdiction over the lands by the Secretary of the Interior;

(3) state the date upon which the lands will be opened to the operation of some or all of the public land laws, including the mining laws.

DELEGABILITY

SEC. 709. (a) DEFENSE.—The functions of the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the Navy under this title may be delegated.

(b) INTERIOR.—The functions of the Secretary of the Interior under this title may be delegated, except that an order described in section 708(f) may be approved and signed only by the Secretary of the Interior, the Under Secretary of the Interior, or an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

HUNTING, FISHING, AND TRAPPING

SEC. 710. All hunting, fishing, and trapping on the lands withdrawn by this title shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 2671 of title 10, United States Code.

IMMUNITY OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 711. The United States and all departments or agencies thereof shall be held harmless and shall not be liable for any injuries or damages to person or property suffered in the course of any geothermal leasing or other authorized nonmilitary activity conducted on lands described in section 703 of this title.

EL CENTRO RANGES

SEC. 712. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit the Secretary of the Navy to use until January 1, 1990 the public lands in Imperial County, California, generally depicted on the map entitled "El Centro Ranges" dated July 1987, for the same purposes and to no greater extent than such lands were used by the Secretary of the Navy as of July 1, 1987. Such permission shall be through a cooperative agreement or other appropriate means. Such use shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may require so as to protect the natural, environmental, scientific, cultural, and other resources and values of such lands and to minimize the extent to which such use by the Secretary of the Navy impedes or restricts use of such or other public lands for recreational and other purposes.

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 12. A bill to establish a Parents as Partners in Learning Program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human resources.

PARENTS AS PARTNERS IN LEARNING ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, today I introduce for appropriate reference the Parents as Partners in Learning Act of 1989. As the title suggests, the bill is designed to bring parents more fully into the learning process as active participants in the academic achievement of their children, rather than as persons whose place in the life of the school is marked by an occasional PTA meeting or help with a bake sale. This bill is about parents who help with homework, who provide a quiet place each night for a child to study, who make sure their children get enough sleep and get to school on time, and who spend daily time reading to their children.

Quite a commitment? Yes, and the results can be extraordinary. In fact, hundreds of California parents, now involved in a program called the "quality education project," are making such a commitment and having the time of their lives. As their enthusiasm and involvement increases, the academic achievement of their children accelerates. In turn, the school is enlivened and enriched. In the schools where QEP is operating, the families' place in the learning process is both accepted and well-defined. As a result, there is a synergism between parents and the school that is bringing about greater academic achievement for the student.

We have known for a long time that the attitude of the parent toward a child's education is important to success in school. In fact, the link between achievement and family environment—as several studies have pointed out—is a key factor in educational success. Yet the role of the family is generally overlooked when we talk about education reform. Most of the recent major education reports do not mention families as a factor in education success and only one or two make any recommendation for school reform based on involving parents.

This is more than just an oversight. It is a misreading of psychology, sociology, anthropology, and contemporary history. There was a time in our society when learning was thought to occur almost entirely in school. But television and the information age—and the increasing education level of parents themselves—have changed all that. Much, much learning occurs outside of the classroom. Too, society expects more than academic success from schools, and many of these expectations center around addressing problems thought traditionally within the total purview of the family. Child care, drug abuse, and sexuality issues are just a few of the problems that every American school must consider as thoughtfully as the strategies for learning math and science.

To not be a part of the problem, the family must be a part of the solution.

When the National Center on Education Statistics surveyed 60,000 high school students between 1980-82, NCES found that 32 percent of students with an "A" average said that their parents helped them decide what courses to take while only 13 percent of "C" students reported such parent help. Two-thirds of the "A" students in the study said their parents met with or telephoned the teacher when a learning issue arose, but less than half of the "C" students reported that kind of communication between family and school. The study also found that parent membership in a parent-teacher organization or parent help with school activities had no discernable effect on good grades. What helped with good grades was parent involvement in the day-to-day learning process and a communications program—between teachers and parents and administrators and parents—that was clear, regular, and that reflected respect for parents.

California's quality education project, founded in 1982, is not-for-profit corporation design specifically to bring parents together with teachers and administrators to help raise student achievement, especially for at-risk students. The QEP's premise is that parents will actively support their children's education if they are shown how to do so effectively; that parents will support the school—no matter what their cultural, socioeconomic, language, or educational background—when they feel accepted, cared about, and respected; and that a parent involvement program is successful in direct proportion to the belief and commitment of school leadership and staff. Also critical to success in the view of QEP is a specific plan with supporting materials and evaluation and accountability components

Working in some of the areas of greatest poverty in California, QEP has successfully involved disadvantaged families in their children's school. In one school district in Los Angeles county, the QEP Program raised attendance at parent/teacher conferences by 1272, a 16 percent increase; more than 10,400 additional children took home weekly folders of academic work for review by parents; over 8,000 parents signed pledges promising to participate in school activities and to help their children succeed academically. For 2 successive years in that district, scores on statewide student achievement tests increased.

The basics of QEP can be used to build model projects anywhere in the country: First, home activities where parents can reinforce what is learned at school; second, effective home/school communication which leads to the family supporting the school; and third, parenting skills to help parents interact more positively with their children at home. The fundamental concepts here are clear goals, intelligent marketing, and accountability. As the QEP record shows, they work.

Mr. President, the Parents as Partners in Learning Act is a very simple bill with a modest dollar authorization. The basic components of a model project under this bill are clear and uncomplicated. Applicants for grants must assess the present extent and quality of parent involvement and state clear objectives for each year of the project. A strong communications component must be set forth to increase family understanding and support of the school. Training must be provided to enable parents to build positive relationships with their children that will bolster academic success. There must be continuing community outreach activities in order to develop community support for the schools. Strong evaluation and dissemination components are required.

The grant requirements provide a structure within which local needs can be met while assuring success through proven means. Grants under the act are to be made in settings that reflect the diversity of this country in order that they may serve as models for other parts of the Nation with similar characteristics.

The Federal authorization is set at $20 million for each of 4 fiscal years. However, the Federal contribution is designed to get initial projects off the ground, rather than to provide ongoing major financial support. Federal support declines each year as projects become self-supporting. When designed with the key components in mind, these projects can demonstrate a degree of success that will assure their becoming a valuable and continuing part of the school program far beyond the end of Federal support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of the Parents as Partners in Learning Act be printed at this point in the RECORD, followed by the text of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

Section 1 of the bill designates the Act as "Parents as Partners in Learning Act of 1989"

SECTION 2. PURPOSE

Section 2 sets forth the purposes of the Act, including programs in parent involvement, communications between home and school, teacher training, and programs in building community support for schools.

SECTION 3. FINDINGS

Section 3 sets forth various Congressional findings in support of the Act.

SECTION 4. GRANTS AUTHORIZED

Section 4 authorizes the Secretary of Education to make grants under the Act to eligible applicants and establishes priority considerations for the awarding of grants.

SECTION 5. APPLICATION

Section 5 sets forth criteria for the design of applications for grants under the Act.

SECTION 6. USE OF FUNDS

Section 6 describes how funds awarded under the Act may be used.

SECTION 7. ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL ADVISORY RESOURCE CENTER

Section 7 directs the Secretary to establish a National Advisory Center for Parents as Partners in Learning in order to provide technical assistance, staff training, and model materials in support of Parents as Partners in Learning programs. This section also establishes criteria for a nonprofit organization which will operate the Center.

SECTION 8. EVALUATION AND DISSEMINATION

Section 8 requires the Secretary to conduct annual evaluations and to disseminate materials.

SECTION 9. PAYMENTS

Section 9 sets forth federal share criteria for payments under the Act.

SECTION 10. DEFINITION

Section 10 sets forth definitions of eligible applicants for grants under the Act.

SECTION 11. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Section 11 authorizes expenditures under the Act through fiscal year 1993.

S. 12

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited "Parents as Partners in Learning Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to build effective parent involvement in schools in order to help raise student achievement;

(2) to positively engage parents in their children's education;

(3) to build consistent and effective communications between home and school so that parents may know their children's progress in all aspects of school life;

(4) to train teachers to communicate effectively with parents;

(5) to train parents in home strategies for raising their children's academic success; and

(6) to train administrators and teachers in building support for schools in the community.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the understanding and active support of parents for all aspects of schooling is important if children are to succeed academically;

(2) parents will support the school, regardless of cultural, socio-economic, language or education background, when parents feel accepted, cared about, and respected;

(3) parents will actively support their children's education when shown how to do so effectively; and

(4) a parent involvement program is successful in direct proportion to the belief and commitment of the school leadership and staff and to the extent that a specific plan with supporting materials, evaluation, and accountability components are provided.

SEC. 4. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

(a) GRANTS AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to eligible applicants to design and carry out projects that seek to build effective parent involvement in the education of their children in order to raise student achievement. In making grants under this Act, the Secretary shall take into consideration regional, cultural, and ethnic diversity within the United States.

(b) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under this Act the Secretary shall give priority to eligible applicants whose applications—

(1) demonstrate the potential to serve as models for dissemination to other entities wishing to develop parent participation in schools; and

(2) describe programs which serve families in greatest need of assistance.

SEC. 5. APPLICATION.

Each eligible applicant desiring to receive a grant under this Act shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

(1) describe the activities and services for which assistance is sought;

(2) contain an assessment of the extent and quality of parent involvement in the school;

(3) include clear, written objectives and desired outcomes for each year of the project;

(4) contain assurances of frequent and regular communications between teachers and parents and between administrators and parents, including consideration of the specific language and literacy needs of the parents; and

(5) contain such information and assurances as the Secretary may require to ensure compliance with the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. USE OF FUNDS.

Each eligible applicant may use funds provided under this Act to—

(1) provide for home activities where parents can reinforce skills learned at school;

(2) provide parents with training to enable parents to build positive relationships with their children and to communicate successfully with teachers and administrators;

(3) conduct regular and ongoing community outreach activities which develop support for the community's schools;

(4) evaluate program progress in meeting stated objectives; and

(5) disseminate information about successful strategies and materials.

SEC. 7. ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY RESOURCE CENTER CONCERNING PARENTS AS PARTNERS IN LEARNING.

(a) NATIONAL ADVISORY RESOURCE CENTER.—The Secretary shall, by grant or contract with a nonprofit organization, establish and operate a National Advisory Center for Parents as Partners in Learning (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Center"). The Center shall provide—

(1) technical assistance in developing model Parents as Partners in Learning programs;

(2) staff training for Parents as Partners in Learning programs; and

(3) model materials for Parents as Partners in Learning program implementation.

(b) LIMITATION.—The non-profit organization described in subsection (a) shall—

(1) be expressly incorporated for the purpose of improving the scholastic achievement of students by bringing parents into an active role in their children's education;

(2) be of proven experience and effectiveness in designing and carrying out such programs; and

(3) have previously implemented a statewide program.

SEC. 8. EVALUATION AND DISSEMINATION.

The Secretary shall conduct an annual evaluation of grants made under this Act and shall disseminate such information.

SEC. 9. PAYMENTS.

(a) PAYMENTS.—(1) The Secretary shall pay to each eligible applicant having an application approved under section 5, the Federal share of the cost of the activities described in the application.

(2) The Federal share—

(A) for the first year in which the State receives funds under this Act shall be 90 percent;

(B) for the second such year shall be 75 percent;

(C) for the third such year shall be 50 percent; and

(D) for the fourth such year and each succeeding year thereafter shall be 33⅓ percent.

(b) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of payments under this Act may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services.

SEC. 10. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) The term "eligible applicant" means one or more of the following:

(A) a local educational agency;

(B) an individual school;

(C) a nonprofit private organization;

(D) an institution of higher education;

(E) a business concern; or

(F) a State educational agency.

(2) The term "parent" includes a legal guardian or other person standing in loco parentis.

(3) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

SEC. 11. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this Act, $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, and $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1993.

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 13. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans and survivors to increase the allowances paid to disabled veterans pursuing rehabilitation programs and to the dependents and survivors of certain disabled veterans pursuing programs of education, and to improve various programs of benefits and health care services for veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS BENEFITS AND HEALTH CARE ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the Chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am today introducing S. 13, the proposed "Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989." I am delighted to note that I am joined by Veterans' Affairs Committee members Senators MATSUNAGA, DECONCINI, and ROCKEFELLER.

Mr. President, this bill has as its basic purposes the provision of cost-of-living increases in certain benefits paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities, and to certain dependents and survivors of such veterans and the continued maintenance and improvement of the VA programs of benefits and services for our Nation's veterans and their dependents. In view of my very strong concern that we must continue our efforts to reduce the Federal deficit, this legislation seeks to find ways to improve VA programs without incurring any significant new costs.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. President, this measure contains 21 substantive provisions which would:

First, provide, effective December 1, 1989, for a cost-of-living adjustment [COLA], equivalent to and effective on the same date as the COLA which will be provided for Social Security benefits, in VA compensation paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities and in disability and indemnity compensation paid to certain survivors of such veterans.

Second, provide, effective January 1, 1990, a 13.8-percent COLA in the allowances paid to certain service-connected-disabled veterans' dependents or survivors pursuing educational programs under chapter 35 of title 38.

Third, provide, effective January 1, 1990, a 13.8-percent COLA in the allowances paid to service-connected disabled veterans participating in programs of rehabilitation under chapter 31 of title 38.

Fourth, expand the annual clothing allowance provided to veterans so as to include cases in which veterans with certain service-connected skin conditions use medications which stain their clothing.

Fifth, provide that monthly pension payments to hospitalized veterans with no dependents could not be reduced until the veteran has been hospitalized for 8 months—with the Chief Medical Director authorized to extend that period, for no more than two 2-month periods, upon determining that the veteran is likely to be released from the hospital in a reasonable period of time—and raise the limit on such reduced pension payments from $60 to $105.

Sixth, extend the veterans' readjustment appointment authority for Civil Service appointments for 2 years, through December 31, 1991, for Vietnam-era veterans who (a) have a service-connected disability, or (b) served in the Vietnam theater of operations.

Seventh, expand the VA's multiyear procurement authority to include the purchase of non-health-care supplies and services.

Eighth, require the VA to furnish post-traumatic stress disorder—PTSD—treatment to a veteran who served in a theater of combat operations and whom a VA mental health professional has diagnosed as suffering from service-related PTSD.

Ninth, mandate that the VA's Special Committee on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder submit concurrently to the VA and the two Congressional Veterans' Affairs Committees three reports—the first, due June 1, 1989, giving the Special Committee's evaluation of the results of the study mandated by Public Law 98-160 on the prevalence and incidence of PTSD among Vietnam veterans, and the second and third, due February 1 of 1991 and 1992, respectively, updating prior reviews of the VA's efforts to meet the needs of veterans with PTSD.

Tenth, require the VA to carry out a scientifically-valid study of post-war psychological problems—including PTSD—among Asian-American, American-Indian, Native-Hawaiian, other Native-American Pacific Islander—including American-Samoan Native—and Alaska Native Vietnam veterans.

Eleventh, require the VA to submit, as part of its annual budget documents, detailed information on funds that are estimated to be spent for compensation for PTSD, PTSD treatment, and other PTSD-related VA efforts.

Twelfth, require the VA to furnish services to a service-connected-disabled veteran or the spouse of such a veteran to achieve pregnancy, for example through artificial insemination or in vitro fertilization, in cases in which the veteran's service-connected disability impairs procreative ability.

Thirteenth, modify the existing authority pursuant to which compensated work therapy [CWT] programs are carried out in the VA so as to (a) allow such programs to contract with government entities—including the VA, as well as with the private-industry sources specified in current law, for the work that the patients do, and (b) to allow funds from the revolving fund which supports the CWT program to be used for training and related management functions, including travel, necessary for the operation of the CWT program.

Fourteenth, extend for 3 years, through September 30, 1992, the authorization of such annual appropriations as are necessary for State Veterans' Home construction grants.

Fifteenth, require the VA (a) to carry out a 4-year pilot program under which it would (1) provide specially trained monkeys to no more that 20 veterans who have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more disabling and are quadriplegic, (2) allow the VA to provide up to 10 specially trained service dogs to such quadriplegic veterans who would benefit from the assistance provided by such dogs, and (3) facilitate the provision of monkeys to no more than 20 other veterans who are quadriplegic; and (b) to conduct an evaluation of this program.

Sixteenth, require the VA (a) to conduct a pilot program for the provision of dogs specially trained to provide hearing assistance to individuals who are deaf to no more than 20 veterans with service-connected hearing impairments who are in need of the assistance of such dogs, and (b) to conduct an evaluation of this program.

Seventeenth, require (a) that the Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs who is responsible for management, productivity, and logistic support functions be responsible for the technical and functional supervision—but not the day-to-day supervision or line management—of Security Services at VA medical facilities; and (b) the VA, within 90 days after enactment, to submit a report containing (1) a plan for upgrading its security police training, recruitment, and salaries, and (2) an evaluation of the need for (A) establishing a policy on weapons for VAMC's in high-crime areas, and (B) reducing VA security police services in certain VA facilities with no significant security problems.

Eighteenth, revise the VA's authority to enter into agreements for sharing scarce medical resources so as to (a) expand the categories of facilities with which the VA may enter into sharing agreements to include all health-care facilities, (b) delete the requirement that reimbursement rates cover full costs and substitute the standard used in section 5011 of title 38 for VA-Department of Defense sharing agreements, which provides appropriate flexibility after costs are taken into account, and (c) provide that payments for the use of VA resources be returned to the VA facility involved.

Nineteenth, provide that labor-management standards affecting title 38 employees—principally physicians, dentists, and nurses—are generally the same as those for title 5 employees.

Twentieth, provide that the procedures in title 5 for the resolution of specified lesser disciplinary actions—admonishments, reprimands, suspensions of 14 days or less, and transfers not involving loss of grade—generally would be used in cases involving title 38 VA health-care personnel, and create in title 38 a grievance-resolution process for title 38 employees that parallels that available to title 5 employees.

Twenty-first, require the head of the VA to establish a task force to identify inconsistencies among certain provisions of law (sections 601(6), 612, 614, 617, and 619 of title 38) relating to eligibility for certain health-care benefits and to recommend legislation to remedy the inconsistencies.

COMPENSATION/DIC COLA

Section 101 of the bill would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to make a cost-of-living adjustment [COLA], effective December 1, 1989, in the rates of compensation paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation [DIC] paid to the survivors of those who have died as a result of service-connected disabilities and to the survivors of certain veterans who died while totally and permanently disabled as the result of service-connected disabilities. The COLA would be at the same percentage as that which will be provided to Social Security recipients and VA pension beneficiaries effective the same date. The Office of Management and Budget currently estimates that this rate will be 3.6 percent; the Congressional Budget Office estimates that it will be 4.9 percent. These increased benefits would actually be paid beginning on January 1, 1990.

Mr. President, I believe that we must attach the highest priority to meeting the needs of the 2.2 million veterans with service-connected disabilities and the 328,000 survivors of those who have made the final sacrifice. This is and always has been my number one priority in veterans' affairs. Through COLA's, we can ensure that the value of these service-connected VA benefits is not eroded by inflation.

Mr. President, Congress has acted periodically to provide COLA's in compensation and DIC benefits in order to ensure that those benefits keep pace with inflation. In fact, Congress has provided for annual increases in these rates every fiscal year since 1976. I urge my colleagues to continue in their support for annual COLA increases for these veterans benefits.

INCREASES IN REHABILITATION AND EDUCATIONAL ALLOWANCES

Mr. President, sections 102 and 103 of S. 13 would provide, effective January 1, 1990, for a 13.8-percent increase in the rates of, first, the subsistence allowance paid under chapter 31 of title 38 to certain veterans with service-connected disabilities who are participating in programs of rehabilitation, and, second, the educational assistance allowance paid under chapter 35 of title 38 to certain dependents and survivors of service-connected disabled veterans who are pursuing programs of education. The increases provided by this measure are consistent with the fiscal year 1990 budget recommendations that I will propose for adoption by the Veterans' Affairs Committee next month in connection with the report of this fiscal year 1990 budget views and estimates to be transmitted to the Budget Committee.

Under the chapter 31 program, veterans who have compensable service-connected disabilities and employment handicaps are provided with programs of vocational rehabilitation and with such other rehabilitation services as are needed to restore their ability to function as independently as possible in their communities. The VA estimates that 23,200 disabled veterans will use chapter 31 bnenefits in fiscal year 1990. While participating in training as part of a program of vocational rehabilitation and for 2 months after the completion of training, chapter 31 participants receive a subsistence allowance, currently $310 a month for a veteran without dependents in order to assist with expenses such as transportation, food, and housing.

The chapter 35, survivors' and dependents' educational assistance, program provides benefits to the children—generally those between 18 and 26 years old—and spouses of veterans who died of service-connected disability or whose service-connected disability is rated permanent and total. In addition, dependents of servicepersons missing in action or interned by a hostile foreign government for more than 90 days are also eligible under this program. Currently, the monthly rate for full-time institutional training is $376, which assists in defraying the costs of tuition, fees, transportation, books, room, board, and other items of subsistence. The VA estimates that 41,900 individuals will pursue an educational program under chapter 35 in fiscal year 1990.

Mr. President, Congress last increased the allowances under chapters 31 and 35, effective October 1, 1984, through the enactment of legislation—derived from a proposal I authored—in Public Law 98-543. According to data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Consumer Price Index rose 13.8 percent from the end of 1984, through December 1988. Disabled veterans in vocational rehabilitation programs require a cost-of-living adjustment in their subsistence allowances in order to offset the increased costs of subsistence and transportation. Survivors and dependents of service-connected disabled veterans using chapter 35 educational assistance are faced with even greater expenses. The Department of Education reports that the costs of tuition, fees, room, and board associated with higher education continue to increase dramatically. In fact, from 1984 through 1988, the cost of higher education has increased 18 percent for public colleges and universities and 28 percent for private institutions. The increase in assistance to chapter 35 participants would help their benefits keep up with today's costs of education and training.

Mr. President, in view of these rising costs, I believe that the proposed 13.8-percent increase is fully justified to maintain adequate financial support for individuals whose readjustment following either a service-connected injury or the death of a spouse or parent is primarily dependent on further education and training. I note that—in recognition of the need for fiscal austerity—this 13.8-percent increase does not include an estimate of further inflation—probably in the realm of 4 percent—that will occur during calendar year 1989.

EXPANSION OF CLOTHING ALLOWANCE

Section 111 of the bill would expand the clothing allowance authorized under section 362 of title 38—which currently is payable to a veteran who, because of service-connected disability, wears or uses a prosthetic or orthopedic appliance—including a wheelchair—which the Secretary determines tends to wear out or tear the veteran's clothing—so as to include cases in which veterans use medication prescribed for a service-connected skin condition which stains or otherwise damages the veteran's clothing.

Medication used to treat certain skin conditions can cause stains which cannot be removed. However, although current law authorizes a clothing allowance to be paid for damage to clothing resulting from use of prosthetic or orthopedic appliances, it does not cover damage resulting from medication prescribed for a service-connected skin condition.

This provision was included in legislation the Veterans' Affairs Committee reported last year in S. 2011 and the Senate passed in H.R. 4741 on October 18, 1988. Unfortunately, the House would not accept an expanded clothing allowance in our negotiations on H.R. 4741 last year. Therefore, I am again introducing this provision with the hope that my colleagues in the House will accept it this year if it is passed by the Senate again.

REDUCTION OF PENSION CUTOFF FOR HOSPITALIZED VETERANS

Mr. President, section 112 of the bill would protect the pension benefits of certain hospitalized veterans who are reasonably likely to be released from the hospital and returned to the community.

Section 3203(a) of title 38 provides that, when veterans who have no dependents and who are receiving nonservice-connected need-based pensions are hospitalized in a VA facility, their pension benefits will generally be reduced to no more than $60 per month after 3 months of hospitalization. The rationale behind this provision is that the Government, through the provision of medical care, food and shelter, already is providing for the basic needs of the veteran and a need-based pension is not warranted while the veteran remains hospitalized for an extended period of time.

In many cases, however, hospitalized veterans retain significant financial responsibilities. For those who later are released from the hospital, the reduction in pension benefits can mean the difference between the ability to return to an independent life and being overwhelmed by financial obligations which mounted during the hospital stay. The largest continuing expense generally is for rent. By definition veterans receiving need-based VA pension benefits lack financial resources and thus are not likely to have sufficient income or assets—aside from their pensions—from which to pay their rent. Without their pension payments, they thus are likely to be forced through lack of income to give up their living situations. Yet, they also would not have the resources to pay the security deposit and any advance rent required for a new apartment they will need upon release from the hospital, or to meet other financial obligations which may have continued despite their hospitalization.

An exception—consisting of a 3-month delay of the pension reduction—is provided in section 3203(a)(D) for veterans hospitalized longer than three months who are receiving from the VA a prescribed program of rehabilitation under chapter 17 of title 38. Many veterans, however, do not need such a rehabilitation program—for example, spinal-cord injured veterans who develop skin ulcerations which require fairly long periods of hospitalized treatment do not need any training to enable them to function in the community. These veterans thus could not receive the benefit of this exception.

To deal with these situations, section 112 of our bill would extend the period of hospitalization permitted before pension benefits are reduced. The current-law cutoff of 3 months would be extended to 8 months. In addition, the Secretary would be authorized to grant a 4-month extension—that is, suspend the reduction—where he determines that a veteran who has been hospitalized for 8 months is likely to be released in a reasonably short period of time.

These new provisions would not apply to veterans residing in VA nursing homes, since the likelihood of release to the community for nursing home patients who are not receiving primarily rehabilitative services is very small in such instances.

The $60 amount to which benefits are reduced at some point in institutionalization also would be increased to allow for the effects of inflation. That amount has not been increased since 1979. Allowing for inflation, its present-day value is $105 and the bill would raise the $60 limit to $105. I have not yet received a cost estimate of this provision from the Congressional Budget Office. However, depending on the cost estimate and the amount available within the Committee's crosswalk allocation under section 302(b) of the Budget Act, the $105 figure may have to be revised.

EXTENSION OF VETERANS' READJUSTMENT APPOINTMENT AUTHORITY

Mr. President, section 113 would extent for 2 years, through December 31, 1991, the authority set forth in section 2014(b) of title 38, United States Code, for Veterans' Readjustment Appointments [VRA's] for Vietnam-era veterans who have compensable service-connected disabilities—that is, those rated at least 10-percent disabling—or were discharged because of a service-connected disability or who served in the Vietnam theater.

The VRA authority, which would otherwise expire on December 31, 1989, currently permits certain service-disabled Vietnam-era veterans and educationally disadvantaged Vietnam-era veterans to be given excepted appointments in the Federal civil service. The purpose of the VRA authority is to assist these veterans by making it possible for them to be hired noncompetitively into the Federal civil service and to develop additional skills through a program combining education and training with the opportunity for a regular career appointment. The proposed extension would apply to Vietnam theater veterans and those Vietnam-era veterans with compensable service-connected disabilities or those discharged because of a service-connected disability.

The VRA authority was originally created on March 26, 1970, by Executive Order No. 11521 which established a special civil service appointment authority for certain veterans and disabled veterans of the Vietnam era who were discharged after April 9, 1969. In 1973, I authored legislation, based on the Executive order, enacted in Public Law 93-508, which codified the VRA authority as section 2014(b) of title 38 and provided for the continuation of the program through June 30, 1978. Under these original provisions, in order to be considered for an appointment, a qualified veteran must have enrolled in a program of education within 1 year after release from active duty and have had no more than 14 years of education, served on active duty during the Vietnam era, and generally have been separated from the service for 1 year or less. Such a veteran could be given a VRA for any position in the competitive service at or below the General Schedule-5—GS-5—level or its equivalent. A veteran who had satisfactorily completed 2 years of substantially continuous service under a VRA and an education or training program was converted to career conditional employment and automatically acquired a competitive status for civil service purposes.

In the ensuing years, I have been actively involved in extending and refining this authority. In 1978, I authored provisions, enacted in Public Law 95-520, which extended the authority through September 30, 1981. These provisions also extended eligibility to all Vietnam-era veterans with no more than 14 years of education, not just those separated after April 9, 1969, and eliminated the maximum limitation on the number of years of education for Vietnam-era veterans with compensable service-connected disabilities and those who were discharged or released because of a service-connected disability. In addition, that measure raised the grade-level limitation for VRA's from GS-5 to GS-7, expanded requirements for reporting on the use of this authority, and extended the program to September 30, 1981.

In 1981, I authored in the Senate provisions, enacted in Public Law 97-72, that further extended the authority through September 30, 1984. Later in 1984, I authored provisions, enacted in Public Law 98-543, that led to the extension of the authority through September 30, 1986, raised the grade-level limitation from GS-7 to GS-9 and provided veterans who receive VRA appointments with certain appeal rights to the Merit Systems Protection Board during the first year of employment. In 1986, I authored legislation, enacted in Public Law 99-576, extending the VRA authority until December 31, 1989.

Mr. President, the success of the VRA program is evident in the 279,228 veterans hired under the VRA authority since its inception in 1970. In fiscal year 1987 alone, 12,912 veterans were given appointments. Over 80 percent of veterans who have received VRA's have converted to career conditional employment status in the civil service system. In addition, the VRA is one of many successful veterans programs that have contributed to a reduced unemployment rate for Vietnam-era veterans, which—according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics—is only 3.7 percent compared to the 5.3 percent national rate as of November 1988.

Mr. President, I note that the Office of Personnel Management's Annual Report to Congress on Veterans' Employment in the Federal Government for fiscal year 1987 states that only 12 percent of the veterans hired under the VRA were disabled veterans. In addition, only 3 percent of Federal new hires were disabled veterans. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics study of unemployment among certain disabled veterans and Vietnam theater veterans required under section 9 of Public Law 100-323, the Veterans' Employment, Training, and Counseling Amendments of 1988, disabled veterans experience higher unemployment rates than do other veterans—6.2 percent veterans 4.7 percent. Furthermore, individuals who served in the Vietnam theater of operations have a higher unemployment rate than those who served elsewhere during the Vietnam era—5.2 versus 4.3 percent.

Mr. President, although the VRA is scheduled to expire on December 31 of this year, because of the continuing difficulties that service-disabled Vietnam-era veterans and Vietnam-era veterans who served in the Vietnam theater are experiencing in the job market I do not believe Congress should allow it to expire for these groups. Hence, we are proposing a 2-year VRA extension targeted specifically on disabled and theater veterans of the Vietnam-era.

EXPANSION OF MULTIYEAR PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY TO INCLUDE NONMEDICAL ITEMS

Mr. President, section 121 of the bill would expand—to include nonmedical items—the multiyear procurement authority that was enacted with respect to medical-care items in section 404 of Public Law 100-322, on May 20, 1988. This provision is derived from S. 2306, Administration proposed-legislation I introduced by request on April 21, 1988, and section 705 of H.R. 4741 as passed by the Senate on October 18, 1988, to provide the VA with multiyear procurement authority for any supplies and services, not just health-care items.

Each year the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery [DM&S] spends approximately $1.8 billion to purchase drugs, medical supplies, equipment, and other items to run its 172 hospitals, 117 nursing homes, 16 domiciliaries, 229 outpatient clinics, and other facilities. The health-care multiyear procurement authority provided in Public Law 100-322 allows the VA to reduce these costs, achieve economies in contract administration, increase quality of service from contractors, and encourage competition in its procurement of medical items. In addition to any other benefits, the VA expects a 5- to 10-percent decrease in bid prices for contracts that are found to warrant a multiyear commitment. The new law delineates specific conditions for the use of the multiyear authority that are designed to ensure that it is used in the best interests of the Government and to provide appropriate protections for the contractors.

According to the VA, it is already implementing the new multiyear contract authority in DM&S for maintenance of building service equipment at VA health-care facilities, preventive maintenance of medical equipment, elevators and fire alarm systems, waste maintenance, and pest control, and it is aware of no reason to restrict the authority to its health-care facilities.

The expanded authority could be used for such purposes, the VA advises, as service contracts for grounds maintenance of VA national cemeteries and supply contracts for headstones, markers, and grave liners and for contracts for the approval of courses of education and training for veterans by State approving agencies and for certain rehabilitation services provided to disabled veterans by organizations such as Goodwill Industries and sheltered workshops.

In addition—also pursuant to a VA suggestion made in response to a question I submitted to the VA in followup to the Committee's June 16, 1988, hearing, which covered S. 2306, along with various other measures—this provision would make a technical correction to the current multiyear procurement authority so as to delete an unnecessary and faulty definition of the terms "cancel" and "cancellation."

Mr. President, expansion of the VA's multiyear procurement authority to include nonhealth-care supplies and services should improve the cost-effectiveness and efficiency of VA procurement programs and, as a result, of VA services to veterans.

TITLE II—HEALTH CARE

PART A—PROGRAMS RELATING TO POSTTRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER AND MENTAL HEALTH

Mr. President, I have long been concerned about the diagnosis and treatment of posttraumatic stress disorder, and have monitored for a number of years the VA's response to veterans with PTSD. This year several factors have combined to make the provisions we are introducing especially important to, and much more necessary for, the veterans who have been afflicted with PTSD as a result of their service to their country. First, the final report by the Research Triangle Institute [RTI], which was released on December 28, 1988, and is discussed in more detail below, indicates that the number of veterans currently suffering with full-blown cases of PTSD, and those with PTSD symptoms which adversely affect their lives but whose symptoms are not of the intensity or breadth required for a diagnosis of PTSD, is alarming—approximately 829,000 of the 3.14 million veterans who served in Vietnam. RTI reports that a substantial number of these veterans have yet to seek mental health help from the VA or any other source. The data also support the concept of PTSD as a chronic, rather than acute, disorder. Although the majority of Vietnam veterans have adjusted well, for those who have not there clearly remains a tremendous unmet need.

These RTI findings raise serious questions about the VA's present capacity, under current law and practice, to furnish the care needed by veterans suffering from this disorder.

In addition, the reality of the very severe budget shortfall now confronting the VA medical program has created a situation in which veterans with combat-related PTSD may be turned away from treatment at VA medical centers. As VA medical centers make adjustments for their budget shortfalls, veterans who are not category "A" veterans—that is, those who have been adjudicated as having a service-connected disability, low-income veterans, and certain other veterans in specified categories—run a very real risk of being turned away from care or of having to wait an inordinate period of time to receive care. For many veterans suffering from PTSD, their first, and sometimes only, contact with the VA is via the Vet centers, for which the category designation is irrelevant. For those veterans who are severely disabled with PTSD, however, Vet Center treatment may not be enough. Previously, before this budget shortfall, Vet Center counselors could refer a veteran with PTSD to either inpatient or outpatient treatment at the VAMC with the knowledge that the veteran who needed help would almost certainly receive it. Given the shortfall, those veterans suffering from combat-related PTSD may be turned away unless they have an income which is sufficiently low to be in category "A" or they go through the time-consuming process of being adjudicated as service-connected—a process which numerous clinicians have indicated to me is detrimental, and at times disastrous, to the treatment process.

Mr. President, as you know, I have long stressed the VA's paramount mission of caring for those who have been disabled during their service. I believe that this duty extends fully to those individuals who suffer from psychological disorders, and must include efforts by the VA to consider the particulars of the symptoms in making treatment as accessible as possible for these individuals. The provisions we are introducing today will move in that direction.

On August 1, 1988, the committee reported S. 2011 (Rept. No. 100-439, pages 122-129) which, among other things, would have: First, required the VA to give priority care to veterans who had been diagnosed as having PTSD (section 601); second, extended the authorization of the VA Special Committee on PTSD which was established by Public Law 98-528 to assess the VA's capacity to diagnose and treat PTSD and to advise the Chief Medical Director (section 602); and third, authorized the VA to conduct a study of the psychological problems among Asian-American Vietnam veterans and other Vietnam veterans who are members of other minorities who were not included in the study conducted by the Research Triangle Institute (section 603). Additionally, I offered two floor amendments on October 18 during floor consideration of S. 2011: One which expanded the eligibility for priority care to all veterans who had served in hostilities, and one which required the VA to specify in its budget documents the details of its proposed funding for PTSD programs. All of these provisions were passed upon a voice vote by the Senate on October 18, 1988. These provisions were not, however, accepted by the House of Representatives, and the need for legislation in this vital area remains.

BACKGROUND

Posttraumatic stress disorder, while not labled as such until 1980, has been with us for a long time under various names—battle fatigue and shell shock are labels from previous wars for the same disorder. It is a psychological disorder that varies in intensity—from dampening an individual's ability to participate to the fullest degree in life to total incapacitation when suicide appears to be the only hope of escape. It is a disorder which for some veterans remains relatively dormant for the majority of time since the traumatic event and then comes to the fore, usually brought on by another life crisis of some dimension, causing them significant suffering. For other veterans, it is a disorder that has haunted them every day, day in and day out, from the time of the traumatic event.

Although the criteria for a diagnosis are relatively clear-cut, the varied manner in which the symptoms present themselves can make the disorder appear somewhat elusive. But this difficulty should not mislead us—those who suffer from PTSD know just how real it is and how it has kept them from leading fulfilling, productive, happy lives.

The RTI study

Mr. President, I note that RTI has now completed its massive study, mandated by section 102 of Public Law 98-160, of the psychological problems of Vietnam veterans. The results were released to Congress and the public on December 28, 1988. According to the RTI data, approximately 15.2 percent of the male Vietnam theater veterans (479,000) and 8.5 percent of the female theater veterans (610) are currently suffering from full-blown cases of PTSD. Another 11.1 percent of males and 7.8 percent of females, or a total of 350,000 theater veterans, suffer from trauma-related symptoms, which due to the lack of either intensity or breadth of symptoms are not characterized as "full-blown" PTSD cases, but rather as partial cases. It is likely that the vast majority of these 829,000 individuals would benefit from professional treatment.

Equally as shocking are the lifetime prevalence figures. Almost one-third (30.6) of the male theater veterans (over 960,000) and over one-fourth (26.9) of the female theater veterans (over 1,900) have had the full-blown disorder at some time during their lives. From these figures and those I have quoted earlier, it can be seen that about one-half of the men and one-third of the women who have ever had a full-blown case of PTSD still have it today. This illustrates quite clearly that PTSD is a chronic disorder.

Not unexpectedly, the prevalence of PTSD and other postwar psychological problems is significantly higher among those with high levels of exposure to combat and other war zone stressors in Vietnam. The study results also indicate a strong relationship between PTSD and other postwar readjustment problems—that is to say, having PTSD increases the likelihood of having other specific psychiatric disorders and a wide variety of other post-war readjustment problems. This demonstrates that in addition to the painful symptoms of PTSD itself, the lives of Vietnam veterans with PTSD have been profoundly disrupted as they have been experiencing problems in virtually every domain of their lives. As I expected based upon what we have learned from clinicians who work with veterans and their families, the RTI interviews with spouses or partners of Vietnam theater veterans with and without PTSD revealed that PTSD has had a substantial negative impact not only on the veterans' own lives but also on the lives of spouses, childen, and others living with the suffering veteran.

A few words about how RTI identified the presence of PTSD are appropriate. Rather than use a single assessment, RTI painstakingly developed a multimeasure triangulation approach. Acknowledging that no single PTSD assessment is completely error free, RTI made current PTSD diagnoses on the basis of information from multiple indicators, resulting in a composite diagnosis. It is the convergence of information across PTSD indicators, and the cross-measure confirmation by triangulation, that gives these figures particular credibility. Additionally, this multimeasure triangulation did not specify a positive diagnosis if only one of the measures suggested the presence of PTSD, a method often used when multiple measures are used. Instead, a conflict among the measures was resolved, as negative or positive, based upon the preponderance of the evidence. It is our understanding that each of the many layers of review within the VA have found this study to be very solid and credible.

As was revealed by RTI at the committee's July 14, 1988, hearing, there is a substantial difference in the current PTSD prevalence rates among various minorities. The current prevalence of PTSD is estimated to be 27.9 percent among Hispanics, 20.6 percent among blacks, and 13.7 among white/others. Analysis by RTI suggested that differences between blacks and white/others may be attributed to their differing levels of exposure to war zone stress, but differences between Hispanic men and the other two groups could not be explained by this factor. Also, the evidence suggests that black and Hispanic Vietnam theater veterans have generally experienced more mental health and life adjustment problems subsequent to their service in Vietnam than the white/other veterans.

VA PTSD treatment capacity

Mr. President, I have long advocated that the VA should be the leader in the diagnosis and treatment of PTSD, because of the close connection of many cases of PTSD to traumatic events arising in combat. Yet, currently, the VA has only 16 specialized PTSD inpatient programs all of which have waiting lists for admission into the program, ranging at the time of the last survey in August 1988 between one week and 6 months—with the majority having waiting lists between 5 and 10 weeks in length. In addition to these special units, only 15 other VA medical centers currently have special PTSD treatment teams—teams of four personnel—two funded by central office and two from the existing budget at the medical centers—including one psychiatrist, who are specially trained in diagnosing PTSD—among its 172 medical centers. At our July 14, 1988, oversight hearing on PTSD, the VA stated that about 158,000 of the veterans seen by its Vet centers have ever been "seen for PTSD, diagnosable according to present standards" and that about 20,000 veterans receive disability compensation for PTSD. Given the RTI data that 479,000 Vietnam veterans are currently suffering from full-blown PTSD, with another 350,000 suffering from partial cases, and that half of the male Vietnam theater veterans currently experiencing high levels of PTSD symptoms have never been seen by a mental health professional for their PTSD symptomatology and that 87 percent have not been seen recently by any health professional concerning their symptoms, it is apparent that a great number of veterans remain to be treated.

Working on this issue within the VA is the VA's Special Committee on PTSD which was established pursuant to section 110(b) of Public Law 98-528. The committee, which is chaired by Dr. Matthew Friedman, a psychiatrist at the White River Junction Vermont) VA Medical Center, has been of great help in identifying both problems and solutions with regard to the treatment of veterans with PTSD. However, despite the fact that the VA Chief Medical Director has agreed with most of the recommendations made by the special committee in its four reports submitted thus far, testimony from the special committee at the July 14 hearing indicated that numerous significant recommendations have yet to be implemented. For instance, with regard to the specialized PTSD inpatient treatment programs, the special committee recommended in its 1986 report that these programs be visited every 2 years to provide "periodic evaluation of such units with respect to: purposes and goals, program planning and design, length of stay, aftercare, administrative support funding, geographic distribution and clinical outcome"; that explicit standards be developed and used to evaluate the programs; and that there be at least one specialized PTSD unit in each region of the country.

To date, none of these recommendations have been implemented, although the VA is in the process of developing a program guide for these units. With regard to the use of treatment teams, the special committee has recommended, in each of its annual reports since 1985, that each VA Medical Center be provided with a team, and that these teams should be phased-in over a 5-year period. As I just noted, to date only 15 VA medical centers have these treatment teams. On October 4, 1988, the Chief Medical Director provided the committee with an update of activity on these recommendations, which indicates that currently 83 of the 98 of the recommendations have been implemented.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chief Medical Director's reply, dated October 4, 1988, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I note that although the special committee, in each of its annual reports, called for more research regarding effective treatment of PTSD and although the CMD concurred in that recommendation, in fiscal year 1987 the VA committed only $832,121 to PTSD out of its $200-million research budget.

As I understand it, the VA is using the $5 million add-on, which I proposed and which was passed by the Senate on July 13, 1988, and enacted on August 19, 1988, in H.R. 4800, the HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations Act, fiscal year 1989 (Public Law 100-400), to provide funding for an additional 8 to 10 treatment terms, bringing the total up to 23 to 25. Of those teams, two to three will work specifically with programs to help individuals who have a dual diagnoses of PTSD and substance abuse. The VA is also considering having one or two teams conduct a pilot domicilary program in an effort to give the PTSD sufferer, who often does not have any social support structure, a place to go between treatment and integration back into society.

Despite these efforts to reach out to, and meet the needs of, veterans with PTSD, the unmet need of veterans with combat-related PTSD remains enormous. Accordingly, I am introducing the following provisions.

SUMMARY OF PTSD PROVISIONS

Priority care

In view of the continuing high prevalence of PTSD among veterans, as I discussed in detail earlier, and the still too limited extent of the VA's response and commitment of resources to PTSD treatment, I believe that it is fully appropriate and necessary for Congress to direct the VA to provide care and services, on a priority basis, to veterans diagnosed by a DM&S mental health professional, after a personal interview, as suffering with PTSD related to service. Hence, section 201 of this bill would amend section 602 of title 38 to add a new subsection (b) which would require the VA, in the case of a veteran whom a mental health professional designated by the VA's CMD has diagnosed as suffering from combat-related PTSD, to furnish needed inpatient and outpatient mental health services to treat that veteran's PTSD on the same basis as if the disorder were officially adjudicated as service-connected, without the need for such a formal adjudication by the VA's Department of Veterans' benefits.

Mr. President, I anticipate that this provision will result in some reallocation of VA resources. I believe that any such change in focus so as better to serve the needs of veterans with PTSD is fully in accordance with the historic priorities of the VA to address those needs of veterans which are associated with their military service, most especially to seek to treat physical or mental health problems that are related directly to their service.

This provision would apply not only to Vietnam veterans, but to all veterans. Testimony at the committee's July 14, 1988, hearing indicated that substantial numbers of veterans from the Korean war and World War II are seeking help for PTSD at the vet centers. Accordingly, we believe that there is no reason to limit this provision to Vietnam veterans. Thus, veterans of service in theaters of operations during prior periods of war—for example, the European or Pacific theaters of operations during World War II—and veterans of service in areas in which U.S. personnel were subjected to danger from armed conflict comparable to that of battle with an enemy during a period of war—such as in Beirut or Grenada—would all be eligible for priority care under this provision once they are authoritatively diagnosed as suffering from combat-related PTSD.

VA Special Committee

Mr. President, another issue addressed in this bill is the future role of the VA's Special Committee on PTSD. As set forth in section 110(e)(2) of Public Law 98-528, the committee's last report, its fifth annual report, is due on February 1, 1989. Given the important role the special committee has played with regard to identifying problems and solutions, I believe that the reporting requirements of the committee should be extended. Accordingly, section 202 of this bill would require the special committee to submit three additional reports to the Secretary and concurrently to the two Veterans Affairs' Committees. The first report, due by June 1, 1989, would be required to set forth the special committee's evaluation of the results of the RTI study which I discussed earlier. The committee would be required to provide its assessment of the VA's capability to meet the need for diagnosis and treatment of veterans with PTSD, an evaluation of the Secretary of Veterans Affairs' report on the study, and recommendations for any further or followup research on the matters addressed in the study. The Secretary would be required to submit to the committees, within 30 days after receiving the report, any comments concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate. The second and third reports, due by February 1 of 1991 and 1992, respectively, would be required to provide information updating prior reviews of the overall efforts of the VA to meet the needs of veterans with PTSD. Not later than 60 days after receiving each of the reports, the Secretary would be required to submit to the committees any comments concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

Study of psychological problems

Mr. President, another issue relating to PTSD is the prevalence of this disorder among various racial/ethnic groups. Although the RTI study oversampled the racial/ethnic groups of blacks and Hispanics, and also oversampled women veterans in order to develop estimates of the prevalence of PTSD and other postwar psychological problems in readjusting to civilian life among these groups, it did not oversample some other racial/ethnic groups, including Asian-American, American Indian, native Hawaiian, other native American Pacific Islanders—including American Samoan native—and Alaska Native populations. Because these various groups exist in small numbers in the general population of Vietnam veterans, oversampling would be required to derive an estimate of the prevalence of PTSD and other postwar psychological problems in the readjustment to civilian life of members of these groups.

Mr. President, based on the data on the current prevalence of PTSD just reported to the Congress by RTI, and discussed earlier in detail, it appears that the prevalence of PTSD among racial/ethnic groups is much higher than among whites. For example, the findings for racial/ethnic subgroups of male Vietnam theater veterans indicates that the prevalence of PTSD for whites/others is about 14 percent, while for blacks the prevalence is 19 percent and for Hispanics it is as high as 27 percent. Several witnesses at the committee's July 14 hearing also described various ethnic/racial groups, including blacks and Asian-Americans, as being reluctant to seek treatment. This reluctance may lead to an incomplete understanding of the scope of this disorder in such populations.

Given this possible culturally based reluctance among some of these groups to seek treatment and the reported higher percentage of PTSD among certain racial/ethnic groups already studied, I believe there is a need to determine the extent to which the groups not oversampled in the RTI study are suffering from PTSD and other postwar psychological problems in readjusting to civilian life. Accordingly, section 203 of this bill would require the VA to conduct such a scientifically valid study, either in-house or by contract, on the incidence of PTSD among Asian-American, American Indian, native Hawaiian, and other native American Pacific Islander—including American Samoan native—and Alaskan Native Vietnam veterans, and to submit a report on the results of the study to the two Veterans' Affairs Committees by October 1, 1991.

Disclosure of resources budgeted for benefits based on PTSD

Mr. President, in an effort to monitor the extent to which the VA is allocating resources to address the needs of veterans suffering from PTSD, including the tremendous unmet need I discussed earlier, section 204 would require the VA to be more specific about its plans to spend money on PTSD-related activities. Specifically, the VA would be required, when submitting its annual budget documents to the Congress, to identify the amounts to be obligated in the upcoming fiscal year for: First, payment of compensation to veterans for disabilities resulting from service-connected PTSD; second, the treatment of veterans for PTSD related to their active-duty service, including specific designation of funds for inpatient care—specialized programs, general programs, and treatment teams—outpatient care, Vet Centers, and contract care; third, PTSD education, training, and research (at the National Center for PTSD, at any mental illness research, education, and clinical centers that may be established, and generally); and fourth, for the operations of the National Center for PTSD.

I believe that requiring the VA to focus in this manner on its allocation of resources to PTSD-related activities would help the Department to make more adequate provision for meeting the needs of veterans who, due to the combat-related nature of their illness, are so deserving of help on a priority basis and who so greatly need that help.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the executive summary of the RTI report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

SERVICES TO OVERCOME SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITY AFFECTING PROCREATION

Mr. President, section 211 of the bill would require the VA to furnish services to help a male or a female veteran or a male veteran's spouse achieve pregnancy in cases in which the veteran's service-connected disability impairs procreative ability.

This authority is necessary because the VA has maintained that it does not have the authority to furnish medical services for service-connected disabilities that impair the ability to have children. This came to light in the case of a woman who, while serving the U.S. Air Force, developed pelvic inflammatory disease, which was misdiagnosed. The disease progressed, scarred her fallopian tubes, and left her sterile. Although she tried to convince the VA to pay for in vitro fertilization [IVF]—which is the only procedure that offered her the possibility of having a child—the VA chose to interpret its statutory authority very narrowly and refused to provide the procedure, claiming that it lacks the authority to furnish such services.

Thus, veterans who because of a service-connected disability are unable to have children—one of the most basic and fundamental life activities—are being denied access to services to enable them to reproduce and have a family.

According to the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA], only about 16,000 male veterans under the age of 55 have service-connected disabilities that could cause infertility and about 1,300 female veterans have similar service-connected disabilities that could prevent them from becoming pregnant. Only a fraction of those individuals would desire or could benefit from the availability of procreative services. Thus, the numbers of individuals who would likely utilize these services—and thus the cost—would be very small.

If this authority were enacted, the majority of veterans with infertility problems would likely be treated with conventional medical therapies, including drug or hormone treatments, or surgery, to enable pregnancy to be achieved through sexual intercourse. Veterans with spinal cord injuries would be helped to a large degree by the availability of artificial insemination. More sophisticated technologies, such as IVF—in which the egg is fertilized outside the woman's body—would also be authorized. These procedures are generally used only as a last resort to correct reproductive problems for which nothing else works. Although IVF and newer technologies may help as many as 10–15 percent of infertile couples, few utilize them. For example, in 1986, less than 1 percent of the infertile couples in the United States attempted IVF.

Mr. President, I note that the provision we are introducing today is the same as section 8 of S. 2388 and section 2 of S. 6, legislation which I authored in 1986 and 1987, respectively, our committee favorably reported in section 205 of S. 2422 and section 301 of S. 9, respectively, and the Senate passed in section 205 of H.R. 5299 in 1986, and section 301 of H.R. 2616, on December 4, 1987, respectively. Unfortunately, the House did not agree to these provisions and they were not included in the measures which were ultimately enacted.

In both cases, the provisions were supported by all the major veterans organizations. When, on April 13, 1988, this measure was discussed at the conference between the House and the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, my colleagues in the House sought to exclude certain specific medical procedures from this provision and were particularly adamant in insisting that IVF be excluded. The Senate conferees and I could not accept that discriminatory result.

In general, I believe it is extremely inappropriate for Congress to legislate how medicine should be practiced by dictating which medical procedures are acceptable and which are not. Reproductive technologies are rapidly evolving, and to set into law a determination that only certain procedures are allowed on the basis of our current knowledge would be bad public policy. It could send a message to the medical community, State public policymakers, and the general public that some medical procedures are better or more acceptable than others when, in fact, no such medical or scientific determination has been made and there is no medical basis for such judgments.

Mr. President, with specific regard to IVF, I have two additional concerns. First, I believe that excluding IVF would be discriminatory toward women veterans. Although the majority of infertility problems for male veterans would be addressed through the availability of medical and surgical procedures as well as artificial insemination, those female veterans for whom no other procedure will work would still be denied the opportunity to have children. In fact, the very case that led to this legislation would have been excluded under such a proposal because she needed IVF.

As more and more women are joining the Armed Forces, women will constitute an ever greater proportion of veterans. We must be sensitive to their needs and ensure that they are provided equal access to health-care services. In my view, this is precisely the type of service that must be provided.

Second, although I am aware that individuals have differing moral or religious views on IVF, I strongly believe decisions about such medical procedures must be left to the individual. I do not believe that we should be setting public health policy according to one view or interpretation. That decision should be one that the individual veteran and his or her physician make. This provision would in no way require any veteran or spouse to undergo IVF or any health-care professional to participate in performing such a procedure. What it would do is make that option available, consistent with individual moral and religious beliefs.

COMPENSATED WORK THERAPY

Mr. President, compensated work therapy [CWT] programs operated by the VA provide, at a low cost to the Government, numerous therapeutic benefits to VA patients, especially those who are chronically mentally ill. These programs, authorized under section 618(b) of title 38, United States Code, and funded by a revolving fund called the Special Therapeutic and Rehabilitation Activities Fund, provide a clinical procedure for evaluating the patient's vocational or avocational interests, aptitudes, and skills, as well as assessing the patient's physical and mental capacities for work in actual work situations. These programs encourage the development of good work habits, by emphasizing attendance, reliability, punctuality, productivity, craftsmanship, and personal responsibility. In essence, individuals working in CWT programs gain a sense of being productive while developing important work skills.

CWT programs involve the use of work subcontracted and paid for by industries. Wages are generally paid on a piece-work basis and are provided and generated through the work contracts. The jobs vary greatly, from simple packaging to fabrications and assembly operation, using complex machinery. Activities take place in VA medical centers, in the community, or on industrial sites.

In fiscal year 1987, there were 43 active CWT programs with 5,293 veterans assigned to the various work projects. The VA does not have the figures for fiscal year 1988, but informs us that the numbers of programs of veterans involved remain essentially the same. In the last 6 months, several new programs have been developed. It is gratifying that this very important program continues to grow.

Mr. President, one obstruction to this growth is the restriction in current law—section 618(b)(1) of title 38—limiting CWT contracts solely to "private industry or other sources outside the Veterans' Administration." The VA's general counsel has indicated that this language restricts contracting not only with the VA but with other governmental agencies and entities as well. With contracts already difficult to find, especially in rural areas, such a restriction can stiltify further growth in the program.

Another problem currently facing the CWT programs is the interpretation by the general counsel's office that the language in section 618(c)(1) prohibits expenditures from the revolving fund for the expenses of travel for purposes of training program personnel at local sites. Given the constraints on and demands for DM&S travel moneys, such an interpretation results in little or no travel for CWT personnel for purposes of conducting onsite training programs for local personnel. The expansion of the CWT program to new sites is thus severely hampered.

To remove these restrictions and aid in the growth of CWT programs, section 212 of this bill would allow the CWT programs to contract with any private or governmental entities, including the VA. This section would also authorize the revolving fund moneys to be used for defraying the costs of travel and related expenses necessary to train employees to administer services under section 618(b).

STATE HOME CONSTRUCTION GRANTS

Mr. President, the VA participates in two separate programs of assistance to State veterans' home hospital, nursing home, and domiciliary facilities: First, a program, under subchapter V of chapter 17 of title 38, of per diem payments for care provided to eligible veterans, and second, a program, under subchapter III of chapter 81 of title 38, of matching grants for the construction, remodeling, or renovation of State home facilities. Second, 213 of our bill would extend for 3 years, through September 30, 1992, the authorization to appropriate such sums as are necessary to carry out the construction grant program.

Currently, a total of 36 States operate 57 State homes with a total of 18,981 beds providing hospital—689 beds, nursing home—11,580 beds, and domiciliary—6,712 beds—care. For fiscal year 1988, $42 million was appropriated for the State home construction program and the VA obligated $39.7 million and paid out $35.6 million. As of September 30, 1988, there was a nearly $165 million backlog of eligible preapproved projects. For fiscal year 1989, $42 million was appropriated and it is estimated that obligations will total $45.3 million and outlays will approach $36.9 million. The administration has requested $42 million for this program for fiscal year 1990.

I strongly support the State Home Program and its cointinuation as an important link in meeting the needs of our aging veteran population, and I believe that continuing the authorization of appropriation for this program is fully warranted in light of its importance in the overall effort to meet the health care needs of the aging veteran population. I note that last year a similar provision, extending the authorization of appropriations for the construction grant program for 3 years, though fiscal year 1992, was favorably reported by our committee as section 614 of S. 2011 and were passed by the Senate in H.R. 4741 on October 18, 1988. Although there was no disagreement on the House's part regarding the concept of extending this program, this provision—like the medical facilities sharing provision I discussed earlier—was dropped when the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees could not agree on unrelated health care matters.

PILOT PROGRAMS FOR PROVIDING VETERANS WITH ASSISTIVE ANIMALS

Mr. President, section 214 of this bill would establish a pilot program in the VA to provide assistive monkeys to certain quadriplegic veterans. Under the program, the VA would be required to: First, provide such a monkey to not more than 20 veterans who are either entitled to compensation by reason of quadriplegia or have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more disabling and are quadriplegic; and second, to facilitate—through information and matching efforts—the provision of monkeys to not more than 20 other veterans with quadriplegia when funding for the purchase of the animals comes from a source other than the VA. Priority for the provision of the monkeys, and for the facilitation of their provision, would be required to be given to veterans with service-connected quadriplegia.

Additionally, this measure would require the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to evaluate the pilot program and submit to the two Committees on Veterans' Affairs a report on the evaluation, including the benefits to veterans of being provided with monkeys under this program, the costs and cost effectiveness of providing monkeys to veterans who are quadriplegic, the views of the Administrator on the relationship between the provision of a monkey to a veteran and the payment to a veteran of an aid and attendance allowance in conjunction with the veterans' service-connected disability compensation or nonservice connected disability pension, and any recommnedations that the Administrator considers appropriate regarding whether to extend the pilot program or to make the authority permanent.

The bill, in section 215, would also provide for the establishment of a similar pilot program for the provision of signal dogs—dogs specially trained to help deaf individuals overcome their hearing impairment by alerting them through nonaural means to sounds such as a telephone, fire alarm, doorbell, or child's cry—if the Administrator determines that there is no authority otherwise to provide them. Up to this point, very few veterans have applied for signal dogs, and the authority to provide them seems to be unclear.

Background. On August 1, 1988, the committee reported S. 2011—Report No. 100-439—which contained an identical provision—section 615, pages 146-149—derived from S. 2207 and S. 2511, to the provision being introduced today. Although the Senate passed the provisions of S. 2011 by a voice vote on October 18, 1988, as a subsitute amendment for the House-passed H.R. 4741, this provision was not acceptable to the House of Representatives, and was not enacted into law. I continue to believe this pilot program is a worthwhile and innovative way to help improve the quality of life for those veterans with high level quadriplegia.

Clearly, the use of assistive monkeys is novel and a number of questions exist as to the extent to which and conditions under which they should be provided by the VA. Hence, I believe that it would be best to gain some experience with the use of assistive monkeys in the context of a pilot program before seeking to resolve these questions in permanent legislation. These issues include, but are not limited to: The actual benefits to be gained by the use of a monkey; the demand by veterans for monkeys; the ability of Helping Hands—the only organization which, under the dedicated guidance of Dr. M.J. Willard, trains and provides the monkeys—to provide the monkeys in the quantity needed to meet that demand; the effect, if any, that the provision of monkeys should have on aid and attendance allowances; the ability of Helping Hands to train the number of veterans interested in the program to handle the monkeys; the arrangements that need to be made for the care of the monkeys when the veteran is hospitalized; and the best method for handling a situation in which the placement of the monkey did not work out, from either the veterans' or from Helping Hands' point of view.

In these times of severe budget constraints, I believe it is also very important to consider the cost effectiveness of any new benefit. Each monkey is estimated to cost between $11,700 and $21,000 from birth through training to placement. If the assistance provided by a monkey proves enriching to a veteran's life in the manner in which it is anticipated it will, the benefits could be well worth the cost. Before making an open ended commitment of scarce resources to this innovative program, however, I believe further information is needed.

Assistant Monkeys Pilot Program. In order to get an accurate evaluation of the program within the limits of the supply of monkeys—approximately 7 in the next 4 months with another 12 to 14 in the following year, and to assess the proper eligibility requirements for such a benefit, this pilot program would direct the VA, beginning on October 1, to provide monkeys to not more than 20 veterans whose quadriplegia is service connected or who have service-connected disabilities rated at 50 percent or more and who are quadriplegic. These criteria acknowledge the VA health care system's special obligation—as recognized most recently in section 101 of Public Law 100-322 requiring the VA to furnish these veterans with comprehensive outpatient care—to veterans receiving care for service-connected disabilities and those with service-connected disabilities that are 50 percent or more disabling. In addition, the program would require the VA to facilitate the provision of assistive monkeys to not more than 20 non-service-connected veterans with quadriplegia. These additional features would provide the opportunity for a broader evaluation of the benefits and costs of these monkeys.

Signal Dogs Pilot Program. There continues to be some conflict as to whether the VA currently has the authority to provide signal dogs to either service connected or non-service-connected hearing impaired veterans. In August 1967, the general counsel issued an opinion which seems to support the view that the VA has authority to provide signal dogs to both categories of hearing impaired veterans. In more recent opinions, however, the general counsel has taken the position, specifically with regard to assistive monkeys and dogs which provide primarily companionship, that the VA does not currently have such authority to provide any assistive animals other than the authority in section 614(b) of title 38 to provide guide dogs for blind veterans entitled to service-connected disability compensation. Although the general counsel advised me in the spring of 1988 that a thorough review of this conflict is under way, to date, no consistent policy on this matter has been adopted. Therefore, I have included in section 215 of this bill a provision to ensure that, if the general counsel determines that the VA does not have the authority to provide signal dogs to either service-connected or non-service-connected hearing impaired veterans, a pilot program, similar to the one for assistive monkeys, will be undertaken to study the benefits of providing signal dogs.

Witnesses at the committee's June 16, 1988 hearing testified in general support of programs to provide disabled veterans with assistive animals. The VA endorses the concept of a pilot program for providing monkeys but would prefer this authority to be discretionary rather than mandatory.

SECURITY AT VA MEDICAL CENTERS

Mr. President, section 221 of S. 13 deals with the organizational alignment and the operation of the Security Service in the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery [DM&S] which will become the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration [VHS&RA] when the VA becomes the Department of Veterans Affairs on March 15 under Public Law 100-527.

The DM&S Security Service is responsible for an important function in the 172 VA medical centers across the country. Protection of both the patients and the staff by VA police officers is vital to the ability of these facilities to furnish high quality care to our Nation's veterans in a safe environment.

Mr. President, the hiring practices of VA police officers by VA medical center officials, the training of VA police officers, and the extent to which VA police officers can protect themselves on the job have come under intense scrutiny and criticism in recent months. The VA inspector general's September 30, 1988, report entitled "Audit of Hiring Practices for VA Police Officers" found that 57 percent of VA police officers surveyed were either unqualified, unsuited, or both, for their current positions, including 21 police officers who did not disclose prior criminal conviction on their applications for VA employment. The report included recommendations for improving preemployment screening of police officer applicants, for making a special suitability review of all police officers currently on duty, and for designating police officer positions as noncritical sensitive instead of nonsensitive.

The media have also reported hiring problems at VA medical centers including articles by Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta in the Washington Post on June 13, 1988, entitled "VA Hiring Ex-Cons as Police Officers," and October 21, 1988, entitled "Criminals Turn Up on VA Police Force." In addition, a November 15, 1988, Jack Anderson and Joseph Spear Washington Post article, entitled "Unarmed VA Guards Easy Marks," spoke to the tragic death of a police officer in the Bronx VAMC when he tried to stop two youths from entering the medical center who had triggered a metal detector. The youths were never apprehended.

Mr. President, upon reviewing the VAIG report and becoming aware of the media articles on the VA police force, on December 6, 1988, I wrote to VA Administrator Thomas Turnage raising a number of concerns and questions that I have relative to the security of patients and staff at VA medical centers. Administrator Turnage responded to these concerns in a letter to me dated January 9, 1989.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that copies of those letters be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The need for a higher quality VA police force has been illustrated in numerous incidents of vandalism, general disturbances, forced entries, assaults, and robberies at VA medical centers in fiscal year 1988. These offenses resulted in almost $7.7 million in damage.

Mr. President, section 221 is a step toward resolving some of the serious problems facing the Security Service. First, the bill would assign to the Assistant Secretary who, under section 4(b)(4) of Public Law 100-527, is to handle management, productivity, and logistic support functions responsibility for the functional and technical supervision of the performance of security and law enforcement functions in the VA. Although the problems that I have noted occurred only in health care facilities, the Assistant Secretary would have departmentwide responsibilities under our bill for matters involving physical security. This provision would—in effect—organizationally relocate the Security Service in VA's Central Office by moving it from the VHS&RA to an Assistant Secretary. Under this realignment, the Assistant Secretary responsible for management, productivity, and logistic support functions would also be responsible for the functional and technical supervision of VA police activities while the medical center directors would continue to provide day-to-day supervision of police officers at their facilities. A precedent already exists for this type of organizational arrangement and delineation of duties in that the VA's Office of Facilities provides technical and policy supervision of the Facility Engineering Service at VAMC's. In addition, the fiscal service and supply service at VAMC's receive their technical and policy supervision from the Director of the Office of Budget and Finance and the Associate Deputy Administrator for Logistics, respectively. This approach has worked adequately for the fiscal and supply/procurement functions for several years by focusing the efforts of the Chief Medical Director on policy issues most directly related to the furnishing of health care services. I believe it can work effectively for the security function as well.

Although the VA has developed a plan for implementing the recommendations in the September 30, 1988, audit by the IG, I believe that the findings of the IG may be symptomatic of larger problems in the VA police force which may or may not be related to the recent hiring problems. Thus, the second aspect of this provision would require a report from the new Secretary of Veterans' Affairs within 90 days after enactment of this legislation containing, first, his plan for upgrading VA police officer training, recruitment, and salaries; second, an assessment of the need for establishing a policy to allow police officers serving at medical centers in high crime areas to carry weapons to protect themselves in carrying out their duties; and, third, an assessment of the feasibility of reducing police officer services in medical centers with no significant security problems in order to expand such services in centers with greater such problems.

Mr. President, although there certainly are policies and practices which need to be reviewed and corrected in the VA police force, there are also over a thousand dedicated VA police officers who work in high crime, often dangerous areas every day to make the VA medical system safe for patients and staff. The members of this force often work for less money than others in comparable jobs and I applaud their efforts on behalf of our Nation's veterans.

SHARING OF MEDICAL FACILITIES, EQUIPMENT, AND INFORMATION

Expansion of sharing authority. Mr. President, subchapter IV of chapter 81 of title 38, relating to the sharing of medical facilities and information, was enacted in 1966 by Public Law 89-785 for the purpose, in part, of improving the care furnished to veterans. To do so, it authorized the VA to enter into agreements with medical schools, hospitals, and research centers under which the VA could receive from or share with these facilities specialized medical resources which might otherwise not be feasibly available or effectively utilized for veterans or others. Specifically, under section 5053(a) as enacted in 1966 VA "hospitals" could enter into arrangements with "other hospitals (or other medical installations having hospital facilities) or medical schools or clinics for mutual use or exchange of use of (a) a non-VA specialized medical resource when the arrangement would obviate the need for the VA to acquire that kind of resource, or (b) VA specialized medical resources which are justified on the basis of veterans' care but which are not utilized to their maximum effective capacity." Later, in 1979, legislation which I authored, in section 304 of Public Law 96-151, expanded this authority to include sharing arrangements with organ banks, blood banks, or similar institutions.

In 1983, Medicare's prospective payment system was enacted in Public Law 98-21. The literature suggests that a direct result of this legislation was to change the way medicine is practiced so that many specialized medical procedures which formerly were performed only in hospitals were moved to outpatient facilities or facilities which had in the past provided less intensive care than hospitals. Our current health care environment has spawned a variety of entities furnishing community health care and it is sometimes difficult to label or categorize them. I believe that if the VA is to be able to take full advantage of sharing arrangements it must have the flexibility to enter into agreements with these new entities or entities which already exist but are providing a different level of care than in the past.

Therefore, section 222 of the bill would expand the categories of facilities with which the VA could enter into sharing arrangements so as to encompass any health care facility.

Rates of Payment. Current law, section 5053(b) of title 38, requires that these sharing arrangements provide for "reciprocal reimbursement based on a charge which covers the full cost of services rendered, supplies used, and including normal depreciation and amortization costs of equipment." Contrasted with this strict full cost reimbursement approach, section 5011 of title 38 provides that sharing agreements between the VA and the Department of Defense [DOD] are to allow reimbursement to be based upon a mutually agreed upon methodology that provides appropriate flexibility to the heads of the facilities concerned and to take into account local conditions and the needs and actual costs of the health care resources provided. For this purpose, the VA defines actual cost as including the cost of communications, utilities, services, supplies, salaries, depreciation, and related expenses connected with providing the resource. However, encouragement is given to exclude equipment depreciation from the reimbursement rate. Additionally, heads of VA and DOD medical facilities may negotiate a rate that is less than actual cost.

The General Accounting Office [GAO] Report, GAO/HRD-88-51, dated March 1988 entitled "VA/DOD Health Care—Further Opportunities to Increase the Sharing of Medical Resources," stated that several directors at VA facilities were unaware of the less restrictive section 5011 provision for taking actual costs into account and, instead, when negotiating with DOD utilized the measure described in section 5053(b) which requires full cost reimbursement. The GAO concluded that this misuse of the full cost requirement set forth in section 5053(b) created a disincentive to sharing between the two agencies where the amount of the full cost of the services is greater than the price at which the same services may be obtained in the community.

It is reasonable to conclude that a similar impediment exists with respect to sharing between VA and private sector facilities. The purpose of entering into sharing arrangements is to strengthen and improve VA care, and thus ensure adequate and complete health care for veterans, and to provide for fully effective utilization of specialized medical resources, under direct VA control, when veterans' immediate needs do not require maximum utilization. I believe that providing the Administrator with the authority to enter into agreements with private sector facilities based upon mutually agreed upon methodologies which take into account local conditions and the needs and the actual costs to the providing agency's facility of the resources being provided, as required in section 5011, would help to ensure that the stated intent of this title 38 measure could be more fully realized. In addition, requiring the money to be returned to the VA facility involved in the sharing would strengthen that facility's ability to provide health care to veteran patients. Section 222 of the bill we are introducing would make these two changes.

I note that this provision is the same as section 7 of S. 2462, legislation which I authored last year and our committee favorably reported in section 613 of S. 2011 and the Senate passed on October 18, 1988, in H.R. 4741. Unfortunately, although there was no disagreement about this particular provision, it was not included at the time of final passage. Matters pertaining to sharing agreements, as well as most other health care provisions in H.R. 4741 were dropped as a result of differences between the House and Senate Committees on Veterans' Affairs over unrelated health care items.

I am hopeful that we will be able to overcome this obstacle this year and enacted this useful, cost-effective provision.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

Mr. President, sections 223 and 224 of the bill would address matters concerning labor-management relations involving the VA and those VA health care employees—principally physicians, dentists, and nurses—who are employed under the VA's title 38 personnel system. Specifically, these sections would, first, ensure that title 38 employees are afforded the same labor-management rights as other government employees currently enjoy under chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code, and, second, recognize the professional nature of those employees by creating a hybrid procedure for resolving specified lesser disciplinary actions and grievances involved title 38 employees.

BACKGROUND

During the committee's May 21, 1987, hearing on various measures dealing with the VA health care system and in subsequent activity both in followup to that hearing and in connection with the committee's April 28, 1988, hearing, the committee heard from a variety of sources about problems in the VA's personnel system as it relates to title 38 employees.

Specifically, both the agency and witnesses representing employee groups raised concerns about the current procedures under section 4110 of title 38—the provision under which disciplinary actions involving title 38 employees are carried out, the fairness and timeliness of the overall title 38 personnel system—especially in contrast to the system under title 5 which applies to other Federal employees, including other VA employees not covered by the title 38 system—and the ongoing, costly, and time-consuming litigation over issues relating to the relationship between title 5 and title 38 provisions.

As was discussed in detail in the committee's report accompanying two bills reported by our committee and considered by the Senate in the last Congress—S. 9 (S. Rept. 100-215, pages 145-150) and S. 2011 (S. Rept. 100-439, pages 164-167)—the key issue underlying this matter is the relationship between the VA personnel system under title 38 and the general civil service system under title 5.

When the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery was established in 1946, the Congress created the separate VA personnel system, distinct from the general civil service system, in order to provide the VA with greater flexibility in recruiting and employing health care professionals. It was the view at that time that the civil service system was too cumbersome to permit the timely hiring that was felt to be necessary in order to enable the VA to meet the health care needs of the returning World War II veterans and also that the other attributes of the civil service system were not compatible with running a large health care organization. The elements of this system, which are set out in chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, and in regulations and guidelines issued by the VA, have generally served the purpose of enabling the VA to employ needed health care professionals to operate the agency's health care system.

Among the areas addressed in chapter 73 are those relating to employer/employee relations, such as those involving terms and conditions of employment—including how employee grievances over such terms and conditions are resolved—and disciplinary procedures. Specifically, current section 4108(a) gives the head of the VA exclusive authority over the conditions of employment of title 38 personnel "[n]otwithstanding any law, Executive order, or regulation," and current section 4110 sets out the process by which disciplinary actions involving title 38 employees are to be conducted.

Many of these provisions date back to 1946 and, although there have been many significant changes in employee relations in the intervening years—most especially, the enactment in 1978 of the Civil Service Reform Act [CSRA], Public Law 95-454—VA authorities and practices have remained largely unchanged.

Meanwhile in the 1978 CSRA, other Federal employees gained significant new rights to negotiate with regard to terms and conditions of their employment and to utilize new methods to resolve grievances, including negotiated grievance procedures and binding arbitration. Title 38 employees, by way of contrast, remain limited by section 4108 to whatever rights the head of the VA is willing to accord to them and have been unable to negotiate grievance procedures comparable to those available to other Federal employees. Likewise, under section 4110, all disciplinary actions involving title 38 employees, however minor, must be heard by a disciplinary board of 3 to 5 employees, a trail-like adversarial process that frequently takes many months to reach a resolution and from which the only appeal available is an internal VA action, with no recourse to outside judgment except in a court action. Civil Service employees, on the other hand, have various methods for contesting disciplinary actions, both within and outside of their particular agencies.

As is described in detail in the committee report accompanying S. 9, challenges have been brought in recent years, including by the American Federation of Government Employees [AFGE] and the National Federation of Federal Employees [NFFE], to the legality, in light of the enactment of CSRA, of certain attributes of the title 38 separate VA personnel system, particularly to those relating to the resolution of employee grievances and disciplinary actions. These challenges have been based on the theory that CSRA established governmentwide procedures in the area of labor-management relations and, in so doing, superceded VA specific laws. Although this legal theory was accepted in some cases before the Federal Labor Relations Authority [FLRA] involving VA disciplinary procedures in which the FLRA ruled that the VA was obligated to adhere to CSRA procedures, these results were reversed on appeal to Federal appellate courts.

Last July, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, in the case Colorado Nurses Association and VA Medical Center, Ft. Lyon, Colorado v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 851 F.2d 1486 (D.C. Cir. 1988), reversed a prior decision of the FLRA which held that the VA has a duty under the CSRA to bargain over conditions of employment for title 38 employees. The court ruled that the VA Administrator has exclusive discretion to establish regulations concerning the working conditions of those employees appointed under the title 38 personnel system and is, therefore, not under any obligation to bargain with such employees based on the CSRA.

In response to the concerns raised at the 1987 hearing and in followup activity, the committee reported and the Senate passed section 324 of S. 9. Despite the good intentions of all those involved in that effort, it was not possible to develop an approach that was satisfactory to the VA and to the employee organizations, and ultimately the decision was made, in conferring with the House, not to include any provisions on this subject in the legislation that ultimately was enacted as Public Law 100-322. However, because the committee remained interested in trying to resolve the problems that were identified in 1987 in the current DM&S disciplinary and grievance processes and procedures relating to title 38 employees, on August 1, 1988, the committee again voted its support for these provisions, as set forth in section 627 of S. 2011. Then, following the court's decision in Colorado Nurses, I proposed, and the Senate adopted, a provision which would have maintained the status quo while parties negotiated a permanent resolution of the issues involved. Unfortunately, neither of these provisions was included in the legislation that ultimately was enacted as Public Law 100-687.

The effort to develop the provisions in the Senate-passed measures in 1987, 1988, and again in this bill, which have included significant consultation with many concerned parties, has been carried out with two fundamental, and sometimes conflicting, principles in mind. These are, first, the separate title 38 personnel system for DM&S generally serves a valid and valuable purpose of permitting the VA to staff and manage a very large, complex, health care system and, as such, should be maintained; and, second, as the Congress recognized with the enactment of the CSRA, there can and should generally be significant opportunity for employees to have disciplinary actions and grievances related to their employment resolved in a timely fashion with an opportunity for outside review.

Need for provisions. The need for these provisions is essentially twofold—to ensure that title 38 employees are afforded the same fundamental rights as other Government employees in terms of their employee-management relations, while protecting the special professional nature of title 38 employees, and to provide the VA with an important tool in its ongoing efforts to recruit and retain qualified health care personnel.

Since the time when the current system was developed, the types of personnel procedures set forth in title 5 have become the norm in labor-management relations. In fact, until the Colorado Nurses decision, the VA generally opted to follow those procedures. However, reports of abandoning those procedures, which the VA can do in its discretion under the current law as construed in Colorado Nurses, are beginning to surface. To continue to apply or abandon title 5 personnel procedures solely at the discretion of the VA, not only deprives those employees of fundamental rights guaranteed to other Federal employees but also unnecessarily exacerbates the already difficult recruitment and retention problems facing the VA.

General personnel procedures and disciplinary actions. Sections 223 and 224 of this bill would make chapter 71 of title 5 applicable to the head of the VA's authority under section 4108, except with respect to the prohibitions set out in paragraphs (1) through (6) of subsection (a) of section 4108, which pertain to potential conflict-of-interest situations arising in the context of health care, and section 4110 which would be amended to set forth a title 38-specific process for resolving lesser disciplinary matters involving title 38 employees who are members of a recognized bargaining unit.

As I noted, section 223 of the bill recognizes the changes in labor-management relations since the time current law was enacted. While following the basic construct of title 5 grievance procedures, this section also protects and preserves the uniqueness of the title 38 system where it is most necessary—where the quality of care may be at issue.

Section 224 of the bill would amend section 4110 of title 38 so as to remove from the coverage of that section disciplinary actions involving lesser proposed penalties—specified as suspension for 14 days or less, reassignment or reduction in rank without a reduction in basic pay, reprimand, or admonishment. All other disciplinary actions would remain covered by the current section 4110 process.

This approach, of specifying those matters which would be excluded from coverage, was adopted so as to be clear that any matters not specified would remain covered by sections 4108 and 4110. For example, because of the current VA practice of treating any proposal to remove a title 38 employee's clinical privileges as the same as a proposed removal, under the bill current 4110 procedures would continue to apply in such cases.

For the disciplinary matters specified in this provision which involve lesser proposed penalties, this section would provide that a title 38 employee would be entitled, in lieu of a 4110 proceeding, to a process which would include: First, advance written notice which sets forth the specific reasons for the proposed action; second, a reasonable time to answer the notice, either in writing or orally, including time to furnish affidavits and other documentary evidence in support of the answer; third, a chance to be represented by an attorney or some other representative; and fourth, a written decision, which would include the reasons for the decision, at the earliest practicable time. These procedures are generally the same as are provided, pursuant to section 7503(b) of title 5, to all title 5 employees in such disciplinary proceedings.

This section also would provide two methods by which title 38 employees—depending on whether they belong to recognized bargaining units or not—could gain a review of a decision on such a specified lesser disciplinary matter or of a decision on a grievance. These methods, which are parallel to the procedures available to title 5 employees, are either, in the case of title 38 employees who are not members of bargaining units, an agency review procedure established by the head of the VA or, for those employees who are members of such a unit, a negotiated grievance procedure which would include binding arbitration. In any disciplinary case involving binding arbitration, if the subject matter of the disciplinary action involved a question of the employee's clinical competence, as determined by either party, the person selected under the negotiated agreement to arbitrate the case would have to be qualified as an arbitrator and also be qualified as a physician, dentist, nurse, or otherwise qualified, by specialized experience or training or both, in examining and adjudicating health care issues. Appeals from an arbitrator's decision would be authorized to be taken to the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

This provision also specifies that any agency review procedure established by the head of the VA with respect to proposed disciplinary actions and grievance resolution regarding title 38 employees who are not covered by collective bargaining agreements would have to include: First, an informal review of the decision on the disciplinary action by a VA official of a higher level than the official who made the original decision and a prompt decision following that review; second, a right to have the matter reviewed further by an impartial examiner from within the VA who would have to submit a prompt report of findings and recommendations; and third, a prompt review of those finding and recommendations, as well as any comments the employee or the agency or both wishes to make on the findings and recommendations, by an agency official at a higher level than the one who carried out the first informal review. These procedures are generally similar to ones currently provided by the VA through internal agency guidelines.

Mr. President, it is my hope that these changes in labor-management relations involving the VA and its critical title 38 health-care personnel will serve to improve the overall work environment in the VA health-care system and make the VA an attractive employment option for health-care personnel.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS TO ELIMINATE INCONSISTENCIES IN CERTAIN LAWS REGARDING HEALTH CARE BENEFITS

Mr. President, as I discussed in my March 23, 1988, floor statement on S. 2011, beginning on page S2904 of the RECORD, current law contains a puzzling array of variations among the circumstances in which the VA may provide veterans with various types of medical and assistive devices and related services. From my review of those provisions—including sections 601(6), 612, 614, 617, and 619 of title 38, United States Code, it has become apparent to me that they have grown like Topsy—each provision adding an important piece to the legislative scheme, but, as a whole, lacking both clarity and a consistent conceptual basis.

For example, under section 614(b) of title 38, the VA may provide to veterans who are entitled to service-connected disability compensation seeing-eye or guide dogs and mechanical or electronic equipment to help veterans overcome the handicap of blindness. To be eligible for the dog and such equipment under this provision, the veteran's blindness need not be service-connected; the requirement is only that the veteran have any service-connected disability as long as it is compensable.

Does the phrase "entitled to" cover situations where the veteran is not actually receiving compensation but is qualified to do so? Apparently so.

Section 612(a)(2) authorizes the VA, as part of the veteran's care, to furnish to any veteran who is receiving outpatient treatment needed for a service-connected disability, or a veteran having a service-connected disability rated at 50 percent or more who is receiving outpatient treatment needed for a non-service-connected disability, home improvements costing up to $2,500 that are necessary to assure the continuation of treatment or provide access to the home or to essential lavatory or sanitary facilities. Section 612(f)(2) authorized the VA to furnish to certain other veterans, as part of outpatient treatment they are receiving from the VA for non-service-connected disabilities in follow-up to hospital care or to obviate the need for hospital care, the same type of home improvements, subject to a $600 limit.

Under section 617(a), the VA may provide "an invalid lift * * *, if medically indicated," in the homes of certain veterans, apparently without regard to whether they are receiving VA care, but subject to certain conditions not required under section 612 (a)(2) or (f)(2), that is, the veteran must be receiving either VA service-connected disability at the special rates provided for totally disabled veterans with certain specific severe disabilities—which are not required to be related to the need for the lift—or needs-based VA non-service-connected-disability pension by reason of being in need of regular aid and attendance. Pension, unlike compensation, is payable only to veterans who served during a period of war.

Section 617(a) also authorizes the VA to furnish to veterans receiving compensation at those special rates or receiving pension by reason of need for aid and attendance any type of therapeutic or rehabilitative device, as well as other medical equipment and supplies—excluding medicines—if medically indicated. Again there is no express requirements that the veteran be receiving VA care. This broad description of the assistance which may be furnished would seem to overlap with much of the home-improvements authority in sections 612 (a)(2) and (f)(2) and with section 614(b)'s mechanical or electronic equipment authority and possibly with the specific invalid lift authority itself.

After the VA ruled—rather incomprehensibly to me in view of the broad section 617(a) authority—that these and other authorities generally did not include the authority to provide telecaptioning television decoders to hearing-impaired veterans, Congress enacted section 617(b) to authorize the VA to provide a decoder to a "veteran who is profoundly deaf and is entitled to compensation on account of hearing impairment." As to this authority, the service-connected impairment need not be the cause of the veteran's profound deafness as long as the hearing impairment is compensable.

I would also note that section 601(6) defines "medical services" to include not only medical examination, treatment, and rehabilitative services, but also to include such items as "wheelchairs, artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances * * * and such other supplies or services as the Administrator determines to be reasonable and necessary." This is the term used in section 6121 (a)(1) and (f)(1) to denote the services which the VA is authorized to provide on an outpatient basis, if they are needed, under section 612(a)(1), or reasonably necessary, under section 612(f)(1). The term "medical services" is also included in the definition of the term "hospital care" in section 601(5). Thus, all veterans who are entitled to or eligible for and receiving VA hospital care or outpatient treatment are entitled to or eligible for "reasonable and necessary supplies and services," and there is no clear line in the law to distinguish, for example, the supplies available under sections 601(6) and 612 (a) and (f) and those available—as well as equipment and devices—under section 617(a), except that the term "supplies" under section 617(a) does not include "medicines."

The above discussion raises numerous questions regarding the eligibility criteria for these medical or disability-related items, including the reasoning that supports the variations in the conditions of eligibility, such as the need for the item to ameliorate a service-connected disability; the existence of any service-connected disability; the existence of a service-connected hearing disability for purposes of eligibility for a telecaptioning decoder; the existence of a service-connected disability, not necessarily related to vision, for purposes of eligibility for a seeing-eye dog; the relevance of wartime service only in the case of veterans with non-service-connected disabilities; the receipt of, as opposed to entitlement to, compensation; and whether the assistance in question is medically indicated, needed, or reasonably necessary.

In the same vein, there are troublesome questions about the meaning and relationship of a variety of different terms in these sections such as "artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances," "supplies," "prosthetic appliances," "mechanical or electronic equipment," "therapeutic or rehabilitative device," "other medical equipment and supplies," and "devices for assisting in overcoming * * * deafness."

I would emphasize that the foregoing are just a few of the issues raised by the sections that I have discussed. The universe of questions is far greater. Moreover, there are many related questions as to how the VA has utilized these discretionary authorities, whatever they may mean.

Accordingly, I believe a task force is needed to review these provisions of law and how they have been implemented, and to recommend policies and legislation for the elimination of the inconsistencies. Section 225 of this bill would require the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to establish such a task force, consisting of VA employees, including representatives of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration, the Veterans' Benefits Administration, and the Office of the General Counsel. The task force would submit a report to the Secretary containing a description of the inconsistencies identified in the law and its implementation, the policies and legislative proposals it is recommending, and the reasons for each recommendation. The Secretary would then review the report and either approve the recommendations or prepare alternative suggestions. Within 180 days after the date of enactment, the Secretary would be required to submit the report, along with his or her recommendations and an explanation for any differences between the two, to the Senate and House Veterans' Affairs Committees.

RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION OF VA HEALTH-CARE PROFESSIONALS

Mr. President, I want to inform my colleagues that later in this session I intend to introduce a comprehensive measure which will be designed to assist the VA in its ongoing efforts to recruit and retain qualified health-care professionals, including physicians.

For some time now, the VA has been experiencing difficulties with recruiting and retaining registered nurses, physical therapists, pharmacists, and other employees involved in direct patient care. The VA is not alone in this situation. According to preliminary results of the American Hospital Association's 1988 Human Resources Survey in which over 3,000 hospitals participated, 48 percent of responding hospitals had difficulty recruiting physical therapists, 31 percent had difficulty recruiting pharmacists, 25 percent had problems attracting radiologic technicians, 22 percent had difficulties attracting medical technicians, and 7 percent had problems recruiting respiratory therapists. This is in addition to 88 percent of those hospitals who reported difficulties in recruiting registered nurses, and 85 percent who stated they were having problems retaining their nurses.

In 1987, I introduced S. 1195 to assist the VA in overcoming the difficulties it was experiencing in obtaining qualified health-care workers. These provisions, including expansion of the VA's scholarship program, tuition reimbursement, and payment of Saturday premium pay, were favorably reported by our committee, passed by the Senate in S. 9, and enacted on May 20, 1988, as part of Public Law 100-322.

In 1988, I introduced S. 2462 with many other provisions designed to increase the competitive advantage of the VA health-care system. These provisions, including ones to carry out a pilot program designed to test recruitment and retention methods, authorize appropriations to encourage post-secondary schools offering health-care training courses to expand and improve their programs, and expeditiously appoint VA-trained graduates to positions in the VA, were incorporated into S. 2011 when favorably reported by our committee and later passed by the Senate as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for H.R. 4741, on October 18, 1988—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, S16524. Unfortunately our committee reached a stalemate over the issue of the inclusion of a House measure which would have mandated special pay for nurses at an estimated cost of between $70 and $100 million per year, and, as a result, those recruitment and retention provisions included in S. 2011 were not included in the legislation which was enacted as Public Law 100-687. Although I am in favor of increased salaries for nurses I could not support such a measure at a time when the VA was faced with a $635 million budget shortfall.

Mr. President, as I indicated at the time of Senate consideration of those measures which were enacted as Public Law 100-687, I will continue to make recruitment and retention of health-care professionals within the VA a priority for the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I am currently studying different approaches to the problem of inadequate nurse salaries and will shortly be proposing legislation directed at resolving this issue. Additionally, I will be including in that bill those recruitment and retention provisions previously included in S. 2011 and those included in a floor amendment adopted to S. 2011 on October 18, 1988—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, S16558.

In addition to the need to study nurses' salaries, it appears that physician compensation in the VA may also be falling behind. According to some VA Chiefs of Staff, it is becoming more difficult to recruit and retain experienced physicians to care for veteran-patients. Although physicians who have newly completed their residency programs are less difficult to attract, there is evidence of VA difficulty in recruiting and retaining seasoned physicians. Thus, we are also carefully studying the problems associated with VA physician recruitment and retention with a view toward developing an appropriate response.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, as I noted at the outset, the central purposes of this legislation is the provision of cost-of-living increases in certain benefits paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities, and to certain dependents and survivors of such veterans and the continued maintenance and improvement of the VA programs of benefits and services for our Nation's veterans and their dependents. I look forward to working on this measure with our committee's ranking minority member, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and the other members of the committee, with the VA, with the various veterans' service organizations, and with others interested in legislation affecting veterans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point following the insertions previously ordered.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
October 4, 1988.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is a reply to your letter of August 17, 1988, which requested a summary of what is being done or being planned regarding the implementation of 97 recommendations incorporated in the first three Annual Reports of the Special Committee on PTSD.

I have enclosed a white paper which will give you a complete overview of the VA's response to the Special Committee's Annual Reports. These Annual Reports contain a total of 98 recommendations, of which 83 (85 percent of all recommendations) have been or are being implemented. Of the 15 recommendations not implemented, several have been repeated so that only 11 actual recommendations have not been implemented. Five of these non-implemented recommendations are in the area of research where a significant increase in activity related to PTSD has taken place. All of the recommendations relating to the direct clinical care of veterans with PTSD have been implemented with the sole exception of the expansion of Vet Center services for veterans of other combat eras.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide this information.

Sincerely,

JOHN A. GRONVALL, M.D.,
Chief Medical Director.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY

STATUS OF RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PTSD

The First Annual Report (1985) contained 32 recommendations. (It must be noted that the recommendations were numbered from 1 to 33 but this was due to a typographic error which skipped the number 26. There were two recommendations under "Resource Allocation." The first suggested the establishment of PTSD Treatment Teams in all VA Medical Centers. This has been initiated with the establishment of 15 PTSD Treatment Teams in FY 1987 and with current plans for the establishment of 10 to 12 more PTSD Treatment Teams using funds appropriated through P.L. 100-404, the 1989 Appropriations Act for HUD and Independent Agencies. It is our belief that every VA Medical Center does not require the presence of a PTSD Treatment Team. The second recommendation was that the VA establish a PTSD Treatment Unit in each of the VA's Medical Districts. This recommendation is in the process of being implemented: between Specialized Inpatient PTSD Units, PTSD Treatment Teams, and PTSD outpatient programs, there is currently at least one designated PTSD program in 20 of the VA's 27 existing Medical Districts.

Four recommendations (#3-#6) were listed under "Clinical Data Acquisition." The first recommendation in this section was that the VA establish a tracking system throughout their inpatient and outpatient care components and the second recommendation urged an accelerated timetable for the implementation of clinical software packages for the VA's automated data processing (ADP) system to facilitate tracking. Neither of these recommendations has been fully implemented. Progress has been made in inpatient data collecting capability, but it has not been fully established for outpatient care. Competing priorities have delayed the establishment of this tracking capability. Latest estimates suggest that medical record tracking capability will begin to be installed in December 1988 and be completed in September 1989. The third recommendation was that the data tracking system assess treatment outcome. While we have concurred with this recommendation, the incorporation of treatment outcome data is not a part of any existing VA data base. This is an innovative concept that is currently being stressed in pilot programs guided by Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Service such as the Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill (HCMI) Veterans Program and the Region I Mental Health Initiatives Project. To help implement P.L. 100-494, a comprehensive evaluation of treatment provided to veterans in Specialized PTSD Inpatient Programs, in PTSD Outpatient Programs and through PTSD Treatment Teams will be developed. The fourth recommendation in this section, the one that has been fully implemented, was that an epidemiological and demographic study of veterans with PTSD being cared for by VA Medical Centers, Outpatient Clinics and Vet Centers be performed. The results of this study have been reported in the Special Committee's Third Annual Report (1987).

Three recommendations (#7-#9) were made under the heading "Improving Access to Care." Recommendation #7 was that adequate diagnosis be provided for combat veterans regardless of service-connected status, and this is being done. Recommendation #8 was that a standardized protocol be developed to identify patients at risk for PTSD, and this is in the process of implementation through DM&S Circular 10-87-52 on PTSD diagnosis as well as through the mechanism of Program Guides on the treatment of PTSD which should be published in FY 1989. The ninth recommendation was that combat veterans be assessed for PTSD regardless of priority for care as defined locally. To a significant degree, this recommendation is being implemented in the same manner as Recommendation #7 by means of continuing education for VA staff on the diagnosis and treatment of PTSD and the requirement that patients in need of care be evaluated regardless of service-connected status.

Under the heading "Diagnosis of PTSD" three recommendations (#10-#12) were made and all have been implemented. Recommendation #10, for increased guidance in diagnosis of PTSD, has been implemented by DM&S Circular 10-87-52 and by continuing PTSD education. Recommendation #11, for the development of PTSD rating scales, has been implemented and Circular 10-87-52 references several of the more popular rating scales. Recommendation #12, calling for education in psychological and physiological techniques in PTSD diagnosis, has also been carried out through training programs at the Regional, Medical District and Medical Center levels.

Under the heading "Treatment", five recommendations (#13-#17) were made, all of which are in the process of implementation. Recommendation #13 is for the development of Mental Health Program Guides for PTSD. These guides, one for PTSD Treatment in General Psychiatry and one for Specialized Inpatient PTSD Units, are being developed and should be in the field in FY 1989. The Program Guides will also satisfy Recommendation #14 which called for the development of criteria for referral of patients to specific PTSD treatment programs. Recommendation #15, was for a specific DRG or pass through status for PTSD. The Department of Medicine and Surgery (DM&S) and the VA RAM Task Force are currently reviewing a proposed revision of psychiatric DRG's which includes special provisions for PTSD. This new classification system will be pilot tested at 12 VA medical centers during FY 1989. Recommendation #16, on adequate staffing for consultation/liaison services, is being implemented through the establishment of PTSD Treatment Teams. Recommendation #17, for systematic coordination and integration of VA treatment services including Vet Center activities, is being implemented and is reinforced through continuing education.

Recommendations #18-#21 came under the heading of "Research"; two have been implemented and two have not. That PTSD research remains a high priority for the VA (Recommendation #18) is demonstrated by the increase in funding for PTSD research from 1986 to 1987; as reported in my testimony to the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee on July 14, 1988. Recommendation #19, requesting special funding for PTSD research, has not been implemented because of our policy that research projects should be funded on the basis of merit and peer review, rather than by topic. Recommendation #20, for a repeat of the 1984 workshop on PTSD research has not been implemented because of budgetary constraints. Recommendation #21, urging awareness and expertise in PTSD on the Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Merit Review Board, has been implemented. Dr. Terence Keane, Chief of Psychology Service at VA Medical Center, Boston, Massachusetts, served on the Board for three years. He is a recognized leader in PTSD research. Dr. Patricia Sutker, Chief of Psychology Service, VA Medical Center, New Orleans, Louisiana, is also highly respected in the area of PTSD research and has recently been appointed to serve a three year term on the Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Merit Review Board. There were five recommendations (#22-#25, #27) under "Educaton," all of which have been and continue to be implemented. Recommendation #22, urged a national approach to PTSD training. This is being insured through the PTSD Education Committee which is composed of staff from VA Central Office and the Special Committee on PTSD. Designation of PTSD as a national education focus with special funding for FY's 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988 also reinforced implementation of this recommendation. Recommendation #23 urged assessment of the impact of PTSD education which has been done by both the Special Committee, which has documented an increase in PTSD diagnosis following PTSD education and the Office of Academic Affairs' program assessments. Recommendation #24 was for the identification of faculty for PTSD education programs which has been done and which is continuing. Recommendation #25, for central direction of PTSD education, has been realized by the PTSD Education Committee cited above. Recommendation #27 (please recall that there is no #26) suggests five target audiences for PTSD education; VA clinical and administrative staff, military personnel, community groups and students of the health professions. Some work has been done with all of these groups although the major emphasis has been on VA staff and students.

The final section of the First Annual Report, "Veterans Benefits Issues" included Recommendations #28-#33. Recommendation #28 has not only been met, it has been exceeded: the Special Committee asked for a three month survey of PTSD claims adjudication but a one year survey was carried out and reported to the Committee. A tracking system for PTSD claims (Recommendation #29) is in place. Recommendation #30 stated that adjudication boards give presumptive accuracy to a clinical diagnosis of PTSD with verification of the stressor required only in questionable cases. This recommendation has not been implemented since it is contrary to the Department of Veterans Benefits' practice requiring verification with regard to all types of disability. Recommendation #31, for joint training of adjudicators and clinicians, has been implemented as has Recommendation #32, urging adjudicators to consider all relevant clinical information in claims decisions. Recommendation #33, that a PTSD coordinator be designated at each DVB Regional Office, has also been implemented.

In summary, of the 32 recommendations of the First Annual Report, 19 have been implemented, 10 more are in the process of being implemented and three have not been implemented.

The Special Committee on PTSD's Second Annual Report (1986) contained five general recommendations, all of which have been or are being implemented. Chapter 3 of the Report included 42 recommendations on the establishment and management of Specialized Inpatient PTSD Units (SIPUs) which will be incorporated into the Program Guide for Specialized Inpatient Units (1989). Imbedded in the text of Chapters 6-10 of the report were 27 additional recommendations, many of which were similar to the recommendations of the First Annual Report.

Regarding the five general recommendations, the first two, the establishment of PTSD Treatment Teams and the development of standards and evaluation for SIPUs, are both in the process of being implemented as noted above. The standards will be published in the Program Guides and will form the basis for program evaluation of SIPUs beyond that already done for these units as part of Psychiatry Service. The last three general recommendations have all been implemented. They were: a study of numbers and demographics of patients treated for PTSD in outpatient and inpatient services (reported in the Special Committee's Third Annual Report); targeting VA medical centers perceived as having a disproportionately low frequency of diagnosing PTSD for PTSD education (implemented in 1987 and 1988); and continued monitoring of adjudication of PTSD claims.

Chapter 6, "Screening for PTSD", had two recommendations: that there be a question on the 10-10M (patient initial screening form) on combat exposure and that a positive response trigger further evaluation of the patient for combat related problems such as PTSD. These recommendations have been implemented through the inclusion of military history and combat exposure items on the computerized Medical Administration Service software package, by a circular (DM&S 10-88-22) and education on the importance and nature of the military history and by including the military history as a required item for completion in the medical record as part of VA Systematic External Review Program (SERP) surveys. Chapter 7, "Methods for Psychological Assessment of PTSD" included 8 recommendations for a basic PTSD exam and a recommendation for a brief PTSD evaluation extracted from elements of the basic exam. The 8 basic exam elements are: clinical interview, structured interview for PTSD, military history and pre-post military adjustment, mental status exam, psychometric evaluation, combat experience scale, psychophysiological assessment, information from archival records (military/medical) and information from significant others. All these recommendations have been implemented through several mechanisms including DM&S Circular 10-87-52, continuing PTSD education and planned incorporation in the Program Guides.

Chapter 8, "Research", had five recommendations. The first was a repetition of the request to maintain PTSD as a high priority for VA research. This, as noted above, has been implemented. The last four recommendations in this section have not yet been implemented pending availability of resources. These recommendations were: a repeat of the 1979 request for proposals on PTSD research; support for attendance at a mini-residency at the University of Michigan on research design; special research training for staff of the Specialized Inpatient PTSD Units; and a repeat of the Special PTSD Research Training program.

Chapter 9, "Education", had five recommendations. The first recommendation, for formal identification of faculty for VA training, was implemented, and a list was developed. In practice this list has not seen much use since the PTSD Education Committee and the local Regional Medical Education Centers (RMECs) are already aware of subject matter experts in the field. The second recommendation was not truly a "recommendation" but rather it was more a comment on allocation of training funds on PTSD for Vet Centers and other DM&S programs. Further monitoring of education and integration of medical center and vet center training activities has continued. The third recommendation repeated the need for education on PTSD for five major audiences, as listed in First Annual Report Recommendation #27. As noted above, this is being done. PTSD Treatment Teams have been particularly active in education for the community and for students. The fourth and fifth recommendations repeated the need for targeting areas with a low incidence of PTSD diagnosis for education and the need for assessment of the impact of PTSD education. Both of these recommendations have been and continue to be carried out.

Chapter 10, "Veterans Benefits", had six recommendations, four of which were implemented. The third recommendation which was not implemented, suggested that comparable data be submitted on adjudication of claims for psychiatric diagnoses other than PTSD, for purposes of comparison. This could not be done because of the workload increase such activity would impose on DVB, especially in view of staffing cuts. The sixth recommendation, that information from the adjudicators' Spring training be forwarded to the Special Committee, could not be implemented because that training had not yet taken place. PTSD was included in the agenda of the September 1987 adjudicators meeting. The four recommendations which were implemented included: continuation of the PTSD tracking system; identification of adjudication data submitted to the Special Committee by Regional Office; review of Regional Offices that appear to be high or low outliers with regard to approval/disapproval rates; and continuation of joint DM&S, DVB training on PTSD.

In summary, the Second Annual Report had all five general recommendations and 21 of the 27 chapter recommendations implemented; 6 recommendations were not implemented.

The Special Committee's Third Annual Report (1987) had 39 recommendations of which 33 have been, or are being implemented.

Under "Strategic Planning and Resource Allocation", there were two recommendations, both of which are being implemented. Recommendation #1 is that the PTSD data base represented by the Third Annual Report be used in strategic planning and PTSD resource allocation. This recommendation has been further promoted by the Special Committee's distribution of the data base to the Regional Directors in 1988. The second recommendation, to improve the consistency of PTSD treatment in the VA is being promoted by continuing VA-wide PTSD education and will be reinforced by the publication of the Program Guides.

The section on "PTSD Treatment Teams" had three recommendations (#3-#5), all of which are in the process of being implemented. Recommendation #3 urged a five year timetable for establishing PTSD Treatment Teams in all VAMCs. While we do not believe that all VAMCs require Treatment Teams, the "second wave" of 10 to 12 teams will be placed in FY 1989. Recommendation #4, on monitoring the activity and productivity of Treatment Teams is being done and continues to be enhanced. Recommendation #5, on criteria for placement of new Treatment Teams, will be met by involving the Special Committee more deeply with the site selection process for the 1989 Treatment Teams; and VA Medical Centers will be invited to submit applications for funding these PTSD Treatment Teams through an RFP process.

The section on "Special Inpatient PTSD Units" had two recommendations, (#6 and #7) which repeated the request for establishing standards of care through the Program Guides and review of funding strategies for SIPUs under the VA's Resource Allocation Methodology (RAM). As noted above, both of these recommendations are being implemented.

The "Vet Centers" section contained 13 recomendations (#8-#20), all but one of which are in implementation. The recommendations included: incorporation of Vet Centers into the DM&S organizational matrix; review of the Vet Center mission, establishment of goals and policy guidance for Readjustment Counseling Service and Vet Centers; (the new Vet Center Program Guide was published in January 1988); career appointments for Vet Center staff; productivity standards and data for Vet Centers; standards of care and quality assurance for Vet Centers; comprehensive outreach and case management; more comprehensive and sophisticated diagnosis and treatment; identification of medical problems in Vet Center clients; aggressive outreach to female and minority veterans; enhanced communication and collaboration between Vet Centers and VA Medical Centers; and increased clinical supervision and sharing of productivity data with Vet Centers. Recommendation #14, that legislative authority be sought to expand eligibility for Vet Center services to veterans of all combat eras has not been implemented. The Agency currently supports extension of this eligibility of post Vietnam era combat veterans.

The section on "Clinical Data Acquisition" had three recomendations (#21-#23). Recommendations #21 and #22, for repetition of the inpatient and outpatient PTSD survey in FY 1987, were not implemented due to the cost implications. (Further analysis of the existing PTSD data base is being performed.) Recomendation #23, urging timely completion of the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study conducted by the Research Triangle Institute, has been implemented. Preliminary data from the Study have been provided to the Agency and have been reported to Congress. The full report is expected by November 1988.

Three Recommendations (#24-#26) were made in the "Treatment" section. Recommendation #24, completion of the Program Guides on PTSD, is being implemented with completion expected in FY 1989. Recommendation #25, increased communication, coordination and combined education between VAMCs and Vet Centers, is also being implemented as an ongoing process. Recommendation #26 noted the relatively low incidence of reported PTSD in outpatient alcohol and drug programs. Exploration of this phenomenon and education on the interaction of substance abuse disorders and PTSD have been implemented.

Only one recommendation (#27) was made under "Identifying Veterans at Risk for PTSD," a repetition of the request to record combat information on "10-10M" forms. The implementation of action to meet this request has been described above.

The "Research" section had two recommendations (#28 and #29). They repeated the requests for financial incentives to priority research and the suggestion of a special request for research proposals on PTSD. Neither recommendation has been implemented for the reasons cited above, though, as also noted above, VA research on PTSD has increased significantly in recent years without these special provisions.

The "Education" section has three recommendations (#30-#32), which repeated previous recommendations. These have been implemented. The recommendations include: a national approach on PTSD education; a national faculty and updating of education materials on PTSD; and targeting of areas with low frequency of PTSD diagnosis for PTSD education.

The final section, "Veterans Benefits Issues," had seven recommendations (#33-#39), with implementation of all but one. The recommendation not implemented was #37, a repeat of the request that DVB reconsider its standards for establishing evidence of a stressor in patients whom clinicians have unequivocably diagnosed as having PTSD. The rationale for not implementing this recommendation has been noted above. The recommendations that have been implemented include: continued monitoring by DVB of the adjudication and appeals process regarding PTSD claims; continued review of approval/disapproval rates at the Regional Office level; sharing of information on Board of Veterans Appeal (BVA) actions and DVB Regional Office reviews with the Special Committee; sharing of information on errors in the adjudication process with DVB Regional Offices; awareness of the need for providing a supportive clinical environment in situations where questions to a veteran elaborating on a PTSD stressor is anticipated as being significantly distressing; and ongoing outreach to veterans suffering from PTSD.

In summary, 33 recommendations from the Third Annual Report have been or are being implemented. Of the 6 recommendations not implemented, three are repeats of prior, non-implemented recommendations.

CONTRACTUAL REPORT OF FINDINGS FROM THE NATIONAL VIETNAM VETERANS READJUSTMENT STUDY, NOVEMBER 7, 1988

VOLUME I: EXECUTIVE SUMMARY, DESCRIPTION OF FINDINGS, AND TECHNICAL APPENDICES

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Executive Summary is provided in three parts. In Part A, highlights of some major findings are provided in brief summary form. In Part B, study findings from the various chapters of the report are integrated to address directly the specific issues raised in Public Law 98-160, the enabling legislation for the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study. Part C provides a chapter by chapter summary of the entire report.

A. Highlights of findings

Conducted in response to Public Law 98-160, the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study (NVVRS) is the most rigorous and comprehensive study to date of the prevalence of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) and other psychological problems in readjusting to civilian life among Vietnam veterans.

The sample of veterans examined in the NVVRS was broader and more inclusive than those of past studies. As a result, the descriptions of Vietnam theater and era veterans found in this report are in some ways different from, but more representative than, descriptions provided in previous research.

The majority of Vietnam theater veterans have made a successful re-entry to civilian life and currently experience few symptoms of PTSD or other readjustment problems.

Although in general, male Vietnam theater veterans do not differ greatly in their current life adjustment from their era veteran counterparts, there is some evidence that female theater veterans currently experience more readjustment problems than Vietnam era veteran women of similar age and military occupation.

NVVRS findings indicate that 15.2 percent of all male Vietnam theater veterans are current cases of PTSD. This represents about 479,000 of the estimated 3.14 million men who served in the Vietnam theater. Among Vietnam theater veteran women, current PTSD prevalence is estimated to be 8.5 percent of the approximately 7,200 women who served, or about 610 current cases. For both males and females, these rates of current PTSD for theater veterans are consistently and dramatically higher than rates for comparable Vietnam era veterans (2.5 percent male, 1.1 percent female) or civilian counterparts (1.2 percent male, 0.3 percent female).

An additional 11.1 percent of male theater veterans and 7.8 percent of female theater veterans—350,000 additional men and women—currently suffer from "partial PTSD." That is, they have clinically-significant stress reaction symptoms of insufficient intensity or breadth to qualify as full PTSD, but may still warrant professional attention.

NVVRS analyses of the lifetime prevalence of PTSD indicate that over one-third (30.6 percent) of male Vietnam theater veterans (over 960,000 men) and over one-fourth (26.9 percent) of women serving in the Vietnam theater (over 1,900 women) had the full-blown disorder at some time during their lives. Thus, about one-half of the men and one-third of the women who have ever had PTSD still have it today. These findings are consistent with the conceptualization of PTSD as a chronic, rather than acute, disorder.

NVVRS findings also indicate a strong relationship between PTSD and other postwar readjustment problems: having PTSD increases the likelihood of having other specific psychiatric disorders and a wide variety of other postwar readjustment problems. These findings confirm that, in addition to the painful symptoms of PTSD itself, the lives of Vietnam veterans with PTSD are profoundly disrupted, in that they experience problems in virtually every domain of their lives.

The prevalence of PTSD and other postwar psychological problems is significantly, and often dramatically, higher among those with high levels of exposure to combat and other war zone stressors in Vietnam, either by comparison with their Vietnam era veteran and civilian peers or with other veterans who served in the Vietnam theater and were exposed to low or moderate levels of war zone stress. This suggests a prominent role for exposure to war stress in the development of subsequent psychological problems, and confirms that those who were most heavily involved in the war are those for whom readjustment was, and continues to be, most difficult.

Among men who served in the Vietnam theater, substantial differences in current PTSD prevalence rates were also found by minority status. The current prevalence of PTSD is estimated to be 27.9 percent among Hispanics, 20.6 percent among blacks, and 13.7 percent among white/others. Analyses of several factors that may account for these differences suggested that differences between blacks and white/others may be attributed to their differing levels of exposure to war zone stress, but differences between Hispanic men and the other two groups could not be explained by this factor. More generally, the evidence suggests that black and Hispanic Vietnam theater veteran men have experienced more mental health and life adjustment problems subsequent to their service in Vietnam than white/other veterans.

Interviews conducted with the spouses or partners of Vietnam theater veterans with and without PTSD revealed that PTSD has a substantial negative impact not only on the veterans' own lives, but also on the lives of spouses, children, and others living with such veterans.

Vietnam veterans with post-war psychological problems are more likely to have sought mental health care provided by the VA than those without such problems. Such veterans have also made greater use of mental health services in general, both from the VA and from other sources (e.g., private physicians or clinics), with non-VA sources accounting for the majority of their total mental health service use. Nevertheless, very substantial proportions of Vietnam veterans with readjustment problems have never used the VA or any oher source for their mental health problems, especially during the previous 12 months.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, December 6, 1988.

Hon. THOMAS K. TURNAGE,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I am writing in reference to the September 30, 1988, "Audit of Hiring Practices for VA Police Officers," Report Number 8R6-A99-122, conducted by the Office of Inspector General. I was shocked and dismayed at the audit's assessment of the present management of the VA's Security Service. I urge you to give the issues addressed in the audit your immediate attention in order to attempt to resolve what may become a dangerous situation relative to security at VA facilities across the country.

There are many unanswered questions that are of concern in light of the IG's report, and I would appreciate your looking into and reporting to me on the following matters:

1. The IG found that 57% of VA police officers surveyed were either unqualified, unsuited, or both for their current positions.

a. What immediate disciplinary action has been taken against the 21 police officers who did not disclose prior criminal convictions on their applications for VA employment?

b. What action has been taken regarding the IG's recommendation that the VA initiate action concerning employment histories and arrest records for all officers currently on duty and use the results of those inquiries to support removing unsuitable employees from police officer positions, and what were the results of this action?

2. What analysis, if any, has been done on the comparability of pay between VA police officers, other comparable federal, state, and local law enforcement personnel, and private sector security officers, particularly working at hospitals?

a. If such analysis has been carried out, what were the findings?

b. If no such analysis has been carried out, how long would it take to do so and would you agree to do so?

3. What analysis, if any, has been done on the comparability of security functions between VA medical centers and private hospitals?

a. If such analysis has been carried out, what were the findings?

b. If no such analysis has been carried out, how long would it take to do so and would you agree to do so?

4. What analysis, if any, has been done utilizing individual activity reports on security incidents from VA medical centers to determine if there is a difference between VAMCs located in predominantly rural areas as compared with those in urban locales?

a. If such analysis has been carried out, what were the findings?

b. If no such analysis has been carried out, how long would it take to do so and would you agree to do so?

5. Would it be appropriate and desirable to transfer dollars and perhaps FTEE for police officers from medical centers with low incidence levels to medical centers with higher incidence levels so as to provide a higher salary for police officers in higher incidence areas?

6. For those medical centers in high-crime surroundings, should not serious consideration be given to the arming of VA police officers running metal detectors, and should not they and all or certain other security officers routinely be issued bullet-proof vests?

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

With warm regards,
Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, OFFICE OF THE ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS, Washington, DC, January 9, 1989.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your letter of December 6, 1988, concerning the report of the Veterans Administration Office of Inspector General (VAOIG), "Audit of Hiring Practices," dated September 30, 1988.

Based upon preliminary reports provided by the VAOIG early in 1988 which indicated deficiencies in VA police hiring practices, a comprehensive series of corrective actions including the development and implementation of additional policies and procedures was quickly initiated. In May 1988, all facilities were alerted to prepare requests for the Office of Personnel Management's Federal Investigations Processing Center (OPM-FIPC) to repeat National Agency Checks and Inquiries (NACIs) on all currently employed VA police officers. Following coordination with OPM and consultations with national union representatives, the repeat NACIs were initiated in August 1988. Concurrently, a VA police officer position sensitivity level review was conducted in accordance with Federal Personnel Manual procedures. The position was designated as Non-critical-Sensitive which resulted in an Agency decision requiring newly hired VA police officers to undergo a Minimum Background Investigation (MBI) after employment in lieu of the lesser scope NACI investigation.

In August 1988, a new Department of Medicine and Surgery (DM&S) policy was published prohibiting the employment of any person as a VA police officer "who was convicted of a serious crime or whose history reflects a disregard for laws and regulations, questionable character, or a pattern of misconduct or poor work habits." With the publication of this policy, the requirement that minimum background investigations be conducted on all new police hires was initiated along with uniform procedures for conducting and documenting the pre-employment screening of police applicants for verification of qualifications and suitability. The Director of the DM&S Security Service was assigned the responsibility to monitor field facilities' compliance with the VA police officer pre-employment screening requirement. This central monitorship of VA police officer applicant screening extends to the withholding of centrally issued VA police badges in any case where pre-employment screening does not meet the requirements.

I am confident that the described measures will substantially correct deficiencies in VA police officer hiring practices. An enclosed fact sheet provides additional information specific to the questions contained in your letter.

Your interest in this matter is appreciated.

Sincerely,

THOMAS K. TURNAGE, Administrator.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY, VA POLICE OFFICER EMPLOYMENT

Question 1a.—The IG found that 57% of VA police officers surveyed were either unqualified, unsuited, or both for their current positions. What immediate disciplinary action has been taken against the 21 police officers who did not disclose prior criminal convictions on their applications for VA employment?

Answer 1a. Of the 21 police officers reported by the VAOIG as not listing convictions on their applications for Federal employment, two were terminated, three resigned in lieu of proposed terminations, four resigned prior to proposed termination and two were reassigned from police officer positions to nonsensitive positions. The remaining ten cases remain under review for two reasons. First, field facilities were required to forward the Official Personnel Folders (OPFs) of all reportedly unqualified or unsuitable police officers to the VA Office of Personnel and Labor Relations (OP&LR) for examinations by personnel staff specialists and for a joint review with a VA Office of Inspector General (VAOIG) auditor in possession of the case investigative materials. Prior to the OPF transmittals, the affected field facilities had not been provided with the documentation supporting the VAOIG findings in these cases. Second, the results of the repeat National Agency Checks and Inquiries (NACIs) pertaining to these cases have not yet been received from the Office of Personnel Management Federal Investigations Processing Center (OPM-FIPC). The results of the OPM investigations are important to the suitability review and adjudication process in several of these cases.

Question 1b.—What action has been taken regarding the IG's recommendation that the VA initiate action concerning employment histories and arrest records for all officers currently on duty and use the results of these inquiries to support removing unsuitable employees from police officer positions, and what were the results of this action?

Answer 1b. Repeat National Agency Checks and Inquiries (NACIs) were initiated on all current VA police officers in August 1988. On November 1, 1988, the VA Office of Personnel and Labor Relations provided detailed instructions to all field facilities which reiterate the Department of Medicine and Surgery suitability standard for VA police officers and which require a careful review of any adverse information revealed by the repeat NACIs. Field facility Directors and Personnel Officers were instructed to use the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) suitability and adjudication guidelines outlined in the Federal Personnel Manual, Chapters 731 and 732. Field facilities are required to report the results of the repeat NACIs and actions taken on unfavorable information to the VA OP&LR.

Question 2a.—What analysis, if any, has been done on the comparability of pay between VA police officers, other comparable federal, state and local law enforcement personnel, and private sector security officers, particularly any working at hospitals?

Answer 2a. Federal agencies which employ self protection forces (e.g., Department of Defense, General Services Administration, Department of Interior, etc.) under the provisions of Title 5, United States Code, are required to use the Office of Personnel Management "Grade Evaluation Guide for Police and Security Guard Positions." This standard represents the results of the occupational analyses required to be conducted by OPM on behalf of Federal agencies and is focused on the typical duties experienced in the protection of life and property at the full range of facilities (including hospitals) which are under Federal control. As General Schedule positions subject to the provisions of Title 5, U.S.C., VA police officer grades must be classified by application of the OPM standard and paid according to the General Schedule. Although the grades and pay of VA police officers are not intended to be competitive with that of state, county and municipal police officers, a comparison of the GS-5 entry level pay was made with the entry pay scales of one hundred cities and townships under 10,000 in population using the Fraternal Order of Police national survey of police salaries and benefits. This comparison revealed that the GS-5 entry pay exceeded the police entry pay of 37% of those jurisdictions. As with the pay levels of over 12,000 local government police departments, the pay rates of private sector employers vary considerably with location and the duties prescribed by the employers. Official studies comparing the salaries of VA police officers with similar positions at local facilities employing self protection forces are authorized to determine if salary is the direct cause of serious VA police officer recruitment and retention difficulties. Such studies, as authorized under 38 U.S.C. 4107(g), have resulted in the increase of rates of basic pay for VA police officers at thirty-three locations. In addition to these applications of special pay, it is recognized that GS-5 VA police officer duties may support reclassification to the GS-6 grade level at thirty-nine locations due to a 1988 revision of the OPM police position classification standard. Upgradings at these locations are being encouraged where final reviews of local conditions support the reclassifications.

Question 2b.—If no such analysis has been carried out, how long would it take to do so and would you agree to do so?

Answer 2b. The ongoing unofficial comparison of pay situations in the police occupational area, the fact that all official occupational analyses are the responsibility of OPM, and the existence of specific statutory authority whereby the Administrator may approve special salary rates for VA police on a local need basis serve to nullify the practicality of any independent analysis.

Question 3.—What analysis, if any, has been done on the comparability of security functions between VA medical centers and private hospitals?

Answer 3. The basic responsibilities of VA police officers in the areas of security, law enforcement and patient handling are mandated by 39 U.S.C. 218. Their specific tasks and limitations are well defined in policy, operating procedures, General Counsel opinions and training. VA police officer tasks also conform with the duties of Federally employed police officers as outlined in the OPM classification standard for police officers. Further, in accordance with 38 U.S.C. 218, regulations and law enforcement policies and procedures are subject to consultation with the Attorney General prior to issuance. Although a comparability study of VA and private hospitals was not made, years of ongoing dialogue with leading private hospital security officials indicate that most security officers in the private sector have no local law enforcement authority and less of a direct patient care team support role than do VA police. Whereas the tasks assigned to VA police are uniform nationwide, those of hospital security officers in the private sector vary greatly.

Question 3a.—If such analysis has been carried out, what were the findings?

Answer 3a. No formal analysis was conducted.

Question 3b.—If no such analysis has been carried out, how long would it take to do so and would you agree to do so?

Answer 3b. It is very doubtful that any benefit would be gained by the function comparability study.

Question 4. What analysis has been done utilizing individual activity reports on security incidents from VA medical centers to determine if there is a difference between VAMCs located in predominantly rural areas as compared with those in urban locales?

Answer 4. No specific formal analysis has been done. However, through years of routine monthly reviews of the DM&S Uniform Monthly Crime Report and other closely followed sources of information such as the annual FBI publication, "Crime in the United States—Uniform Crime Reports," it is clear that the rate of security incidents at urban area medical centers exceeds those at medical centers in rural areas. The difference in degrees of security problems and police needs is also reflected in police manpower staffing reports which are a measure of key task activity performance for full time police employees.

Question 4a.—If such analysis has been carried out, what were the findings?

Answer 4a. No formal analysis was conducted.

Question 4b.—If no such analysis has been carried out, how long would it take to do so and would you agree to do so?

Answer 4b. Data currently available clearly indicates that security incidents are consistently higher in urban area locations. A formal analysis to validate this fact appears unnecessary.

Question 5.—Would it be appropriate and desirable to transfer dollars and perhaps FTEE for police officers from medical centers with low incidence levels to medical centers with higher incidence levels so as to provide a higher salary for police officers in higher incidence levels?

Answer 5. As previously discussed, VA police officer grades are determined by the required legal application of an OPM classification standard and commensurate salaries are in accordance with the General Schedule. The available path for increasing salaries where supportable is the special salary rate provision of 38 U.S.C. 4107(g). Where supportable, VA police officer grades can be classified to the GS-6 level. It would not be appropriate, desirable or feasible to transfer minimal security resources of low crime rural area medical centers to high crime facilities to provide higher salaries for urban area VA police.

Question 6.—For those medical centers in high crime surroundings, should not serious consideration be given to the arming of VA police officers running metal detectors, and should not they and certain other security officers routinely be issued bullet proof vests?

Answer 6. The outbreak of a gunfire exchange anywhere within a hospital or a school is as dangerous as the outbreak of a fire or an explosion. The possibility of a gunfire exchange within a hospital must be kept to the absolute minimum. VA policy enforces a firearm-free environment which extends to the operation of metal detectors and egress theft detection stations. Metal detector stations are located in congested hospital lobbies. They serve effectively as a deterrent to any holders of concealed firearms and primarily reveal the far more common possessions of pocket knives. At the longest running and most active VA metal detector station of the VA Medical Center in Bronx, New York, a concealed firearm has not been detected in over two and one-half years. The Security Service Director and other responsible officials of the Department of Medicine and surgery are acutely aware of the present and potential levels of offenses to which VA medical centers and VA police officers are vulnerable. Serious consideration of weapon and equipment needs, including evaluation of whether VA police officers should bear firearms, is ongoing.

Protective vests for VA police officers are an authorized item of issue. However, due to the very low risk of weapon inflicted injuries to VA police officers and the discomfort the wearing of such vest is to many police officers, the VA (like most state, county and municipal police departments) does not require mandatory wear of protective vests. In keeping with labor consultation obligations, medical center managers are instructed to procure and require the wear of protective vests when a majority of the Security Unit members agree upon the need and their mandatory wear.

S. 13

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. REFERENCE TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

TITLE I—COMPENSATION AND OTHER BENEFITS

PART A—COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 101. DISABILITY COMPENSATION AND DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall, as provided in paragraph (2), increase, effective December 1, 1989, the rates of and limitations on Department of Veterans Affairs disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation.

(2)(A) In the case of each of the rates and limitations in sections 314, 315(1), 362, 411, 413, and 414 of title 38, United States Code, that were increased by amendments made by title XI of the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1988 (division B of Public Law 100-687), the Secretary shall further increase such rates and limitations, as in effect on November 30, 1989, by the same percentage that benefit amounts payable under title II of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) are increased effective December 1, 1989, as a result of a determination under section 215(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 415(i)).

(B) In the computation of increased rates and limitations pursuant to subparagraph

(A), amounts of $0.50 or more shall be rounded to the next higher dollar amount and amounts of less than $0.50 shall be rounded to the next lower dollar amount.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—The Secretary may adjust administratively, consistent with the increases made under subsection (a), the rates of disability compensation payable to persons within the purview of section 10 of Public Law 85-857 who are not in receipt of compensation payable pursuant to chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code.

(c) PUBLICATION REQUIREMENT.—At the same time as the matters specified in section 215(i)(2)(D) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 415(i)(2)(D)) are required to be published by reason of a determination made under section 215(i) of such Act during fiscal year 1990, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the rates and limitations being increased under this section and the rates and limitations as so increased.

SEC. 102. REHABILITATION SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCES FOR VETERANS WITH SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITIES.

(a) RATE INCREASES.—The table in section 1508(b) is amended to read as follows:

"Column I	Column II	Column III	Column IV	Column V
Type of program	No dependents	One dependent	Two dependents	More than two dependents
				The amount in column IV, plus the following for each dependent in excess of two:
Institutional training:
Full-time	$353	$437	$514	$38
Three-quarter time	265	328	386	28
Half-time	176	220	258	19
Farm cooperative, apprentice, or other on-job training:
Full-time	308	372	429	27
Extended evaluation:
Full-time	353	437	514	38
Independent living training:
Full-time	353	437	514	38
Three-quarter time	265	328	386	28
Half-time	176	220	258	19."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on January 1, 1990.

SEC. 103. EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR SURVIVORS AND DEPENDENTS.

(a) INCREASED ALLOWANCES.—Section 1732 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by inserting "113.8 percent of" in paragraph (1) after "computed at"; and

(B) by striking out "the rate prescribed in section 1682(b)(2) of this title for less-than-half-time pursuit of an institutional program by an eligible veteran" in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "the lesser of (1) the rate determined under clause (A) of section 1682(b) of this title, or (2) 113.8 percent of the rate provided in clause (B) of such section 1682(b)";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking out "$304" and inserting in lieu thereof "$346";

(3) in subsection (c)—

(A) by inserting "113.8 percent of" in paragraph (2) after "computed at"; and

(B) by striking out "the rate prescribed in section 1682(e) of this title." in paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "the lesser of (A) the rate determined under clause (A) of section 1682(b) of this title, or (B) 113.8 percent of the rate provided in clause (B) of such section 1682(b). Section 1682(e) of this title, except for the first sentence, shall apply to the educational assistance allowance computed under this paragraph.";

(4) in subsection (e)—

(A) by striking out "(e) In" and inserting in lieu thereof "(e)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, in"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance prescribed, in subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) of section 1682 of this title and in section 1787(b)(1) of this title, as referred to in section 1682(g) of this title, for a veteran with no dependents shall be deemed to be equal to 113.8 percent of the amount so prescribed."; and

(5) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) In the computation of an educational assistance allowance under this section, any amount of 50 cents or more shall be rounded to the next higher dollar and any amount of 49 cents or less shall be rounded to the next lower dollar.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on January 1, 1990.

PART B—OTHER BENEFITS PROVISIONS

SEC. 111. EXPANSION OF CLOTHING ALLOWANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The text of section 362 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Administrator" the first two places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary"; and

(2) by striking out all after "each veteran" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "who, because of disability which is compensable under this chapter—

"(1) wears or uses a prosthetic or orthopedic appliance (including a wheelchair) which the Secretary determines tends to wear out or tear the clothing of such veteran; or

"(2) uses medication which (A) has been prescribed for a service-connected skin condition, and (B) the Secretary determines stains or otherwise damages such veteran's clothing.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 101 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(33) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.".

SEC. 112. PENSION PAYMENTS FOR HOSPITALIZED VETERANS.

(a) AMOUNT OF PENSION.—Section 3203(a)(1) is amended by striking out "$60" each place it appears in subparagraphs (A) and (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "$105".

(b) EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR PAYMENT OF FULL PENSION TO HOSPITALIZED VETERANS.—Section 3203(a)(1) is amended—

(1) by striking out subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of this paragraph, where any veteran having neither spouse nor child is being furnished hospital or nursing home care by the Department of Veterans Affairs, no pension in excess of $105 per month shall be paid to or for the veteran for any period after—

"(i) in the case of a veteran being furnished hospital care, the end of the eighth calendar month following the month of admission for such care; and

"(ii) in the case of a veteran being furnished nursing home care, the end of the third calendar month following the month of admission for such care.";

(2) in subparagraph (D), by striking out "the last day of the third month referred to in such subparagraph" and inserting in lieu thereof "the last day of the period for which the veteran's pension is not reduced under such subparagraph"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) The Secretary may extend the period during which the pension of a veteran referred to in subparagraph (B)(i) of this paragraph is not reduced under such subparagraph if the Secretary determines that the veteran is likely to be discharged from the hospital within the period for which the extension is granted or within a reasonably short period after the expiration of such extended period. No extension may be granted under this subparagraph for a period exceeding two months. However, successive extensions may be granted. The total period of all extensions granted a veteran under this subparagraph in connection with one hospitalization may not exceed four months.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect with respect to veterans who are being furnished hospital care by the Department of Veterans Affairs on or after (1) the first day of the first month that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act, or (2) October 1, 1989, whichever is later.

SEC. 113. LIMITED EXTENSION OF THE VETERANS' READJUSTMENT APPOINTMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2014(b) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by inserting "eligible" before "veterans of the Vietnam era"; and

(B) by striking out "a veteran of the Vietnam era" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "an eligible veteran of the Vietnam era";

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1991"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) In this subsection, the term 'eligible veteran of the Vietnam era' means an eligible veteran who—

"(A) is a veteran of the Vietnam era; and

"(B) either—

"(i) is a disabled veteran; or

"(ii) during such era, served on active duty in the Vietnam theater of operations, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on January 1, 1990.

PART C—PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 121. EXPANSION OF MULTIYEAR PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY TO INCLUDE NONMEDICAL ITEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 114 is amended—

(1) by striking out the heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 114. Multiyear procurement";

(2) in subsection (a), by striking out "for use in Veterans' Administration health-care facilities";

(3) in subsection (b)(2)(A), by striking out "health-care"; and

(4) in subsection (e)—

(A) by striking out paragraph (2); and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 1 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 114 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"114. Multiyear procurement.".

TITLE II—HEALTH CARE

PART A—PROGRAMS RELATING TO POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER AND MENTAL HEALTH

SEC. 201. CARE FOR COMBAT VETERANS WITH SERVICE-RELATED POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 602 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "For"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(b) Any veteran—

"(1) who served on active duty in a theater of combat operations (as defined in regulations prescribed by the Secretary) during World War I, World War II, the Korean conflict, or the Vietnam Era or in any other area during a period in which hostilities (as defined in subsection (c) of this section) occurred in such area, and

"(2) whom a mental health professional designated by the Chief Medical Director has diagnosed, following an examination of such veteran by such professional, to be suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder related to such service, shall be furnished care and services for such disorder pursuant to sections 610(a)(1)(A) and 612(a)(1)(A) of this title even though such disorder has not been determined to be service-connected.

"(c) For the purposes of subsection (b) of this section, the term 'hostilities' means an armed conflict in which members of the Armed Forces are subjected to danger comparable to the danger to which members of the Armed Forces have been subjected in combat with enemy armed forces during a period of war, as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Defense.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—(1) The heading of such section is amended to read as follows:

"§ 602. Special provisions relating to mental illness disabilities".

(2) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended to read as follows:

"602. Special provisions relating to mental illness disabilities.".

SEC. 202. SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER.

(a) EVALUATION OF STUDY OF POSTWAR PSYCHOLOGICAL PROBLEMS OF VIETNAM VETERANS.—(1) Not later than June 1, 1989, the Special Committee on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Special Committee") established pursuant to section 110(b)(1) of the Veterans' Health Care Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-528; 98 Stat. 2691) shall submit concurrently to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Committees") a report setting forth the Special Committee's evaluation of the results of the study required by section 102 of the Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-160; 97 Stat. 994). Such report shall include the Special Committee's—

(A) overall evaluation of the conduct, validity, and meaning of the study;

(B) assessment of the capability of the Department of Veterans Affairs to meet the need for the diagnosis and treatment of post-traumatic stress disorder of veterans, and other psychological problems of veterans in readjusting to civilian life, as estimated in the results of such study;

(C) evaluation of the Secretary's report on the study; and

(D) recommendations for any further or follow-up research on the matters addressed in the study.

(2) Not later than 30 days after receiving the Special Committee's report under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees any comments concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

(b) UPDATES OF REPORTS UNDER SECTION 110(c) OF PUBLIC LAW 98-528.—(1) Not later than February 1 of each of 1991 and 1992, the Special Committee shall concurrently submit to the Secretary and the Committees a report containing information updating the reports submitted to the Secretary under section 110(e) of the Veterans' Health Care Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-528; 98 Stat. 2693), together with any additional information the Special Committee considers appropriate regarding the overall efforts of the Department of Veterans Affairs to meet the needs of veterans with post-traumatic stress disorder and other psychological problems in readjusting to civilian life.

(2) Not later than 60 days after receiving each of the Special Committee's reports under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees any comments concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

SEC. 203. STUDY OF PSYCHOLOGICAL PROBLEMS AMONG ASIAN-AMERICAN, AMERICAN-INDIAN, NATIVE-HAWAIIAN, OTHER NATIVE-AMERICAN PACIFIC ISLANDER (INCLUDING AMERICAN SAMOAN NATIVE), AND ALASKA NATIVE VIETNAM VETERANS.

(a) STUDY REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall provide for the conduct of a comprehensive study of the following matters:

(1) The prevalence and incidence in the populations of Asian-American, American-Indian, Native-Hawaiian, other Native-American Pacific Islander (including American Samoan Native), and Alaska Native Vietnam veterans of post-traumatic stress disorder; and other psychological problems experienced by such veterans in readjusting to civilian life.

(2) The effects of such disorder and such problems on such veterans.

The Secretary shall provide for particular attention to be devoted in the conduct of the study to veterans who have service-connected disabilities and to women veterans.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than October 1, 1991, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing the results of the study required by subsection (a).

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The terms "veteran", "service-connected", and "Vietnam veteran" shall have the same meanings given those terms in section 102(c) of the Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-160; 38 U.S.C. 612A note).

(2) The term "Alaska Native" has the meaning given the term "Native" in section 3(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(b)).

(3) The term "Native Hawaiian" has the meaning given that term in section 813(3) of the Native American Programs Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 2992c(3)).

SEC. 204. FUNDING FOR POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER PROGRAMS.

In the documents providing detailed information on the budget for the Department of Veterans Affairs that the Secretary of Veterans Affairs submits to the Congress in conjunction with the President's budget submission for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1990 pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, the Secretary shall identify the amounts in the appropriations requests for Department accounts that are estimated to be obligated for—

(1) the payment of compensation to veterans for disabilities resulting from post-traumatic stress disorder (hereinafter in this section referred to as "PTSD") that is service-connected;

(2) the treatment of veterans by or at the expense of the Department for PTSD related to their active-duty service, including specific designation of funds for the treatment of PTSD—

(A) in PTSD programs designated pursuant to section 110(a)(1) of Public Law 98-528;

(B) in inpatient psychiatric programs and outpatient mental health programs other than such designated PTSD programs;

(C) in readjustment counseling programs pursuant to 612A of title 38, United States Code; and

(D) under contract through non-Department providers of (i) readjustment counseling services pursuant to section 612A(e) of such title, (ii) mental health services pursuant to such section 612A(e), or (iii) mental health services pursuant to other authority, and described in the first annual report submitted pursuant to section 110(e)(1) of Public Law 98-528 as having been proposed by the Special Committee on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder;

(3) education, training, and research at—

(A) the National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder established under section 110(c) of Public Law 98-528;

(B) any centers of mental illness research, education, and clinical activities that may be established at Department medical centers; and

(C) other Department research facilities; and

(4) the operation of the National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder.

PART B—OTHER HEALTH-CARE PROGRAMS

SEC. 211. SERVICES TO OVERCOME SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITIES AFFECTING PROCREATION.

Clause (A) of section 601(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(A)(i) surgical services, (ii) services to achieve pregnancy in a veteran or a veteran's spouse when such services are necessary to overcome a service-connected disability impairing the veteran's procreative ability, (iii) dental services and appliances as described in sections 610 and 612 of this title, (iv) optometric and podiatric services, (v) (in the case of a person otherwise receiving care or services under this chapter) preventive health-care services as defined in section 662 of this title, (vi) (except under the conditions described in section 612(f)(1)(A)(i) of this title) wheelchairs, artificial limbs, trusses and similar appliances, special clothing made necessary by the wearing of prosthetic appliances, and such other supplies or services as the Secretary determines to be reasonable and necessary, and (vii) travel and incidental expenses pursuant to the provisions of section 111 of this title; and".

SEC. 212. COMPENSATED WORK THERAPY PROGRAM.

(a) AUTHORIZED SOURCES FOR PROVISION OF THERAPEUTIC WORK.—Subsection (b)(1) of section 618 is amended by striking out "contractual arrangements with private industry or other sources outside the Veterans' Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "a contract or other arrangement with any appropriate source (whether or not an element of the Department of Veterans Affairs or of any other Federal entity)".

(b) USE OF REVOLVING FUND.—The first sentence of such section is amended by inserting before the period at the end "(including defraying the costs of travel and related expenses necessary to train employees in the administration of services under such subsection)".

SEC. 213. STATE HOME CONSTRUCTION GRANTS.

Section 5033(a) is amended in the first sentence by striking out "September 30, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1992".

SEC. 214. PILOT PROGRAM FOR FURNISHING ASSISTIVE ANIMALS TO CERTAIN VETERANS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PILOT PROGRAM.—During fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall conduct a pilot program under which the Secretary shall—

(1) furnish (A) to not more than 20 quadriplegic veterans who have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more, monkeys that are specially trained to assist in the performance of daily living tasks for quadriplegic individuals, and (B) to not more than 10 such veterans, dogs that are so trained; and

(2) facilitate the furnishing of monkeys that are so trained to not more than 20 other quadriplegic veterans.

(b) SELECTION OF VETERAN-PARTICIPANTS.—(1) In determining whether to furnish a monkey or dog referred to in subsection (a) to a veteran, or to facilitate the furnishing of such a monkey to a veteran, under the pilot program, the Secretary shall (A) consider the extent to which the veteran needs and can benefit from the assistance of the monkey or dog, and (B) provide a preference for veterans who have service-connected quadriplegia.

(2) The Secretary shall approve a veteran for participation in the pilot program only upon the Secretary's determination that the veteran is well-suited for—

(A) carrying out the responsibilities involved in the care of the monkey or dog; and

(B) effectively using the monkey or dog for assistance in performing the veteran's daily living tasks.

(c) ADMINISTRATIVE MATTERS.—(1) The Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts for the furnishing of assistive monkeys and dogs under subsection (a)(1). Under such contracts the Secretary may make advance payments for the furnishing of the monkeys or dogs before receipt of the monkeys or dogs and may either reimburse the provider of such monkeys and dogs for the costs of training the monkeys or dogs or, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines necessary to protect the interests of the Government, make advance payments for such costs before the costs are incurred.

(2) Ownership of an animal furnished to a veteran under the pilot program shall be determined in accordance with a contract between the provider of such animal and the veteran.

(d) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—(1) The Secretary shall evaluate the conduct of the pilot program, the nature and extent of the benefit to veterans furnished animals under the program (including any benefits related to employment), the costs and cost-effectiveness of furnishing animals to quadriplegic veterans, and the effects of such program on the recruitment and retention of paid primary caregivers for veterans receiving such animals and on the morale of unpaid primary caregivers for such veterans.

(2) Not later than February 1, 1993, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the experience under the pilot program. The report shall contain—

(A) the results of the evaluation carried out under paragraph (1), including descriptions of the procedures and criteria used to select veterans to receive monkeys or dogs, the nature and extent of the benefit that the veterans received from the assistance of such monkeys or dogs, and the amounts and types of costs incurred by the Department of Veterans Affairs in the conduct of the program;

(B) the Secretary's views on the relationship between the furnishing of a monkey or dog to a veteran and the payment to a veteran of (i) an aid and attendance allowance under section 314(r) of title 38, United States Code, or (ii) an annual rate of pension under section 521 of such title based on the veteran's need of regular aid and attendance; and

(C) any recommendations that the Secretary considers appropriate regarding whether the pilot program should be continued or whether the authority to furnish assistive monkeys and dogs to quadriplegic veterans should be made permanent.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section, the terms "veteran" and "service-connected" have the meanings given those terms in paragraphs (2) and (16), respectively, of section 101 of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 215. PILOT PROGRAM FOR PROVIDING SIGNAL DOGS TO CERTAIN VETERANS.

(a) SIGNAL DOGS PILOT PROGRAM.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), during fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall conduct a pilot program under which the Secretary shall furnish signal dogs (as defined in subsection (e)(2)) to not more than 20 veterans who have service-connected hearing impairments and are in need of the assistance of such dogs.

(2) The Secretary is not required to conduct a pilot program under this section if the Secretary determines that the provision of such dogs to such veterans by the Department of Veterans Affairs is authorized under chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code.

(b) SELECTION OF VETERAN-PARTICIPANTS.—In making a determination whether to furnish a signal dog to a veteran under the pilot program, the Secretary shall consider the extent to which the veteran needs and can benefit from the assistance of the signal dog. The Secretary shall approve a veteran for participation in the pilot program only upon the Secretary's determination that the veteran is well-suited for carrying out the responsibilities involved in the care and effective use of the signal dog.

(c) OWNERSHIP OF SIGNAL DOGS FURNISHED TO VETERANS.—Ownership of a signal dog furnished to a veteran under the pilot program shall be determined in accordance with a contract between the provider of such dog and the veteran.

(d) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—The Secretary shall—

(1) evaluate the conduct of any pilot program carried out under this section, the nature and extent of the benefit that the veterans received from the assistance of the signal dogs furnished under the program (including any benefits related to employment), and the costs and cost-effectiveness of furnishing such dogs to veterans who have hearing impairments; and

(2) include in the report required by section 114(d)(2)—

(A) the results of the evaluation carried out under clause (1), including descriptions of the procedures and criteria used to select veterans to receive signal dogs, the nature and extent of the benefit that the veterans received from the assistance of such dogs, and the amounts and types of costs incurred by the Department of Veterans Affairs in the conduct of the program; and

(B) any recommendations that the Secretary considers appropriate regarding whether the pilot program should be continued or whether the authority to furnish signal dogs to hearing-impaired veterans in need of the assistance of such dogs should be made permanent.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The terms "veteran" and "service-connected" have the meanings given those terms in paragraphs (2) and (16), respectively, of section 101 of title 38, United States Code.

(2) The term "signal dog" means a dog specially trained to provide hearing assistance to deaf persons.

PART C—HEALTH-CARE ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 221. SECURITY SERVICES.

(a) SECURITY AND LAW ENFORCEMENT FUNCTIONS.—Section 218 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary, the Assistant Secretary assigned management, productivity, and logistic support functions shall be responsible for the functional and technical supervision of the performance of security and law enforcement functions under this section.".

(b) REPORT ON SECURITY AND LAW ENFORCEMENT MATTERS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing—

(1) the Secretary's plan for improving the training, recruitment, and pay of security and law enforcement personnel of the Department of Veterans Affairs; and

(2) the Secretary's assessment of—

(A) the need for establishing a policy on the issuance of weapons to such personnel assigned to medical centers of the Department located in high crime areas and the use of weapons by such personnel; and

(B) the advisability of reducing the security and law enforcement services at Department facilities that do not have significant security problems in order to increase those services at facilities with more significant security problems.

SEC. 222. SHARING OF SPECIALIZED MEDICAL RESOURCES.

(a) EXPANSION OF PURPOSE.—Section 5051 is amended by striking out "hospitals" both places it appears in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "health-care facilities".

(b) REVISION OF AUTHORITY TO SHARE SPECIALIZED MEDICAL RESOURCES.—Section 5053 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "hospitals" the first place it appears and all that follows through "community" and inserting in lieu thereof "health-care facilities and other health-care facilities (including organ banks, blood banks, or similar institutions), research centers, or medical schools"; and

(B) by striking out the last sentence; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking out "charge" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "methodology that provides appropriate flexibility to the heads of the facilities concerned to establish an appropriate reimbursement rate after taking into account local conditions and needs and the actual costs to the providing facility of the resource involved."; and

(B) in the second sentence, by inserting before the period at the end "and to funds that have been allotted to the facility that furnished the resource involved".

SEC. 223. COVERAGE OF VETERANS HEALTH SERVICES AND RESEARCH ADMINISTRATION PERSONNEL BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCEDURES.

Section 4108 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary";

(2) by striking out "Veterans' Administration" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Department of Veterans Affairs";

(3) by striking out "Department of Medicine and Surgery" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Veterans Health Services and Research Administration";

(4) in subsection (a), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (e) of this section," after "Notwithstanding any law, Executive order, or regulation,";

(5) in subsection (c)(2), by striking out "non-Veterans' Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "non-Department of Veterans Affairs";

(6) in subsection (d), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (e) of this section," after "Notwithstanding any other provision of law,"; and

(7) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) The provisions of chapter 71 of title 5 shall apply to the exercise of the Secretary's authority under this section except with respect to—

"(1) the prohibitions set out in paragraphs (1) through (6) of subsection (a) of this section; and

"(2) the matters covered by section 4110 of this title.".

SEC. 224. DISCIPLINARY ACTIONS AND GRIEVANCES.

Section 4110 is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) The Chief Medical Director, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, shall from time to time appoint disciplinary boards to determine, upon notice and fair hearing, the charges in any disciplinary action brought against a person employed in a position listed in paragraph (1) of section 4104 of this title (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'respondent') on the basis of the performance or conduct of such person during employment with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

"(2) A disciplinary board appointed in the case of any respondent shall consist of not less than three nor more than five employees of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration who are senior in grade to the respondent. The majority of the members of such board shall be employed in the same category of position as the respondent.

"(3) The Chief Medical Director may delegate the performance of the function of appointing a disciplinary board to an employee of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration who is not involved in deciding whether to file charges to be determined by the board and who is not subordinate to any official involved in making such decision.";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking out "Administrator" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary";

(3) in subsection (d)—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking out "suitable" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "that the proposed disciplinary action be sustained or modified within limitations prescribed by the Secretary.";

(B) in the second, third, and fourth sentences, by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary";

(4) in subsection (e), by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary"; and

(5) by adding at the end the following:

"(f)(1) A disciplinary board is not required in the case of a disciplinary action if the proposed action is suspension for 14 days or less, reassignment without a reduction in basic pay, reduction in rank without a reduction in basic pay, reprimand, or admonishment.

"(2) An employee against whom a disciplinary action described in paragraph (1) of this subsection is proposed to be taken shall be entitled to—

"(A) an advance written notice stating the specific reasons for the proposed action;

"(B) a reasonable time to answer orally and in writing and to furnish affidavits and other documentary evidence in support of the answer;

"(C) representation by an attorney or other spokesperson; and

"(D) a written decision and the specific reasons for the decision at the earliest practicable date.

"(3) Disciplinary actions described in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be subject to review under either the provisions of section 4120A of this title (in the case of employees appointed under authority of this title who are members of a unit determined appropriate under section 7112 of title 5) or an agency review procedure to be established by the Secretary (in the case of such employees who are not members of such a unit). Any such agency review procedure established by the Secretary shall include—

"(A) an informal review of the decision on the disciplinary action by an official of a higher level than the official who made the decision;

"(B) a prompt decision by such higher level official and a right to formal review by an impartial examiner within the Department of Veterans Affairs;

"(C) a prompt report of the findings and recommendations by the impartial examiner; and

"(D) a prompt review of the examiner's findings and recommendations, together with any comments by the employee and the Department on such findings and recommendations, by an official of a higher level than the official who conducted the review pursuant to clause (A) of this paragraph.".

(b) GRIEVANCES.—(1) Subchapter I of chapter 73 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 4120A. Grievances and certain disciplinary reviews

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall authorize review of Department of Veterans Affairs actions on the following matters under procedures established by collective bargaining in accordance with the provisions of chapter 71 of title 5:

"(A) Grievances of employees appointed under authority of this title who are members of a unit determined appropriate under section 7112 of title 5.

"(B) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, disciplinary actions described in subsection 4110(f)(1) of this title involving such employees.

"(2) In the case of a review of a disciplinary action involving any question of clinical competence, as determined by either party, any person selected to serve as an arbitrator in such case under procedures established as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection must be qualified as an arbitrator and must also be (A) qualified as a physician, dentist, or nurse, or (B) otherwise qualified, by specialized experience or training or both, in examining and adjudicating health-care issues.

"(b) For the purpose of resolving grievances of supervisors and employees appointed under authority of this chapter who are not members of a unit determined appropriate under section 7112 of title 5, the Secretary shall authorize review of action of the Department on such grievances pursuant to a Department review procedure established by the Secretary under section 4110(f)(3) of this title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 is amended by adding at the end of subchapter I the following new item:

"4120A. Grievances and certain disciplinary reviews.".

SEC. 225. DEVELOPMENT OF RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION FOR THE ELIMINATION OF INCONSISTENCIES IN CERTAIN VETERANS BENEFITS LAWS.

(a) REQUIREMENT TO ESTABLISH TASK FORCE.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall establish a task force to recommend policies and legislation for the elimination of inconsistencies among provisions of law relating to veterans' eligibility for certain health-care benefits.

(b) COMPOSITION OF TASK FORCE.—The task force shall be composed of employees of the Department of Veterans Affairs, including representatives of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration, the Veterans Benefits Administration, and the Office of the General Counsel.

(c) RESPONSIBILITIES OF TASK FORCE.—The task force shall—

(1) identify inconsistencies among sections 601(6), 612, 614, 617, and 619 of title 38, United States Code, and the implementation of such sections;

(2) after consultation with appropriate representatives of veterans, develop policy recommendations and legislative proposals for the elimination of any such inconsistencies; and

(3) not later than the date specified by the Secretary, submit to the Secretary a report containing (A) descriptions of the inconsistencies identified by the task force, (B) the policies and legislative proposals recommended by the task force for the elimination of such inconsistencies, and (C) the reasons for each such recommendation.

(d) ACTION BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall review the report submitted by the task force and either approve the recommendations for legislation contained in the report or prepare alternative legislative proposals that the Secretary considers appropriate for the elimination of the inconsistencies identified by the task force.

(e) SUBMISSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives—

(1) the report submitted to the Secretary by the task force; and

(2) a report containing—

(A) the legislation recommended by the Secretary for the elimination of the inconsistencies identified by the task force;

(B) an analysis of the legislation recommended by the Secretary; and

(C) the reasons for any differences between the legislation recommended by the Secretary and the legislation recommended by the task force.

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 14. A bill to provide for a grant program to assist eligible consortia in providing services to individuals with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome or AIDS-related complex; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AIDS HEALTH SERVICES ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased today to be introducing S. 14, the proposed AIDS Health Care Services Act of 1989. This bill addresses what I consider to be the most serious questions facing public policymakers regarding the AIDS epidemic: How do we provide and pay for services for the increasing number of AIDS patients?

As the number of AIDS cases continues to grow, more and more communities and States across the country are becoming increasingly concerned about their ability to respond to this crisis. Without Federal assistance, I am deeply concerned that many will not be able to. This bill is intended to help fill in the gaps in our health-care system so that people with AIDS and people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus [HIV] have access to the full range of needed health and support services.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, as of January 16, 1989, more than 84,000 cases of AIDS have been reported. That number is expected to rise to over 250,000 by 1991. This epidemic is no longer one substantially affecting only the two coasts. It crosses all boundaries throughout the country, and communities in middle America are now confronting the same type of crises as New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Miami. Fifteen cities have already reported over 1,000 cases each; nearly half of all States have treated more than 500 AIDS patients. Over 60 percent of all AIDS cases in the United States have now been reported outside New York City, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and by 1991, it is expected that 80 percent of all persons with AIDS in this country will reside outside of New York City and San Francisco.

The AIDS epidemic has brought us face to face with many of the deficiencies of our present health-care system that have too often been ignored. Lack of health insurance, uncompensated care, undercompensation by Medicaid, lack of access to and availability of nonhospital health services, and growing discrepancies between the uncompensated care loads of private and public hospitals are all serious problems plaguing health care in America. The AIDS epidemic has brought to the surface and magnified these problems, and a financial crisis is looming in our health-care system.

Currently between $1 and $2 billion a year is currently being spent on medical care for AIDS patients. By 1991, those costs may rise to between $4.5 and $8.5 billion annually. And, if current trends continue, the majority of that burden will be borne by the public hospitals and health systems and will seriously strain if not break their ability to continue providing health services to all low-income Americans.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MODEL

San Francisco, largely as a result of intensive efforts by the gay community, has successfully developed an integrated community-based system of comprehensive services for people with the HIV infection. This case-management-based model has resulted in dramatically lowered costs for AIDS care. I would add that, in most instances, community-based care is far preferable to hospitalization because it allows individuals to remain at home with their friends and families and maintain, to the maximum extent possible, their abilities to function independently and to lead an active life.

Other communities are attempting to replicate the San Francisco model through the help of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and Federal AIDS service delivery demonstration projects. Although I believe that these projects have been very helpful, the development and maintenance of services is dependent on the availability of funding, which often does not exist for nonhospital services.

The Presidential Commission on the HIV Epidemic stated, on page 143 of its landmark June 1988 report, that "the current situation calls for immediate action to provide funding necessary to help the hardest hit areas and provide care for people in desperate need of assistance. This would mean providing targeted assistance and encouraging cost-effective care through enhanced reimbursement from the Federal Government."

Recommendation 2-11 of the Commission states that "[t]he Public Health Service should provide initial funding and technical assistance to communities in order to establish services to fill existing gaps and to develop coordinated networks of services. Systems created should include continuum of services, emphasize alternatives to hospitalization, and utilize a case-management approach."

Mr. President, that is precisely what the proposed AIDS Health Care Services Act of 1989 is intended to help accomplish.

I want to emphasize the great need that exists for two services in particular—mental health services and shelters—which would be included in the comprehensive service delivery system that would be encouraged and supported under this legislation.

With regard to mental health services, experts have repeatedly said that the mental health and counseling needs of people with AIDS and HIV infection are much greater than for individuals with other diseases. One recent study found that the relative risk of suicide in men with AIDS was substantially higher than that of the general population. The psychological stress of facing a terminal illness often coupled with discrimination and ostricization is tremendous. In addition, a form of dementia that frequently accompanies AIDS requires psychological or psychiatric assistance. Unfortunately, there are few mental health professionals trained to deal with AIDS and these types of services are often unavailable.

Second, I am deeply concerned that an increasing number of AIDS patients are without a permanent residence. In Los Angeles, for example, it is estimated that up to 15 percent of all people with AIDS suffer some degree of homelessness. Many lost their homes because of a loss of income or discrimination once they become sick. Many others, particularly intravenous drug addicts, may already be homeless. The Presidential Commission found that housing for homeless persons with AIDS is even more limited than it is for the general homeless population. Moreover, homeless shelters are generally inappropriate for people with life-threatening illnesses because they close during the day and do not provide essential medical and support services.

BILL PROVISIONS

Mr. President, this legislation would assist communities in developing a network of services to care for AIDS patients. The needs of people with AIDS are many—from basic shelter to counseling to home-health services. Unfortunately, the majority of communities throughout the country do not have adequate community-based services for AIDS patients. Consequently, many AIDS patients who require a level of care less intensive than hospital care may simply be going without it.

This legislation would require that in order to receive Federal support under the new program city or county health departments, community based organizations, health-care facilities and providers, including drug abuse and mental health clinics, public and private hospitals, and home-health agencies would have to form consortia and must work together to develop a comprehensive service delivery system for AIDS in their locality. Such a system would include, at a minimum, acute inpatient care, long-term care, case management, outpatient service, home health care, mental health services, drug abuse treatment, and extensive support services, including homemaker services, adult day care, respite care, transportation, and legal services.

Consortia would further be required to give priority to establishing primary community health and support services, such as outpatient, mental health, and home-health services, shelter, food, and case management. Secondary services would include hospice care, homemaker service, respite care for caregivers of people with AIDS, adult day care, child care for children infected with the HIV, support services for volunteers providing assistance to people with AIDS, transportation assistance, foster care for children infected with the HIV, and assistance in obtaining legal services relating to infection with the HIV.

With regard to the second tier of services, priority would be given to those which would assist the consortium in providing the full range of services described in tier one. For example, if a lack of available transportation prevents people with AIDS from gaining access to mental health or outpatient services, the consortium should give priority to providing transportation assistance.

Mr. President, this legislation would authorize the appropriation of $250 million for the development of comprehensive service delivery systems for AIDS. Up to 15 percent of the funds would be able to be permitted to be used to supplement Medicaid or otherwise to provide relief for uncompensated costs for inpatient hospital or nursing home care for individuals with AIDS or AIDS-related complex.

Very few nursing homes currently take AIDS patients, although many need that level of care. Part of the reason nursing home beds are unavailable is that reimbursement rates do not cover the cost of care. I believe that this funding could encourage nursing homes to care for people with AIDS.

At least 20 percent of the funds would be required to be used for services targeted to minorities. Blacks and Hispanics represent a disproportionately high percentage of persons with AIDS, and this provision would help ensure that minority health-care needs are met. In addition, each consortium would be required to provide in its application assurances that minorities will be represented in the policymaking and managerial components and that it will conduct outreach to minority communities.

Finally, this legislation would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct research focused on the provision of services to individuals infected with the HIV, including studies focused on the ability of the Nation's health-care systems to provide services to minorities with AIDS and the extent to which the public and private sectors of society are providing care to people with AIDS, and an analysis of the most cost-effective ways to provide medical and mental health services to different populations of individuals with a spectrum of symptoms resulting from the HIV.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, one of the greatest challenges that will confront the 101st Congress will be the development and financing of health-care services for people with AIDS. We must begin now to develop alternative modes and comprehensive systems of care and at the same time ensure that our Nation's hospitals—particularly public hospitals—are able to continue providing services to people with AIDS. This bill is intended to start that process, and I urge my colleagues to join with me to ensure that these vitally important issues are addressed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 14

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

That Act may be cited as the "AIDS Health Services Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to encourage the creation of consortia between health and social service providers that provide care to people with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (hereinafter referred to in this Act as "AIDS") or AIDS-related complex (hereinafter referred to in this Act as "ARC") in order to—

(1) develop appropriate models of continuums of care, from inpatient hospital care to social and support services, responsive to the full spectrum of needs of individuals with illnesses resulting from infection with the etiologic agent for AIDS so that the health-care and social-service needs of such individuals can be met in a manner that supports to the maximum extent possible the opportunities of such individuals for independent, self-sufficient functioning in the community;

(2) promote outreach to members of minority communities;

(3) set priorities for targeting funding to fill gaps and other deficiencies in efforts to implement continuums of health-care and social support services; and

(4) foster communication and cooperative relationships between various service providers in order to enhance coordination of services.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) ELIGIBLE CONSORTIUM.—The term "eligible consortium" means an association consisting of a city or county health department or agency, community-based service organizations, health-care facilities and providers, including drug abuse and mental health clinics, public and private hospitals, and home health agencies that have entered into arrangements for the purpose of providing for a comprehensive service delivery system.

(2) COMPREHENSIVE SERVICE DELIVERY SYSTEM.—The term "comprehensive service delivery system" means a coordinated system of care for people infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS that includes at a minimum, acute inpatient care, long-term care, case management, outpatient services, home care, mental health services, drug abuse treatment, and extensive support services including attendant and homemaker services, adult day care, respite care, transportation, and legal services.

SEC. 4. GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) MAKING OF GRANTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to in this Act as the "Secretary"), acting through the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration, shall make grants to eligible consortia as follows:

(1) INPATIENT AND NURSING HOME CARE.—Not more than 15 percent of the funds provided under this section may be used to supplement benefits under title XIX of the Social Security Act or to otherwise provide relief for uncompensated costs for inpatient hospital or nursing home care for individuals with AIDS or ARC.

(2) PRIMARY COMMUNITY HEALTH AND SUPPORT SERVICES.—Funds provided under this section may be used to develop and provide services for individuals with AIDS or ARC if such services are not adequately provided for in the communities of such individuals, as follows:

(A) Out-patient services.

(B) Mental health and counseling services.

(C) Home health services.

(D) Short-term shelters and other small residential facilities for homeless individuals, and families of individuals, with AIDS or ARC, including residential facilities specifically designed for individuals who—

(i) use intravenous drugs, otherwise abuse substances, or are mentally ill; and

(ii) are infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS.

(E) Nutrition-related services.

(F) Case-management services.

(3) SECONDARY COMMUNITY SUPPORT SERVICES.—Funds provided under this section may be used to develop and provide services for individuals with AIDS or ARC if such services are not adequately provided for in the communities of such individuals. Such services may include—

(A) hospice care;

(B) personal, homemaker, and attendant care;

(C) respite care for parents or other caregivers of individuals, including children and infants with AIDS or ARC;

(D) adult day care for individuals with AIDS or ARC;

(E) child care for children infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS;

(F) support services and counseling for volunteers providing services to individuals with AIDS or ARC;

(G) transportation assistance;

(H) foster care, including training and incentives for foster parents for children infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS; and

(I) assistance in obtaining legal services relating to AIDS or ARC.

(b) PRIORITY SERVICES.—Priority in the provision of funds made available under this section shall be provided to assist in the development and availability of services described in subsection (a)(2).

(c) TARGETING OF FUNDS TO MINORITY COMMUNITIES.—Not less than 20 percent of funds made available under this section to provide services under paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) shall be used for the provision of services for members of minority communities.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $250,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

SEC. 5. APPLICATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An eligible consortium seeking to receive assistance under section 4 shall submit an application to the Secretary in order to receive a grant under such section.

(b) CONTENTS OF APPLICATIONS.—Each application submitted under subsection (a) shall—

(1) describe the activities for which assistance is sought;

(2) contain a plan for establishing in the community concerned a comprehensive service delivery system for individuals with AIDS or ARC;

(3) identify agencies or organizations to provide case-management services for individuals infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS;

(4) contain a community needs and resources assessment report;

(5) contain an estimate of the numbers of patients who will utilize the services provided with funds made available under section 4 at any one time, and the estimated cost of care for each service component;

(6) provide assurances that representatives of minority communities are included in the policymaking and managerial component of the consortium and that major efforts will be made to provide outreach and other services to members of minority communities;

(7) describe a mechanism for information and records sharing to assure nonduplication of services;

(8) provide timetables for implementing the plan described in the applications;

(9) describe a mechanism to evaluate the success of the consortium in carrying out the plan and the cost-effectiveness of the services provided; and

(10) contain such additional information and assurances as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

SEC. 6. RESEARCH.

(a) CONDUCTING RESEARCH.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct health and mental-health services research focused on the delivery of services to individuals infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS.

(2) AREAS OF RESEARCH.—Research conducted under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) studies on the ability of the nation's health-care systems to provide services to individuals with AIDS who are members of minority communities;

(B) studies on the extent to which various sectors of society are underwriting the costs, health-care needs, and expenditures of individuals infected with the etiologic agent for AIDS; and

(C) an analysis of the most cost-effective ways of providing medical and mental health services to individuals addicted to drugs. bisexual and gay men, women with AIDS, and pediatric AIDS patients, including the health outcomes of individuals who are receiving care in such different settings.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, such sums as are necessary for fiscal year 1990.

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. GORE, Mr. WILSON, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. DODD, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. SARBANES):

S. 15. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve emergency medical services and trauma care, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today S. 15, the proposed "Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act of 1989." Joining me as the principal cosponsor is the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and the Senate's primary leader for over a decade of efforts to improve health care for all Americans, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. I am also very pleased to have joining me as original cosponsors: Senators GORE, WILSON, BIDEN, BINGAMAN, CONRAD, DODD, KERRY, INOUYE, PELL, REIGLE, and SARBANES.

Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today is very similar to S. 10, legislation I introduced in the 100th Congress. We made great progress last year. Our legislation was supported by a coalition of more than 27 groups, including the American College of Surgeons, the American College of Emergency Physicians, and American Medical Association, the American Nurses' Association, the American Association of Retired Persons, and the American Academy of Pediatrics. I ask unanimous consent that a September 14, 1988, letter from the coalition be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, S. 10 was reported unanimously by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources on September 13. On October 3, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, which has jurisdiction over two provisions—sections 5 and 6(c)—relating to EMS communications, discharged S. 10 after a 24-hour review. Unfortunately, we were blocked from bringing the bill to the floor for full Senate consideration.

I am also very pleased that the House of Representatives passed similar legislation, which was based on S. 10. My good friends and California colleagues, Representatives BATES and WAXMAN, successfully shepherded that bill through the House.

I am confident that this year we will be successful in enacting this vitally important legislation.

Mr. President, the goals of this legislation are twofold. First, it is designed to remove the barriers and rectify the problems that, in many parts of the country, prevent quick and efficient emergency medical services from being provided. Second, it would provide incentives for States and localities to establish well-coordinated regionalized trauma-care systems that would enable severely injured individuals to receive highly specialized trauma care as rapidly as possible following their injury.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS

The provisions of the bill may be briefly summarized as follows:

Section 2 would establish congressional findings regarding emergency medical services and trauma care.

Section 3 would authorize the establishment of a Federal clearinghouse for information on EMS and trauma care and establish a new grant program to States for the purposes of providing funds to States and local regions to develop integrated trauma systems and to designated trauma centers to defray a portion of their uncompensated costs resulting from high-cost trauma patients.

Section 4 would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services [HHS] to conduct two studies to determine whether State Medicaid plans are providing financial disincentives for the establishment of trauma centers and to assess the long-term economic and social impacts of trauma.

Section 5 would provide for improved coordination between State EMS and Department of Transportation offices with regard to emergency medical services.

Section 6 would permit Preventive Health and Health Services block grant funds to be used for equipment purchases to improve EMS communications systems; specify that loans under the Farmers Home Administrations' Community Facilities Loan Program may be used for the purchase of EMS communications equipment and implementation of "911" systems; and require the Federal Communications Commission to study the availability of radio frequency channels for communications between ambulances and hospitals and to develop a plan to ensure that sufficient frequencies are allocated for EMS purposes.

Section 7 would establish the effective date of the legislation.

BACKGROUND

INJURY—STILL A LEADING CAUSE OF DEATH AND DISABILITY

Mr. President, in 1985, the prestigious National Academy of Sciences issued a report, "Injury in America," which assessed the magnitude and characteristics of injury, efforts to prevent and treat injury, and Federal support for injury research. It was conducted as a follow up to a landmark study conducted 20 years earlier by the National Research Council, entitled "Accidental Death and Disability: The Neglected Disease of Modern Society." The National Academy of Sciences concluded that, tragically, insufficient progress had been made in injury control since the first study was reported.

Each year, more than 140,000 Americans die from injuries and one person in three suffers a nonfatal injury. Injury is the fourth leading cause of death among all Americans and the major killer of children and young adults. More Americans between the ages of 1 and 34 die from injuries than from all diseases combined.

Injury is also a leading cause of short- and long-term disability. More than 80,000 persons become permanently disabled from brain or spinal cord injuries each year. Over 4 million years of future worklife are lost to injury annually—nearly double that of heart disease or cancer.

Injury represents one of our most expensive health problems, costing $75 to $100 billion a year in direct and indirect costs. The societal costs from motor-vehicle crashes alone in 1980 were estimated to be $36 billion, including costs of $7.6 billion and $3.5 billion to the Federal and State governments, respectively, in direct payments and revenue losses.

Mr. President, I agree with the Chairman of the NAS study that "injury is a public health problem whose toll is unacceptable." Serious injury affects Americans of every socioeconomic level, every ethnicity and race, every age group, and every community.

Mr. President, the time has come for our Nation to make a concerted effort to reduce drastically the impact of these tragedies. We must no longer let injuries—preventable and treatable injuries—rob our young people of their youth and cause pain and suffering to Americans everywhere.

Experts estimate that between 20,000 and 25,000 lives could be saved each year and life-long disabilities from injury could be dramatically reduced by quick response teams providing prehospital care and through the accessibility and availability of sophisticated emergency hospital care when needed. The legislation we are introducing today is designed to ensure that injury and trauma victims—as well as others in need of emergency care—receive that kind of swift and effective medical attention. If enacted, this legislation will directly help save lives and reduce disability.

DEVELOPMENT OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES

Mr. President, nearly 17 years ago, I first introduced legislation which was ultimately enacted as the Emergency Medical Services Systems Development Act of 1973. I introduced that legislation in order to improve the ability of communities to respond immediately and effectively to emergency medical crises. In the early 1970's, the state of emergency medical services [EMS] was characterized by poorly trained ambulance and emergency room personnel, outdated equipment, little coordination of services in urban areas, and the absence of emergency care facilities in rural areas.

Only 5 percent of the Nation's ambulance attendants met even minimum standards of training recommended by national professional organizations. In fact, ambulance services in many communities were run by the local undertaker. Fewer than 25 hospitals in the entire Nation had physicians in their emergency departments 24 hours a day. Ambulances brought their patients to the nearest hospital or the hospital they were paid to take them, regardless of the type of medical emergency or the level of care the hospital was capable of providing. Total annual accidental deaths and prehospital cardiac deaths were at an all-time high.

However, new advances in medical technology—portable equipment for treating heart attack victims, fully equipped, mobile, critical-care units, and advanced methods of radio communications and telecommunications—that could drastically reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries from accidents were becoming available. All of this technology, as well as helicopter evacuation capabilities, had been brought together in Vietnam to provide battlefield casualties with rapid, effective treatment, and paramedics trained in on-the-spot emergency medicine were returning from Vietnam.

The 1973 law was designed to help local communities use existing resources and generate other potential sources of support to plan and develop comprehensive and integrated EMS systems through a 5-year sequence from preliminary planning to fully functioning, advanced systems. It provided the leadership and funding that was needed to establish national standards for emergency medical care, organize cost-effective systems of care on a regional basis, and, very importantly, create the training programs necessary for the development of skilled manpower needed to operate the systems.

The first 3 years of the 5-year sequence under the grant program enabled a region to achieve basic life support [BLS] capacity. A BLS system consists of a regional system of care with central communication and dispatch capability, coordination of ambulances, and designation of appropriate emergency rooms in the area for differing degrees of injury. An effective BLS system can provide patient stabilization, airway management, hemorrhage control, shock management with initial wound care, fracture stabilization, and, under medical supervision, specific noninvasive treatment.

Two additional years of support enabled a region to achieve advanced life support [ALS] capacity which adds to the BLS system the trained paramedic who is in constant communication with a physician and who has the training and technology available to provide life-saving treatment to the patient on the way to the hospital. At the ALS level, mobile prehospital units are equipped with intravenous fluids, drugs, and some form of bioelectric communication and are staffed by paramedics with proper physician backup to perform expert diagnosis, treatment, and triage of critical conditions.

Mr. President, studies carried out in the early 1980's showed that EMS saves lives. Data compiled by 98 EMS regions for calendar year 1979 demonstrated that the median number of fatalities per 100 motor vehicle accident injuries decreased as EMS systems developed. In areas served by EMS systems in the planning stage, there were 3.1 deaths per 100 injuries; in those served by systems having ALS capabilities, the rate was 1.8 deaths per 100 injuries.

Individual regions reported dramatic successes. For example, Clark County, NV, showed a decrease of 23 percent in the early death rate for spinal cord injury victims from 1976 to 1981, during which time an EMS Program was established. The rural EMS Program in Charlottesville, VA, estimated in 1981 that the death risk from acute heart attacks had decreased 26 percent for all persons under the age of 70 in the areas it served since the development of its EMS system.

March 30, 1981, the country witnessed the life-saving capabilities of the EMS system in Washington, DC. On that date, President Reagan was shot. He was rushed to the George Washington University Hospital Trauma Center where a highly trained and expert emergency medical team removed the bullet near his heart. The President's emergency care was so successful because of the high state of readiness, training, and technological skill of the emergency medical team—results of a fully functioning EMS and trauma system. Dr. Benjamin Aaron, the surgeon who operated on the President, said that "only because the President got prompt and highly skilled modern shock trauma care was he in no danger of dying."

Yet, in 1981, despite these successes and the fact that a majority of the 303 designated regions had not yet completed the 5-year cycle, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981—Public Law 97-35—terminated the so-called categorical grant program, under which grants to the regions were targeted on the development of EMS systems in accordance with national standards, and shifted the funding into the Preventive Health and Human Services [PHHS] block grant. During congressional hearings in 1981 on the proposed transfer, much concern was expresed that termination of the categorical grants would result in disarray and a breakdown in the coordination of the many systems which were in various phases of development throughout the country. I believed that this move might send a signal to State and local governments that the Congress no longer placed a priority on this program.

GAO REPORT ON EMS

Mr. President, 4 years ago, I sought to determine how EMS programs were faring under the block grant—whether the abandonment of the categorical grant program caused support for EMS to drop, development of EMS systems to slow, or fully functioning systems to break down. Since the Office of Emergency Medical Services within the Department of Health and Human Services was dismantled under the 1981 law, information regarding the present status of or funding for regional EMS programs was very difficult to obtain.

In an effort to get more complete answers to the questions regarding EMS under the block grant, in a March 5, 1985, letter I, joined by my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], requested that the GAO look into these issues—to review and analyze the levels of support and proficiency of EMS systems throughout the country.

In response, GAO investigated the status of EMS in six States—California, Massachusetts, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Florida, and Texas—and 18 localities within those States where programs were established under the categorical grant program. The GAO's findings were described in a September 1986 report, "States Assume Leadership Role in Providing Emergency Medical Services."

In general, the GAO found that in the six States surveyed, overall expenditures for EMS initially fell soon after EMS' incorporation into the PHHS block grant in 1982. However, by 1985, most States had reversed that trend. In the absence of Federal leadership, the GAO found that States generally are assuming a more active leadership role in financing and regulating emergency medical services.

Mr. President, the GAO also identified areas in which gaps in emergency medical services still exist and in which Federal actions and leadership are desirable. In particular, the GAO concluded that economic and political factors were preventing the development of trauma systems.

Mr. President, the GAO made a number of recommendations for congressional action, and this legislation, like its predecessor, S. 10, is based in good measure on those recommendations.

IMPROVING TRAUMA CARE

Mr. President, section 3 of this legislation would establish a new title XII within the Public Health Service Act dealing with emergency medical services and trauma care.

IMPROVING DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON EMS ACTIVITIES

Since the advent of the 1981 block grant, the Federal role in collecting and disseminating information on the successes and problems experienced by State and local agencies in EMS has been very limited. States are constantly upgrading their emergency and trauma care because of the emergence of new technologies and the development of new initiatives. State officials surveyed by the GAO indicated that they could benefit greatly from a program for sharing information regarding a wide variety of EMS-related matters, such as practices and policies governing regulation of air ambulance services and the establishment of trauma systems, research assessing the most effective service delivery methods, and the generation of new revenues for EMS activities.

BILL PROVISION

In order to assist in the development of a nationwide EMS clearinghouse section 1201 would authorize the appropriation of $500,000 to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for fiscal year 1988. Funding would be phased out in subsequent years—with appropriations of $300,000 authorized for fiscal year 1989 and $100,000 for fiscal year 1990. The Secretary would award the contract for a clearinghouse through a competitive grant process.

With the phasing out of Federal assistance, I am satisfied, as a result of discussions with State EMS officials, that over the 3 fiscal years, the clearinghouse could achieve self-sufficiency through subscriptions, user fees, or other means.

DEVELOPING TRAUMA SYSTEMS

Emergency medical services systems are integrated, coordinated systems designed to provide medical care to those with any unpredicted immediate need—whether for an injury or illness—and continued care once in an emergency facility. Within the general categories of persons in need of emergency care, victims of severe injury require time-sensitive, highly specialized care. Trauma systems specifically focus on the identification, care, and treatment of only severely injured victims and, therefore, could be considered a subset of an EMS system.

Time is of the essence for trauma victims. Death from trauma most often occurs during one of three times following the injury: First, within minutes after the injury, usually because of severe damage to the brain, spinal cord, or heart; second, within hours after an injury, usually from shock, internal bleeding, or damage to other organs; or third, within days or weeks after an injury, usually from infection or multiple organ failure.

Roughly 30 to 40 percent of the deaths from trauma fall into the second category, and virtually all of these deaths are unnecessary and preventable. But those trauma victims must receive immediate and highly skilled surgical intervention and other medical attention within what is called the golden hour following the initial trauma. This can best be accomplished through a well-coordinated and managed trauma system.

Trauma systems, by necessity, must include emergency medical services and, therefore, can function properly only if an EMS system is in place. Without efficient pre-hospital services, a trauma system would be ineffective. In addition, however, a trauma system must specifically provide for the identification and designation of trauma centers, which have specialized physicians, surgeons, and equipment immediately available on a 24-hour basis; a method to identify severe trauma victims in the pre-hospital phase; and the establishment of policies to ensure that all major trauma victims are transported to trauma centers.

In 1976, the American College of Surgeons [ACS] first published a document entitled "Optimal Hospital Resources for Care of the Seriously Injured," outlining the resources needed for optimal care of injury patients. It recommended guidelines and suggested policies for the establishment of complete trauma systems. Since 1976 the ACS guidelines and policies have been periodically updated, most recently in October 1986.

The first component essential for trauma systems is the organization of trauma services at certain designed institutions. The ACS flatly rejects the notion that a severely injured patient should be taken to the nearest hospital. Rather, it advocates that patients generally be transported immediately to institutions with appropriate levels of skills and technology.

The ACS recommends a system of classifying trauma centers into one of three levels, depending on the availability of specialized surgical personnel and equipment, the frequency with which they perform surgical procedures related to trauma, and the presence of research and teaching activities. Level I and II trauma centers, for example, must have surgical and emergency medical personnel trained in trauma care, including neurosurgeons, available 24 hours a day. Level I centers must also have a wider variety of surgical and nonsurgical specialists on-call or promptly available from other institutions as well as have teaching and research activities. Level III hospitals, which generally serve smaller communities or suburban settings, must demonstrate a commitment to trauma care commensurate with their resources.

I realize that some hospitals have raised concerns that the ACS guidelines would serve to set fixed limits on the number of trauma centers that may be designated in a State or region. However, I do not believe that to be the case. State and local authorities are most qualified to determine the number of trauma centers that are necessary and appropriate within their jurisdictions, and indeed, the ACS guidelines state that "each community must decide on the number of appropriate trauma facilities necessary to meet its commitment to excellence in trauma care [and] must consider the number of severe and urgent injuries to be handled as well as its ability to address its factors of geography and its ability to concentrate its resources."

I also understand that some community hospitals are concerned that trauma centers would draw business away and have opposed the establishment of trauma systems with designated trauma centers. However, a June 24, 1988, Journal of the American Medical Association article, entitled "Trauma Systems: Current Status—Future Challenges," cites a study that did not support this concept of a halo effect.

I believe that it is more cost-effective and medically sound to concentrate scarce and expensive medical resources in a few hospitals. Medical outcomes improve as a facility has more experience in performing a given procedure, and all hospitals cannot afford to provide all types of specialized medical care.

The second essential component of a trauma system is a triage—the classification of patients according to medical need. Various systems for identifying severe trauma patients have been developed; most use some form of numerical scoring. For example, the injury severity score [ISS] system assesses the level of injury in three different anatomical regions. A 1983 study showed that less than 6 percent of all patients treated for injury have an ISS of at least 15, which represents at least a 10-percent risk of dying from a single severe injury or multiple serious injuries. Paramedics and emergency medical technicians must be trained in an agreed-upon triage practice or scoring system in order to assure that severe trauma victims are accurately identified and taken to an appropriate trauma center.

Unfortunately, with any patient assessment system there are always a certain number of patients incorrectly identified as needing trauma-center care who could be adequately cared for at a typical community hospital. The incorrect routing of a patient to a trauma center is referred to as an "overtriage". Policies should be designed to minimize overtriage as much as possible in order to prevent costly overuse of trauma centers, the inappropriate diversion of patients away from community hospitals, and, particularly in cases of accident victims who do not have insurance or another payment source, inappropriate transfers to trauma centers solely for financial reasons.

The third component necessary for a trauma system to function effectively is an efficient network of transfer and transport arrangements between hospitals and ambulance services participating in the system. Transport agreements must involve ambulance services to facilitate the prompt transport of patients to appropriate designated facilities within and between different jurisdictions. At the same time, policies must be implemented to ensure that patients are not transferred to trauma centers who are not seriously injured because of the patient's inability to pay for services. Transfer agreements are particularly important in rural areas, where distances are great and high-level trauma centers may not exist, so that victims who might be transported initially to a level III facility would then later be transferred to a level I or level II facility, if possible.

TRAUMA SYSTEMS SAVE LIVES

Numerous studies have demonstrated that trauma systems result in dramatic reductions in death and disability.

For example, in 1980, Orange County, CA, established a trauma system comprised of five designated trauma centers. The system was established following the release of a study which showed that nonneurological trauma care was inadequate at hospitals without special trauma capabilities. Before implementation of the system, researchers found that 34 percent of the deaths occurring in trauma cases were preventable. After the system was in place, that figure dropped to 15 percent. Thus, more than half of the preventable deaths were in fact being avoided. Furthermore, none of the patients in the study died as a result of bypassing a conventional hospital in order to get to a trauma center.

In August 1984, San Diego implemented its regionalized trauma system. Three years after the system became fully operational, less than 1.5 percent of the total trauma deaths were considered to be potentially preventable. That's a decrease of 55 percent in the preventable death rate. Nearly 97 percent of trauma deaths occurring in San Diego are considered to be nonpreventable.

Finally, West Germany is an example of a country with excellent regional trauma care. It successfully transferred to civilian health care the knowledge and methods Americans developed in providing battlefield care in Vietnam. West Germany classifies hospitals according to their ability to provide trauma care and has established trauma centers along the main autobahns. A pre-hospital transport system comprised of helicopters and ambulances effectively ensures rapid access to them. It is estimated that 90 percent of the population is within 15 minutes of a trauma center.

As a consequence of this regionalized system, the mortality rate from motor vehicle accidents in West Germany has dropped from 16,000 per year in 1970 to 12,000 per year in 1983—a 25-percent reduction. That is consistent with findings that between 30 and 40 percent of trauma deaths are preventable.

The value of trauma center lies not only in reduction in deaths and disabilities but also in positive financial contribution to society. Dr. Donald Trunkey, a surgeon at the University of California, San Francisco and expert in trauma care, estimates that the reduction in West German trauma deaths translates into an increase of $220 million in the gross national product and of $55 million in taxes. Trunkey speculates that if the death rate from injuries throughout the United States decreased by comparable amount after implementing a regional trauma system, over the first 10 years, this country's GNP could be increased by more than $2 billion and the additional taxes paid could amount to more than half a billion dollars.

BARRIERS TO TRAUMA SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT

Mr. President, despite the clear consensus that trauma systems save lives, very few communities in the United States have developed such systems.

In a March 1988 report, entitled "Trauma System Development", the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration of the Department of Transportation found that none of the five areas studied—Dade County, FL; Allentown, PA; Sacramento, CA; Amarillo, TX; and Bend, OR—had fully developed systems.

In addition, the June 24, 1988 JAMA article reported that only two States had statewide coverage, that 19 States and the District of Columbia had regional systems which lacked one or more components of a complete system, and that the remaining 29 States had yet to initiate the process of trauma center designation. These findings are consistent with those of the GAO, which determined that a majority of the sites it visited lacked one or more components of a trauma system.

The GAO reported that economic and political factors are the major barriers to developing and implementing trauma systems. There is intense competition between hospitals which often see trauma center designation as a way to improve the hospital's image and status within the community to become designated trauma centers, and the process for designation can become vulnerable to local political pressures. Without a systematic approach for designating and accrediting trauma centers that includes a strict evaluation process, communities often find themselves with more so-called trauma centers than the population can support. As a result, many of these trauma centers do not meet the standards for trauma centers recommended by the ACS. Unfortunately, as the GAO noted, most States have not provided the leadership to overcome these political problems and competition between hospitals.

Mr. President, the financial burdens that can accompany trauma center designation are a major problem for many trauma centers, particularly in urban centers that provide a high proportion of uncompensated care associated with trauma. For suburban centers, the majority of trauma patients sustain their injuries from falls or car accidents and are usually covered by some form of insurance. In cities, particularly in inner-city areas, trauma centers treat a higher number or injuries that are the result of knife or gunshot wounds. The costs are high and most often, patients have no insurance to cover them.

Consequently, I am very concerned that communities with trauma systems are finding it increasingly difficult to maintain them. In Los Angeles, 7 out of 23 trauma centers have withdrawn from the trauma system because of high uncompensated care costs—between $500,000 and $2 million per trauma center annually—associated with trauma. In Miami, seven of the eight trauma centers withdrew from the system. In Chicago, 2 out of 10 trauma centers dropped out of the 2-year-old system and a third may do so shortly. Hospitals participating in the city's trauma network expect to lose about $15 million this year. I am also advised that trauma centers in San Diego and San Jose are close to dropping out of their systems.

Mr. President, there have been a number of articles that document these problems which I placed in the RECORD on August 3, 1988. I would urge my colleagues to refer to those articles, which begin on page S 10755 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for more information.

Mr. President, without access to additional funding for trauma centers, many trauma systems will collapse. Providing financial relief to trauma centers in distress is necessary to preserve the integrity of many trauma systems. In addition, as the DOT report stated, "[i]t is apparent that the problems of uncompensated care is a major disincentive to hospitals' participation in trauma care."

I would note that the conferees on the fiscal year 1989 Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Act (Report 100-880, pages 15-16) recognized the burden uncompensated care poses to the economic viability of trauma care centers, particularly those located in border States or those serving a disproportionately high percentage of undocumented patients. I understand that 13 trauma centers in communities that border Mexico incurred $8.2 million of bad debts last year as a result of this situation. The conferees further urged the Department of Health and Human Services and appropriate congressional committees to address this problem in order to ensure that the critical care provided by trauma centers can continue.

BILL PROVISIONS

Section 1211 would establish a new program of trauma care grants to States, for which $75 million would be authorized to be appropriated for each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992. Five percent would be available to the Secretary for the purpose of conducting research, training, evaluations, and demonstration projects with respect to emergency medical services and trauma care systems as described in section 1202. Up to 5 percent of a trauma care grant could be used for State administrative expenses.

A minimum of 35 percent of a State's allocation would go to counties, multicounty regions, or States for planning, implementation, and monitoring trauma systems. Each trauma system would be required to meet the standards and requirements established under the State plan. Each system would also be required to provide for the use of triage procedures, to provide for appropriate transportation and transfer policies, and to establish criteria and procedures for the identification and designation of trauma centers.

A minimum of 35 percent of a State's allocation would be used to reimburse trauma centers designated through a formal, competitive process pursuant to the State plan for portions of their uncompensated trauma-care costs. The only trauma centers that would be eligible to receive block grant funds would be those which meet criteria consistent with the guidelines of the American College of Surgeons for level I or level II trauma centers, or in the case of rural communities, level III trauma centers as specified in the State plan and serve areas in which triage, transport, and transfer policies, as described earlier in the summary of trauma-system-plan requirements, have been implemented.

Mr. President, clearly the systemic problems associated with uncompensated care that hospitals confront would not be addressed through this legislation. These problems must be dealt with comprehensively and nationwide. However, I believe that this program would be able to provide a degree of financial relief to the most severely stressed trauma centers to enable them to continue providing lifesaving care to all who are in need.

Each State would have the discretion to devote the remaining 30 percent to either of the two activities described above. In addition, the Secretary would be permitted to adjust the minimum percentage a State must spend for each of the two activities if the State demonstrates it is unable to use 35 percent of its allotment for one or the other activity. This approach would give States and communities flexibility to apply resources to the development or maintenance of trauma systems and centers.

States would be required to provide matching funds—in cash and or in kind—in the amount of $1 for each $3 of Federal funds. However, the Secretary may not require matching funds in fiscal year 1990.

Section 1214 would require, beginning in fiscal year 1990, that each State annually submit the trauma care component of the State emergency medical services plan. Each State plan would be required to:

First, specify which entity would be authorized to designate trauma centers.

Second, establish a framework and set minimum standards and guidelines for the implementation of regionalized trauma care systems, including guidelines for pre-hospital triage and transportation and including standards for the triage and transport of severely injured children. All transfer policies would be required to specific procedures—consistent with those enacted in section 9121 of Public Law 99-272 with respect to Medicare hospitals—in order to prevent inappropriate transfers.

Third, establish minimum standards and requirements for designation of trauma centers, including the number and type of trauma cases necessary to assure that trauma facilities will provide an acceptable quality of care to trauma cases.

Fourth, establish a process for the evaluation of designated centers and trauma systems.

Fifth, provide for the establishment of a centralized data reporting and analysis system that would accurately identify severely injured trauma patients at all facilities participating in trauma systems, identify the uncompensated trauma-care dollar volume by trauma hospital, identify patients who were inappropriately trainsferred, and monitor patient care at facilities throughout the trauma systems.

Sixth, provide for the conduct of public education activities concerning injury prevention and obtaining access to emergency medical services and trauma care.

Seventh, provide for the coordination and cooperation with a neighboring State that shares a standard metropolitan statistical area.

State standards relating to triage, transfer and transport policies, and the designation of trauma centers would be required to be at least as stringent as the applicable guidelines developed by the American College of surgeons and by the American College of Emergency Physicians. These guidelines are widely recognized by trauma experts to reflect the state-of-the-art for quality trauma care and already serve as the basis for trauma system development in several States.

However, we realize that some States may have unique circumstances that would prevent their trauma systems from meeting or adhering to all aspects of the ACS and ACEP guidelines. Thus the bill would provide that a State may obtain from the Secretary a waiver of such standard or standards if it provides an explanation and sufficient justification for such a waiver in the State plan. First, however, the State must provide all interested parties with an opportunity to respond to the proposed waiver through a public hearing process.

Mr. President, section 1215 would require designated trauma centers to provide to the State's centralized data collection office statistics information regarding the number of major trauma victims, the number of inpatient days consumed by these major trauma victims, and the total amount appropriately billed for which there was no identifiable third-party payor source. Institutions would also provide information on the diagnosis of, treatment provided to, and outcome of care for trauma patients and the number of patients inappropriately transferred.

States would be required to compile and submit such information to the Secretary as well as information regarding rural areas in which there are no 911 emergency telephone systems, no basic life-support systems, or no advanced life-support systems.

RESEARCH ON THE LONG-TERM IMPACT OF TRAUMA

Although trauma is the leading cause of death and disability in children and young adults, destroys the health, lives, and livelihoods of millions of people, and is the most costly of all major health problems, very little data are available about the long-term economic consequences of trauma. Knowledge about the chronic effects of injury on personal abilities in occupations and recreation and on social and psychological functioning is sorely lacking.

In contrast, for many health problems, such as cancers and cardiovascular diseases, long-term studies have provided valuable epidemiologic data on which to base intervention strategies.

BILL PROVISIONS

In order to establish an effective data collection base for evaluating the cost-effectiveness of trauma systems, section 4 would require the Secretary of HHS to conduct a comprehensive study on the long-term economic impact of trauma in the United States. The study would follow a multidisciplinary approach and draw on diverse fields such as epidemiology, statistics, biomedical engineering, behavioral sciences, health economics and general economics in order to identify and evaluate the many factors that influence the impact and long-term outcome of a trauma incident. Such sums as are necessary for the study would be authorized to be appropriated.

IMPROVING COORDINATION OF EMS EXPENDITURES

The GAO also found that many State transportation departments and State health departments do not coordinate expenditures for EMS-related functions. State transportation departments receive Federal highway safety funds from the Department of Transportation [DOT]; State health departments generally receive PHHS block grant moneys from the Department of Health and Human Services. In four of the six States the GAO visited during the fall of 1985, State transportation departments were not coordinating with EMS offices when deciding to use DOT funds for EMS activities.

For example, in California, $1.3 million of Federal highway safety funds were spent on EMS in 1985. The State EMS office director informed the GAO that his office was not involved in that decision and, consequently, could not determine whether the expenditures were consistent with the State plan or needs in the emergency medical services area.

Better coordination of EMS activities between State agencies could increase the effectiveness of such expenditures and minimize duplication.

BILL PROVISION

To accomplish this section 5 would require the State grantees of the State and Community Highway Safety Program and the PHHS block grant to provide assurances that both the State EMS director and State government highway safety representative have opportunities to participate in the development of all plans for EMS services and to review and comment on any proposals for the use of grants that may be applied to EMS-related purposes.

UPGRADING COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS

Mr. President, communications between the patient or other individuals on the scene and central dispatcher, between dispatcher and ambulance or other emergency vehicle, and between emergency vehicle and hospital-care are at the core of a successful EMS system.

First, individuals experiencing or witnessing a medical emergency must be able to gain access to the EMS system. This can best be accomplished through a single coordinated telephone system, such as the 911 emergency telephone number. As the GAO noted, a 911 system has two advantages. Callers need only remember one easily recognized 3-digit number, which is used whenever the system is implemented throughout the country, and an area-wide 911 system automatically routes that call to the most appropriate ambulance service or other emergency responder. In contrast, individuals living in or visiting areas without access to a single area-wide telephone number often experience substantial time delays in reaching the ambulance provider or fire department thus losing precious time which can mean the difference between life and death.

Although the availability of 911 has grown, more than 50 percent of the population of the United States still does not have access. Lack of access is particularly widespread in rural areas. For example, in the regions visited by the GAO, six of the nine urban areas have 100 percent of the population covered by 911, while only two of the nine rural areas have complete coverage. I am very pleased that my own State has implemented 911 throughout the entire State. In the 10 surveyed areas which the GAO found lacked complete 911 coverage, the most common factors cited as barriers to providing a 911 system were start-up and operating costs. Installing a basic 911 system costs on average of $250,000.

Second, the dispatch center must be able to transfer incoming calls to appropriate ambulance service providers as rapidly as possible. The number of times an incoming call is transferred and the amount of information that the dispatch center must obtain in order to make the transfer directly affect response time. For example, an enhanced 911 system, in which the address and telephone number of the incoming call are automatically displayed on a computer screen, reduces errors, speeds response time, and is particularly helpful when children call in for help. Again, lack of funds often prohibits the implementation of this advanced system, which can cost up to four times the amount of a basic 911 system.

Third, the ambulance or other emergency vehicle must be able to contact the base hospital during all phases of the medical emergency. Radio communications are essential for an ambulance to locate the medical emergency and to determine the most appropriate hospital to which the patient should be transported. In addition, in order to provide highly skilled, sophisticated care at the scene of the medical emergency, particularly ALS services for cardiac and trauma patients, paramedics must have radio contact with a physician in order to obtain medical direction. Too often, however, outmoded equipment and interference due to overcrowded radio frequencies hamper radio communications between ambulances and hospitals.

For example, the GAO reported that in Alameda County mountainous terrain blocks communications between the ambulance crew and the hospital in certain areas. Although a new tower would overcome this geographical barrier, Federal funding under the PHHS block grant is prohibited from being used for any such equipment purchases. Many other communities indicated to the GAO that the prohibition prevents them from upgrading and replacing old communications equipment.

New communications equipment is also needed by many communities to take advantage of new radio frequencies as they become available because competition for frequencies is fierce and interference is a major problem. The GAO found that in 10 of the 18 local areas, substantial radio interference from other emergency and nonemergency users exists.

Under Federal Communication Commission (FCC) rules, EMS providers share channels with other nonemergency medical-related users and EMS providers are not necessarily given priority in the allocation of new channels. At the same time, competition for frequencies is increasing markedly. The medical services frequencies in particular are extremely congested, especially in densely populated urban areas.

In 1985, the FCC projected severe shortfalls of available frequencies for public safety users in the 1990's in many major metropolitan areas, such as southern California, New York, and the Baltimore-Washington, DC, areas.

In April 1986, the FCC began taking action to help resolve the frequency-overcrowding problem. It designated an organization to review new license applications for emergency users and to recommend frequencies with the least likelihood of interference. The FCC also allocated a new and unused range of frequencies for public safety users, including EMS.

However, although I am pleased that the FCC has taken first steps to resolve some immediate problems, long-term solutions are still needed.

BILL PROVISIONS

In pursuit of such long-term solutions, section 6 of S. 10 would:

First, in order to improve rural communities' abilities to implement and operate 911 systems, amend the Community Facilities Loan [CFL] Program under the Farmers Home Administration to specify expressly that CFL's may be used for 911 development and communications-equipment purchases. This modification is consistent with the intent of the CFL Program, which is designed to improve community facilities providing essential services to rural residents, including fire and rescue services and health benefits.

Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, which has jurisdiction over the CFL Program, notified the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee [Mr. KENNEDY] and myself last year that it had no objection to the provision. I ask unanimous consent that the September 15, 1988, letter from the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry [Mr. LEAHY and Mr. LUGAR] be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Second, amend the prohibition against using PHHS block grant funds for equipment in order to permit expenditures for equipment to improve communications capabilities within an EMS system. In addition, States would be required to provide equal matching funds.

Third, require the FCC to assess the current and future availability of radio frequency channels for EMS communications between ambulances, both public and private, and hospitals and to establish a plan which ensures that the needs of EMS systems would be adequately provided for in making future allocations of frequencies.

As a result of discussions with the FCC last year on this issue, I understand that the FCC has already undertaken a study of these matters and is developing a national assignment plan for recently allocated Public Safety radio frequencies. To the extent that the issues raised regarding the study of available frequencies and establishment of a plan are sufficiently addressed in the FCC's ongoing study, we do not intend that a separate effort be undertaken. However, it is our expectation that the FCC include in its report a discussion of the potential need for protected frequencies for prehospital emergency medical services.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, nearly 16 years ago the first comprehensive law to upgrade emergency medical services through the United States was enacted. That law and those that followed in 1976 and 1979, which I am very proud to have authored, enabled communities to transform emergency medical services that consisted of poorly trained ambulance and emergency room personnel, outdated equipment, and little coordination of services into efficient and effective EMS systems able to respond to all kinds of medical crises.

S. 15 would enable communities to build on those systems in order that victims of serious injuries can be assured of receiving the highest quality of medical care available, and more importantly, be given every opportunity to continue full and productive lives.

Saving lives and preventing disabilities resulting from injuries is a goal within our grasp. We need only have the foresight and determination to organize and allocate medical resources to ensure that trauma victims are rapidly identified and transported to facilities specifically designed to provide the optimal level of care. I urge all my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following the letters mentioned above.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 15

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the Federal Government and the governments of the States have established a history of cooperation in the development, implementation, and monitoring of integrated, comprehensive systems for the provision of emergency medical services throughout the United States;

(2) physical trauma causes 140,000 deaths each year, is the leading cause of death of Americans between the ages of 1 and 44, and is the third leading cause of death in the general population of the United States;

(3) physical trauma in the United States results in an aggregate annual cost of $135,000,000,000 in medical expenses, insurance, administrative costs, property damage, and indirect costs (including more than an annual $31,000,000,000 in lost wages of individuals who are in their most productive work years);

(4) barriers still exist in many parts of the country that prevent quick and efficient emergency medical services from being provided;

(5) few States and communities have developed and implemented regional trauma care systems;

(6) uncompensated care costs associated with trauma have forced many trauma centers to drop out of trauma systems; and

(7) the number of deaths and disabilities resulting from incidents of physical trauma can be substantially reduced by improving emergency medical services systems and, in particular, the trauma care components of such systems.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAMS WITH RESPECT TO TRAUMA CARE.

The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended by inserting after title XI the following new title:

"TITLE XII—TRAUMA CARE

"PART A—GENERAL AUTHORITY AND DUTIES OF SECRETARY

"SEC. 1201. CLEARINGHOUSE ON EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall by contract provide for the establishment and operation of a National Clearinghouse on Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care (hereinafter referred to in this title as the 'Clearinghouse').

"(b) DUTIES.—The Clearinghouse shall—

"(1) foster the development of appropriate, modern emergency medical services and trauma care through the sharing of information among agencies and individuals involved in planning, furnishing, and studying such services and care;

"(2) collect, compile, and disseminate information on the achievements of, and problems experienced by, State and local agencies and private entities in providing emergency medical services and trauma care and, in so doing, give special consideration of the unique needs of rural areas;

"(3) provide technical assistance relating to emergency medical services and trauma care to State and local agencies; and

"(4) sponsor workshops and conferences on emergency medical services and trauma care.

"(c) FEES AND ASSESSMENTS.—A contract entered into by the Secretary under this section may provide that the Clearinghouse shall charge fees or assessments in order to defray, and beginning with fiscal year 1991, to cover, the costs of operating the Clearinghouse.

"(d) AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS.—The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this section shall be to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in Appropriation Acts.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $500,000 for the later of fiscal year 1990 or the first fiscal year thereafter for which funds are appropriated under this section, $300,000 for the later of fiscal year 1991 or the second fiscal year after fiscal year 1990 for which funds are so appropriated, and $100,000 for fiscal year 1992 or the third fiscal year after fiscal year 1990 for which funds are so appropriated.

"SEC. 1202. GENERAL DUTIES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

"(1) conduct and support research, training, evaluations, and demonstration projects with respect to emergency medical services and trauma care systems;

"(2) provide to State and local agencies technical assistance relating to emergency medical services and trauma care systems; and

"(3) establish guidelines for the development of uniform State data reporting systems as described in section 1214(b)(7).

"(b) GRANTS, COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS, AND CONTRACTS.—The Secretary may make grants, and enter into cooperative agreements and contracts, for the purpose of carrying out subsection (a).

"PART B—GRANTS WITH RESPECT TO MODIFICATIONS OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1211. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.

"(a) REQUIREMENT OF ALLOTMENTS FOR STATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to section 1232(b), the Secretary shall for each fiscal year make an allotment for each State in an amount determined in accordance with section 1220.

"(2) APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall make payments each fiscal year to each State from the allotment for the State if the Secretary approves for the fiscal year involved an application submitted by the State pursuant to section 1219.

"(b) AVAILABILITY.—Any amount paid to a State for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available for the next fiscal year to such State for the purposes for which such amount was paid.

"SEC. 1212. USE OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) PLANNING, IMPLEMENTING, ETC.—Not less than 35 percent of the total amount paid to a State under section 1211 for a fiscal year shall be used by a State to pay the costs of planning, implementing, monitoring, and evaluating the operation of, county, regional, or State trauma care systems. Such funds shall be administered by the head of the State agency or office responsible for the planning and coordination of emergency medical services system in the State. Each trauma care system supported with amounts made available under this subsection shall—

"(1) meet the standards and requirements established under the State plan submitted under section 1214;

"(2) provide for the use of triage procedures by paramedics, emergency medical technicians, and other emergency care providers to assess the severity of injury incurred by trauma patients;

"(3) provide for the use of appropriate transportation and transfer policies, including those referenced in section 1214(c), to ensure the delivery of patients to designated trauma centers, including facilities with specialized capabilities and expertise in the care of pediatric trauma patients, and other facilities within and outside of the jurisdiction of such system, including policies to ensure that only individuals appropriately identified as trauma patients are transferred to designated trauma centers;

"(4) conduct public education activities concerning preventing injuries and obtaining access to emergency medical services and trauma care; and

"(5) establish criteria and procedures, in accordance with the State plan required under section 1214, for the identification and designation of trauma centers to participate in the trauma care system.

"(b) TRAUMA CARE EXPENDITURES.—Not less than 35 percent of the amount available for a fiscal year to a State from the total amount paid to the State under section 1211 for such fiscal year shall be used by the State to reimburse designated trauma centers for such portions of the uncompensated trauma care expenditures of such centers (including uncompensated professional services) as the State considers appropriate. In order to receive reimbursement for uncompensated trauma care expenditures under this subsection, a designated trauma center shall—

"(1) be a center that—

"(A) meets the standards and requirements established by the State in accordance with the State plan required under section 1214; and

"(B) meets the guidelines for level I or level II trauma centers or in the case of rural communities, a level III trauma center as specified by the State plan required under section 1214;

"(2) serve an area in which the procedures and policies described in paragraphs (1) and

(2) of subsection (a) have been implemented; and

"(3) maintain its designation as a designated trauma center throughout the fiscal year for which reimbursement is provided under this subsection.

"(c) REMAINING AMOUNTS.—After the application of subsections (a) and (b) for a fiscal year, the amount remaining available for such fiscal year to a State from the total amount paid to the State under section 1211 for such fiscal year may be used for any purposes for which funds are required to be used under such subsections.

"(d) ADJUSTMENTS IN USE OF AMOUNTS AND ADMINISTRATION.—

"(1) ADJUSTMENTS.—The percentage of the total amount paid to a State under section 1211 for a fiscal year that is required by subsection (a) to be used for the uses specified in such subsection may be adjusted by the Secretary in order to—

"(A) permit the State to use for such uses such greater proportion of such amount as the Secretary determines, based upon a demonstration by the State of the extent to which the State is unable to use 35 percent of such amount for reimbursements under subsection (b), that the State is unable to use for such reimbursements; or

"(B) permit the State to use for such uses such lesser proportion of such amount as the Secretary determines, based on a demonstration by the State of the extent to which the State does not need to use 35 percent of such amount for such uses in order to carry out adequately during such fiscal year the activities described in subsection (a), that the State needs to use for such uses.

"(e) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Not more than 5 percent of the total amount paid to a State under section 1211 for a fiscal year may be used for administering the funds made available under section 1211. The State shall pay from non-Federal sources the remaining costs of administering such funds.

"SEC. 1213. REQUIREMENT OF MATCHING FUNDS FOR FISCAL YEARS SUBSEQUENT TO FISCAL YEAR 1990.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) PROHIBITION.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) unless the State involved agrees, with respect to the costs to be incurred by the State in carrying out the purposes described in section 1212, to make available non-Federal contributions (in cash or in kind under subsection (b)) toward such costs in an amount equal to not less than $1 for each $3 of Federal funds provided in payments from the allotment for such fiscal year.

"(2) LIMITATION ON CONDITIONS.—With respect to an allotment under section 1211(a) for a State for fiscal year 1990, the Secretary may not require the State to make non-Federal contributions as a condition of receiving payments from the allotment.

"(b) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION.—Non-Federal contributions required in subsection (a) may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services. Amounts provided by the Federal Government, or services assisted or subsidized to any significant extent by the Federal Government, may not be included in determining the amount of such non-Federal contributions.

"SEC. 1214. REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO CARRYING OUT PURPOSE OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) STATE PLAN.—

"(1) TRAUMA CARE COMPONENT.—For each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1990, each State shall submit the trauma care component of the State emergency medical services plan (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'State plan') to the Secretary.

"(2) INTERIM PLAN.—For fiscal year 1990, if a State has not completed the State plan, such State may provide, in lieu of a completed plan, an interim plan or description of efforts made toward the completion of the plan.

"(b) REQUIREMENTS OF PLAN.—Each State plan shall—

"(1) specify that the modifications required pursuant to paragraphs (2) through (8) will be implemented by the principal State agency with respect to emergency medical services or by the designee of such agency;

"(2) specify the public or private entity that will designate trauma care regions and trauma centers in the State;

"(3) contain minimum standards and requirements for the designation of trauma centers (including facilities with specified capabilities and expertise in the care of the pediatric trauma patient) by such entity, including standards and requirements for—

"(A) the number and types of trauma patients for whom such centers must provide care in order to ensure that such centers will have sufficient experience and expertise to be able to provide quality care for victims of injury;

"(B) the resources and equipment needed by such centers;

"(C) the availability of rehabilitation services for trauma patients; and

"(D) the provision of assurances that such centers may not refuse the transfer of a trauma patient because the patient is unable to pay for the care that the patient requires;

"(4) contain standards and requirements for the implementation of regional trauma care systems, including standards and guidelines (consistent with the provisions of section 1867 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1935dd) and subsection (c) of this section) for medically directed triage and transportation of trauma patients (including patients injured in rural areas);

"(5) contain standards and requirements for medically directed triage and transport of severely injured children to facilities with specified capabilities and expertise in the care of the pediatric trauma patient;

"(6) specify procedures for the evaluation of designated trauma centers (including trauma centers described in paragraph (5)) and trauma care systems;

"(7) provide for the establishment in the State of a central data reporting and analysis system for—

"(A) identifying severely injured trauma patients within regional trauma care systems in the State;

"(B) identifying the cause of the injury and any factors contributing to the injury;

"(C) identifying the nature and severity of the injury;

"(D) monitoring trauma patient care (including prehospital care) in each designated trauma center within regional trauma care systems in the State (including relevant emergency department treatment and rehabilitation information);

"(E) identifying the total amount of uncompensated trauma care expenditures made for each fiscal year by each trauma center in the State; and

"(F) identifying patients transferred inappropriately within regional trauma systems;

"(8) provide for the conduct of public education activities concerning injury prevention and obtaining access to emergency medical services and trauma care; and

"(9) with respect to the requirements established in paragraphs (2) through (8), provide assurances of coordination and cooperation between the State and any other State with which the State shares any standard metropolitan statistical area.

"(c) EXAMINATION AND TREATMENT FOR EMERGENCY MEDICAL CONDITIONS.—Appropriate transfer policies referred to in subsection (b)(4) and section 1212(a)(3) shall include the following requirements:

"(1) MEDICAL SCREENING REQUIREMENTS.—In the case of a hospital that has a hospital emergency department, if any individual comes to the emergency department and a request is made on the individual's behalf for examination or treatment for a medical condition, the hospital shall provide for an appropriate medical screening examination within the capability of the hospital's emergency department to determine whether or not an emergency medical condition (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(1))) exists or to determine if the individual is in active labor (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(2))).

"(2) NECESSARY STABILIZING TREATMENT FOR EMERGENCY MEDICAL CONDITIONS AND ACTIVE LABOR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If any individual comes to a hospital and the hospital determines that the individual has an emergency medical condition or is in active labor (as so defined), the hospital must provide either—

"(i) within the staff and facilities available at the hospital, for such further medical examination and such treatment as may be required to stabilize the medical condition or to provide for treatment of the labor; or

"(ii) for transfer of the individual to another medical facility in accordance with paragraph (3).

"(B) REFUSAL TO CONSENT TO TREATMENT.—A hospital shall be considered to meet the requirement of subparagraph (A) with respect to an individual if the hospital offers the individual the further medical examination and treatment described in such clause but the individual (or a legally responsible person acting on the individual's behalf) refuses to consent to the examination or treatment.

"(C) REFUSAL TO CONSENT TO TRANSFER.—A hospital shall be considered to meet the requirements of subparagraph (A) with respect to an individual if the hospital offers to transfer the individual to another medical facility in accordance with paragraph (3) but the individual (or a legally responsible person acting on the individual's behalf) refuses to consent to the transfer.

"(3) RESTRICTING TRANSFERS UNTIL PATIENT STABILIZES.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—If a patient at a hospital has an emergency medical condition which has not been stabilized (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(4)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(4)(B))) or is in active labor, the hospital may not transfer the patient.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—A patient that has not been stabilized (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(4)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(4)(B))) or is in active labor may be transferred if—

"(i)(I) the patient (or a legally responsible person acting on the patient's behalf) requests that the transfer be effected, or

"(II) a physician, or other qualified medical personnel when a physician is not readily available in the emergency department, has signed a certification that, based on the reasonable risks and benefits to the patient, and based on the information available at the time, the medical benefits reasonably expected from the provision of appropriate medical treatment at another medical facility outweigh the increased risks to the individual's medical condition from effecting the transfer; and

"(ii) the transfer is an appropriate transfer (within the meaning of subparagraph (D)) to that facility.

"(C) REQUIREMENT.—If a patient at a hospital has an emergency medical condition that has been stabilized, the hospital may transfer the patient but only by means of an appropriate transfer.

"(D) APPROPRIATE TRANSFER.—A transfer to a medical facility is an appropriate transfer if—

"(i) the receiving facility—

"(I) has available space and qualified personnel for the treatment of the patient, and

"(II) has agreed to accept transfer of the patient and to provide appropriate medical treatment, except that a hospital may not refuse to accept a transferred patient unless such hospital does not have the facilities or personnel available to provide proper care for such transferred patient, or the hospital has a full census at that time;

"(ii) the transferring hospital provides the receiving facility with appropriate medical records (or copies thereof) of the examination and treatment affected at the transferring hospital;

"(iii) the transfer is effected through qualified personnel and transportation equipment, as required including the use of necessary and medically appropriate life support measures during the transfer; and

"(iv) the transfer meets such other requirements as the Secretary may find necessary in the interest of the health and safety of the patient transferred.

"(4) CALL SCHEDULES.—In the case of a hospital that has a hospital emergency department, such hospital shall provide a call schedule that lists the appropriate medical specialists that will be immediately available for duty to provide ongoing, definitive treatment to a patient after the initial examination by the emergency physicians.

"(d) CERTAIN STANDARDS WITH RESPECT TO TRAUMA CARE CENTERS AND SYSTEMS.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees that, in carrying out paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (b), the State will adopt guidelines for the designation of trauma centers, and for triage, transfer, and transportation policies, at least as stringent as the applicable guidelines developed by the American College of Surgeons and by the American College of Emergency Physicians.

"(e) WAIVERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If the head of the State agency with jurisdiction over emergency medical services makes a determination that one or more of the standards pursuant to subsection (d) cannot be met in the State, the State may, subject to paragraph (2), request a waiver of such standard or standards if the State provides the Secretary with an explanation of and justification for such a waiver in the State plan submitted under subsection (b).

"(2) HEARING.—Before requesting a waiver under this subsection, the State shall—

"(A) in order to assure interested parties with an adequate notice and opportunity to respond to the proposed waiver—

"(i) provide notice to the public that it is applying for the waiver;

"(ii) solicit and consider comments from the public; and

"(iii) conduct a hearing on the proposed waiver; and

"(B) include with such explanation and justification a description of any comments made at the hearing in opposition to the proposed waiver and the response of the State to such comments.

"(3) PUBLICATION AS NOTICE.—The notice, solicitation of comments and hearing required in paragraph (2)(A) shall be made through publication in the Federal Register.

"(4) GRANTING OF WAIVER.—The Secretary may grant a waiver of such standard or standards on such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe if the Secretary determines that the justification provided by the State is sufficient and that, in the absence of compliance with the standard or standards involved, the availability or quality of care furnished will not be diminished.

"SEC. 1215. REQUIREMENT OF ANNUAL REPORT BY DESIGNATED TRAUMA CENTERS.

"The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees to require each designated trauma center in the State to provide to the central data reporting system of the State pursuant to section 1214(b)(7) each fiscal year a report that—

"(1) specifies the number of trauma patients cared for by such facility during the fiscal year;

"(2) specifies the total number of inpatient hospital days used by such patients during the fiscal year;

"(3) describes the diagnoses, treatment, and treatment outcomes for such patients;

"(4) specifies the total amount of uncompensated trauma care expenditures incurred by such facility for such patients for such fiscal year; and

"(5) specifies the number of patients transferred in a manner not in accordance with the provisions of section 1214(c)(3)(D).

"SEC. 1216. REQUIREMENT OF PROVISION OF CERTAIN INFORMATION TO SECRETARY.

"(a) INFORMATION RECEIVED BY STATE REPORTING AND ANALYSIS SYSTEM.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees that the State will, not less than once each year, provide to the Secretary the information received by the State pursuant to section 1214(b)(7).

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES IN RURAL AREAS.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless—

"(1) the State involved identifies any rural area in the State for which—

"(A) there is no system of access to emergency medical services through the telephone number 911;

"(B) there is no basic life-support system; or

"(C) there is no advanced life-support system; and

"(2) the State submits to the Secretary a list of rural areas identified pursuant to paragraph (1) or, if there are no such areas, a statement that there are no such areas.

"SEC. 1217. RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF PAYMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not, except as provided in subsection (b), make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees that the payments will not be expended—

"(1) to make cash payments to intended recipients of services provided pursuant to the such section;

"(2) to purchase or improve real property (other than minor remodeling of existing improvements to real property) or to purchase major medical or communication equipment, ambulances, or aircraft; or

"(3) to satisfy any requirement for the expenditure of non-Federal funds as a condition for the receipt of Federal funds.

"(b) EXCEPTION.—If the Secretary finds that the purpose described in section 1212 cannot otherwise be carried out, the Secretary may, with respect to an otherwise qualified State, waive the restriction established in subsection (a)(3).

"SEC. 1218. REQUIREMENT OF REPORTS BY STATES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees to prepare and submit to the Secretary an annual report in such form and containing such information as the Secretary determines (after consultation with the States and the Comptroller General of the United States) to be necessary for—

"(1) securing a record and a description of the purposes for which payments received by the State pursuant to such section were expended and of the recipients of such payments; and

"(2) determining whether the payments were expended in accordance with the purpose of the program involved.

"(b) AVAILABILITY TO PUBLIC OF REPORTS.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) unless the State involved agrees that the State will make copies of the report described in subsection (a) available for public inspection.

"(c) EVALUATIONS BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall, from time to time, evaluate the expenditures by States of payments under section 1211(a) in order to assure that expenditures are consistent with the provisions of the program involved.

"SEC. 1219. REQUIREMENT OF SUBMISSION OF APPLICATION CONTAINING CERTAIN AGREEMENTS AND ASSURANCES.

"The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) to a State for a fiscal year unless—

"(1) the State submits to the Secretary an application for the payments containing agreements in accordance with sections 1212 through section 1218;

"(2) the agreements are made through certification from the chief executive officer of the State;

"(3) with respect to such agreements, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(4) the application contains the information required to be submitted to the Secretary pursuant to section 1214(a) and 1216(b)(2); and

"(5) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this part.

"SEC. 1220. AMOUNTS OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) FORMULA.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary shall allot to each State under section 1211(a) an amount that shall be the sum of the amounts allotted to the State under paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) POPULATION.—Eighty percent of the total amount made available under section 1232(b)(2) for a fiscal year shall be allotted to States under this paragraph. The allotment of a State under this paragraph shall be the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount available for allotment under this paragraph as the population of the State bears to the population of all States.

"(3) SQUARE MILEAGE.—Twenty percent of the total amount made available under section 1232(b)(2) for a fiscal year shall be allotted to States under this paragraph. The allotment of a State under this paragraph shall be the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount available for allotment under this paragraph as the square mileage of the State bears to the square mileage of all States.

"(4) MAXIMUM ALLOTMENT.—The total amount allotted to a State under this subsection shall not be greater than three times the greater of—

"(A) the amount the State would otherwise receive if a State's allotment were determined by the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount available for allotment as the population of the State bears to the population of all States; or

"(B) the minimum allotment as determined under subsection (b).

"(b) MINIMUM ALLOTMENT.—Notwithstanding subsection (a)—

"(1) if the total amount appropriated under section 1232 for any fiscal year equals or exceeds $25,000,000, the allotment of a State under this section for such fiscal year shall not be less than the greater of—

"(A) $250,000, or

"(B) an amount equal to one-half of one percent of the total amount appropriated to carry out this part for such fiscal year; or

"(2) if the total amount appropriated under section 1232 for any fiscal year is less than $25,000,000—

"(A) the Secretary shall allot 25 percent of such amount equally among the States; and

"(B) the Secretary shall allot 75 percent of such amount according to a formula developed by the Secretary designed to target funds to States that demonstrate in their applications the greatest commitment to establishing and maintaining trauma systems and that have the greatest need to develop, implement, and maintain such systems.

"(c) DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN FUNDS APPROPRIATED FOR ALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts described in paragraph (2) shall, in accordance with paragraph (3), be allotted by the Secretary to States receiving payments under section 1211(a) for the fiscal year (other than any State referred to in paragraph (2)(C)).

"(2) TYPE OF AMOUNTS.—The amounts referred to in paragraph (1) are any amounts made available pursuant to 1232(b)(2) that are not paid under section 1211(a) to a State as a result of—

"(A) the failure of the State to submit an application under section 1219;

"(B) the failure, in the determination of the Secretary, of the State to prepare within a reasonable period of time such application in compliance with such section; or

"(C) the State informing the Secretary that the State does not intend to expend the full amount of the allotment made for the State.

"(3) AMOUNT.—The amount of an allotment under paragraph (1) for a State for a fiscal year shall be in proportion to the amount otherwise allotted to such State for the fiscal year without regard to this subsection.

"SEC. 1221. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENTS.

"(a) REPAYMENT OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may, in accordance with subsection (b), require a State to repay any payments received by the State pursuant to section 1211(a) that the Secretary determines were not expended by the State in accordance with the agreements required to be made by the State as a condition of the receipt of payments under such section.

"(2) FAILURE TO REPAY.—If a State fails to make a repayment required in paragraph (1), the Secretary may offset the amount of the repayment against any amount due to be paid to the State under section 1211(a).

"(b) OPPORTUNITY FOR A HEARING.—Before requiring repayment of payments under subsection (a)(1), the Secretary shall provide to the State an opportunity for a hearing.

"SEC. 1222. PROHIBITION AGAINST CERTAIN FALSE STATEMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) MATERIAL FACT.—A person may not knowingly make or cause to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact in connection with the furnishing of items or services for which payments may be made by a State from amounts paid to the State under section 1211(a).

"(2) INTENT TO DEFRAUD.—A person with knowledge of the occurrence of any event affecting the right of the person to receive any payments from amounts paid to the State under section 1211(a) may not conceal or fail to disclose any such event with the intent of fraudulently securing such amount.

"(b) CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF PROHIBITION.—Any person who violates a prohibition established in subsection (a) may for each violation be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 1223. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND PROVISION BY SECRETARY OF SUPPLIES AND SERVICES IN LIEU OF GRANT FUNDS.

"(a) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary shall, without charge to a State receiving payments under section 1211(a), provide to the State (or to any public or nonprofit private entity designated by the State) technical assistance with respect to the planning, development, and operation of any program or service carried out pursuant to section 1212. The Secretary may provide such technical assistance directly, through contract, or through grants.

"(b) SUPPLIES AND SERVICES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—On the request of a State receiving an allotment under section 1211(a), the Secretary may, subject to paragraph (2), provide supplies, equipment, and services for the purpose of aiding the State in carrying out section 1211(b) and, for such purpose, may detail to the grantee any officer or employee of the Department of Health and Human Services.

"(2) REDUCTION IN AMOUNTS.—With respect to a request described in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall reduce the amount of payments to the State under section 1211(a) by an amount equal to the fair market value of any supplies, equipment, or services provided by the Secretary and shall, for the payment of expenses incurred in complying with such request, expend the amounts withheld.

"SEC. 1224. REPORT BY SECRETARY.

"Not later than October 1, 1991, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress a report on the activities of the States carried out pursuant to section 1211. Such report may include any recommendations of the Secretary for appropriate administrative and legislative initiatives.

"PART C—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1231. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this title—

"(1) DESIGNATED TRAUMA CENTER.—The term 'designated trauma center' means a trauma center designated in accordance with the modifications to the State plan described in section 1214.

"(2) PLAN FOR THE PROVISION OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES.—The term 'plan for the provision of emergency medical services' means a plan for a comprehensive, organized system to provide for the access, response, triage, field stabilization, transport, hospital stabilization, definitive care, and rehabilitation of patients of all ages with respect to emergency medical services.

"(3) STATE.—The term 'State' means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"(4) TRAUMA CARE COMPONENT OF THE PLAN FOR THE PROVISION OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES.—The term 'trauma care component of the plan for the provision of emergency medical services' means a plan for a comprehensive health care system, within rural and urban areas of the State, for the prompt recognition, prehospital care, emergency medical care, acute surgical and medical care, rehabilitation, and outcome evaluation of seriously injured patients.

"(5) UNCOMPENSATED TRAUMA CARE EXPENDITURES.—The term 'uncompensated trauma care expenditures' means any amount that is expended by a health care facility to provide health care services to a trauma patient and for which such facility does not receive payment or reimbursement.

"SEC. 1232. FUNDING.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this title, there is authorized to be appropriated $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992.

"(b) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS BY SECRETARY.—

"(1) PART A.—For the purpose of carrying out part A, the Secretary shall make available 5 percent of the amounts appropriated for a fiscal year pursuant to subsection (a).

"(2) PART B.—For the purpose of making allotments under section 1211(a), the Secretary shall make available 95 percent of the amounts appropriated for a fiscal year pursuant to subsection (a).".

SEC. 4. REQUIREMENT OF CERTAIN STUDIES RELATING TO TRAUMA CARE.

(a) MEDICAID POLICIES OF STATES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a study for the purpose of determining the policies adopted by States in reimbursing trauma centers pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.). The study shall assess the adequacy and appropriateness of the reimbursements provided pursuant to such title by States to such centers and shall include recommendations with respect to whether the requirements imposed under such title should be modified in order to ensure that such centers are appropriately reimbursed.

(b) LONG-TERM ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF TRAUMA.—The Secretary shall conduct a comprehensive multidisciplinary study of the long-term economic effects of incidences of trauma in the United States. In conducting the study, the Secretary shall utilize the services of individuals with expertise in appropriate fields (including epidemiology, statistics, behavioral sciences, and health economics) in order to identify and evaluate as many factors as possible that influence the impact and long-term outcome of a trauma incident.

(c) TIME FOR COMPLETION.—The Secretary shall, not later than 1 year and 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act, complete the studies required in subsections (a) and (b), respectively, and submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress a report describing the findings made as a result of the studies.

SEC. 5. COOPERATION BETWEEN STATE AGENCIES.

(a) CERTIFICATIONS REQUIRED IN APPLICATIONS FOR PHHS BLOCK GRANT.—Section 1905(c) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300w-4(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (5);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) agrees to provide the officer of the State government responsible for the administration of the State highway safety program with an opportunity to—

"(A) participate in the development of any plan by the State relating to emergency medical services, as such plan relates to highway safety, including the State plan required by section 1910B; and

"(B) review and comment on any proposal by any State agency to use any Federal grant or Federal payment received by the State for the provision of emergency medical services as such proposal relates to highway safety.".

(b) HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM.—Paragraph (1) of section 402(b) of title 23, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out the period at the end of each subparagraph and inserting in lieu thereof a comma;

(2) by adding "or" at the end of subparagraph (F); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) provide procedures that ensure that State officials who are responsible for the administration, planning, and coordination of emergency medical services within the State have the opportunity to—

"(i) participate in the development of the State highway safety program as such program relates to emergency medical services;

"(ii) provide advice on the development and implementation of those provisions of the State highway safety program related to emergency medical services; and

"(iii) review, and comment on, any proposals to use funds provided to the State under this section for emergency medical services.".

SEC. 6. IMPROVING COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS.

(a) PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES BLOCK GRANT.—

(1) USE OF ALLOTMENTS.—The last sentence of section 1904(a)(1)(F) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300w-3(a)(1)(F)) is amended by striking out "1905(c)(2))." and inserting in lieu thereof "1905(c)(2) and other than the purchase of communications equipment for such systems in accordance with paragraph (4)).".

(2) LIMITATION ON USE OF ALLOTMENTS.—Section 1904(a) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) A State may not, under subparagraph (F) of paragraph (1), use amounts described in paragraph (1) to pay more than 50 percent of the costs of communications equipment for emergency medical services systems.".

(b) WATER AND WASTE FACILITY LOANS AND GRANTS.—The first sentence of section 306(a)(1) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1926(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "emergency telephone service, communications equipment for emergency medical services," after "recreational developments,".

(c) FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Federal Communications Commission shall—

(1) complete a study of the availability of radio frequency channels for emergency medical services communications (including in such study, to the maximum feasible extent, an analysis of communications between public and private ambulances and public and private hospitals);

(2) establish a plan to ensure that the needs of emergency medical services communications (including effective prehospital communications) shall be adequately provided for in the allocation of frequencies for public safety; and

(3) prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report that contains the results of such study and plan relating to emergency medical services communications; and

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1989, or on the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

SEPTEMBER 14, 1988.

DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned organizations request that you support S. 10, the "Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act of 1988," when it is considered on the floor in the next few weeks.

This legislation would encourage states to develop and implement plans within their emergency medical services systems for providing optimal care to victims of trauma—a disease the National Academy of Sciences has identified as one of the principal public health problems facing our nation today. Injury is the leading cause of death up to age 44, resulting in over 140,000 lost lives each year. Studies have shown that as many as 25,000 of these deaths might be prevented through nationwide access to expert trauma care.

Key elements to a successful trauma system include: access, prehospital care, acute hospital care, and rehabilitation. Trauma systems operate on the principle that patients with severe injuries require special medical capabilities. Consequently, it is inappropriate to simply transport injury victims to the nearest hospital without regard to the appropriateness of its trauma care facilities. It is particularly important that children be cared for in facilities with expertise in the care of the injured pediatric patient. Studies have shown that communities which have established trauma care systems have experienced dramatic reductions in the number of preventable deaths due to injury. Therefore, it is imperative that states organize their resources to ensure that severely injured patients are transported to hospitals that have made the philosophical, economic, and resource commitment to provide the level of care they need.

Rural populations suffer especially from inadequate trauma care. The death rate from accidental injuries in most rural areas is over twice the rate for the largest cities, and almost two of every three deaths involving motor vehicles occur in rural areas. Further, although farm workers constitute only four percent of the nation's workers, 38 percent of machinery-related deaths occur on farms. Rural areas do not have the personnel or financial resources to support the trauma facilities that are available in large cities. Only statewide organization of trauma resources can enable rural area residents to receive state-of-the-art trauma care.

Accidental injuries alone cost this nation $118 billion each year in lost wages, medical expenses, property damage, insurance administration, and indirect costs. In addition to these costs, the price our citizens pay in physical and emotional pain is incalculable. Please vote "yes" for S. 10 as it was reported by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

Sincerely,

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY,
Washington, DC, September 15, 1988.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources,
Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR TED AND ALAN: We are writing with regard to S. 10, the proposed "Emergency Medical Service and Trauma Care Improvement Act". We understand that section 4(b) of S. 10 would modify the Community Facilities Loan (CFL) program under the Farmers Home Administration to specify expressly that CFLs may be used for 911 development and communications-equipment purchases.

We share your concerns that a majority of rural communities have not yet adopted 911 emergency telephone services and are aware that the most common factors cited as barriers to providing 911 systems are start-up and operating costs. In addition, we share your concerns over the findings of the General Accounting Office that advanced life support services are often not available in rural areas because of outmoded or worn out communications equipment.

We believe that the modification of the CFL program as proposed by section 4(b) is consistent with Congressional intent for that program, which is designed to improve community facilities providing essential services to rural residents, including fire and rescue services and health benefits.

As the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Agriculture Committee, which has jurisdiction over this provision, we have no objection to this provision and, therefore, will not ask for referral of the bill to our Committee.

Sincerely,

PATRICK LEAHY,
Chairman.
RICHARD LUGAR,
Ranking Minority Member.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am please to join my extended colleague Senator CRANSTON in introducing the Emergency Medical Systems and Trauma Care Improvement Act of 1989, which will complete a job which was started by Congress 15 years ago.

In 1973, Congress passed into a law a program which originated in the Labor and Human Resources Committee which I currently chair which was intended to improve emergency and trauma care throughout the country. Many States improved their emergency services because of that program. They established 911 systems. They designated specialized trauma centers and instituted triage and transportation systems to get patients to the right hospital instead of the nearest hospital. Unfortunately, that job remains incomplete.

There are glaring inadequacies which demand our attention. The GAO has reported that approximately 40 percent of the country is not covered by 911 systems. Most rural areas still rely on basic life support systems in their emergency transport; while urban and suburban areas have advanced life support systems available. A recent study documented that 29 States have not begun the process of designating trauma centers and have no systems for triage.

The bill before us today will enable States to remedy this situation and complete the job started 15 years ago.

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 16. A bill to require the executive branch to gather and disseminate information regarding, and to promote techniques to eliminate, discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage disparities which are based on sex, race, or national origin; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

PAY EQUITY TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing S. 16, the proposed "Pay Equity Technical Assistance Act." This legislation would require the Secretary of Labor to develop a program for the dissemination of information on the steps which employers in both the public and private sectors can take to eliminate wage disparities which reflect the sex, race, or national origin of employees. An identical bill was introduced in the House of Representatives as H.R. 41 on January 3, 1989, by Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR, who has been a vigorous leader in the fight to achieve pay equity.

In past Congresses, Representative OAKAR and I and our colleague from Washington, former Senator Dan Evans, have introduced legislation, passed three times in the House, which would require the Federal Government to examine its own pay practices in order to determine whether women or minorities employed by the Federal Government have been underpaid in terms of the work they perform. Although 72 Members of the Senate voted last year, on October 7, 1988, to consider our legislation, we were unable to bring that measure to a final vote before adjournment of the 100th Congress. Although the effort to carry out a pay equity study of the Federal work force will continue, it is time to move forward in other areas as well.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today moves beyond the legislation considered in the last Congress for the simple reason that while we have spent the past 6 years in Congress debating a measure limited to a pay equity study of the Federal work force, public and private employers throughout the Nation have been working at identifying and correcting pay inequities.

A perceptive article, "Comparable Worth: It's Already Happening," appeared in Business Week in April, 1986. It outlines how major companies across the country are quietly undertaking the job evaluations and comparisons that provide the basis for wage adjustments to achieve pay equity.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this article from Business Week appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Similar activity has been taking place at the State and local government level. According to a study done last year by the National Committee for Pay Equity, all but seven States have undertaken at least an initial step to address the pay equity problem. Six States have begun or are completing implementation of broad plans to correct inequities, and another 20 States have made or appropriated funds for pay equity adjustments to eliminate wage inequities based on sex and/or race.

The legislation I am introducing is designed to help facilitate this spread of voluntary action to eliminate pay inequities by requiring the Department of Labor to serve as a clearinghouse for the dissemination of information and research on how different employers are dealing effectively with this problem. The bill directs the Secretary of Labor to develop and carry out a continuing program for the dissemination of information, to conduct research, and to provide technical assistance to employers seeking information on ways which they can work to eliminate wages inequities.

Mr. President, many of the opponents of pay equity efforts have said in the past that they do not object to voluntary efforts to employers to identify and remedy wage inequities. This bill is aimed at facilitating such voluntary activity by providing for the dissemination of information on how various employers are remedying these problems and the promotion of research into the techniques that employers seeking assistance might utilize. The bill provides that the Secretary shall establish a program for providing appropriate technical assistance to any public or private entity requesting such assistance to correct wage-setting practices or to eliminate wage disparities, based on the sex, race, or national origin of the employee, rather than the work performed or other appropriate factors.

Mr. President, a decade ago, the Federal Government had an active interest in the problem of the wage gap between male and female workers. In 1980, the Department of Labor issued guidelines, subsequently rescinded by the Reagan administration, governing Federal contractors which were aimed at helping reduce wage disparities. In 1978, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission commissioned a study by the National Academy of Sciences into the issues surrounding the wage gap. That study released in 1981, "Women, Work and Wages—Equal Pay for Jobs of Equal Value," found that the wage gap results from the fact that women's jobs pay less, regardless of the work entailed, and that the more a job is dominated by women, the less it pays. In the intervening years, however, the Federal Government has abdicated any role in combatting wage inequities. It is time that it began, again, to play a constructive role in dealing with this problem. This bill would charge the Department of Labor with the modest task of helping employers who want to deal with wage disparity problems find out what other employers are doing, what works and what doesn't work, and perhaps stimulating some employers, through the dissemination of information, to take a hard look at their own practices.

Mr. President, wage disparities between male and female workers, and among minority workers, is a serious problem that needs to be addressed. The gap between male and female workers has remained around 65 percent for a number of years. Studies have shown that some portion of this wage gap can be explained by nondiscriminatory factors, such as different work patterns of male and female workers. But virtually every researcher who has looked closely at the problem has concluded that some portion of the wage gap remains inexplicable and that discriminatory practices account for some portion of the gap. We ought to be doing everything we can, in both the public and the private sector, to make sure that every possible effort is made to purge discrimination from the work place and from the wage system.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following the article from Business Week.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPARABLE WORTH: IT'S ALREADY HAPPENING—COMPANIES ARE QUIETLY EVENING UP PAY SCALES

(By Aaron Bernstein)

Ever since the concept of comparable worth surfaced a few years ago, Corporate America has derided the idea—which holds that women should be paid the same as men for comparable jobs as well for the same jobs. Destroys the free market, said the National Association of Manufacturers. Opens the door to unending litigation, worried the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Now, very quietly, major companies such as AT&T, BankAmerica, Chase Manhattan, IBM, Motorola, and Tektronix are trying forms of comparable worth. These experiments may be the first steps in a movement to raise women's pay, which averages 64¢ for each dollar men earn. Some experts say that stopping discrimination—which they say includes paying women less than men for comparable jobs—would erase half this gap. "In 10 years we'll probably have comparable worth, even though businesses will still be saying we don't," says George P. Sape of Organization Resources Counselors (ORC), a management consulting group.

SCARED TO DEATH

The latest moves have hardly ended the philosophical debate. Women's groups contend that secretaries earn less than janitors, even though the skills needed for the two jobs are comparable, simply because the secretaries are women. Opponents argue that a more plentiful supply of secretaries has kept their pay down.

But pragmatism is pushing companies toward comparable worth anyway. The doctrine was dealt a blow last year when a U.S. appeals court turned down the first major case brought to trial, against the state of Washington. However, proponents are keeping up the legal pressure with dozens of suits. Some 13 states already have laws that require public and private employers to pay equally for "comparable" work. Nurses in Alaska are claiming in a test case that this means comparable worth.

Corporations fear developments in the legislative arena as well. Some 30 states have comparable worth bills pending or have commissions studying the issue. Minnesota has applied the idea to state workers since 1983. Despite its court victory, Washington State is spending $482 million to raise the pay of women. The House of Representatives passed a bill in October that would require a comparable worth study of federal workers.

Such actions worry companies. "The bill in Congress scares employers to death: They fear it will put a stamp of approval on comparable worth," says Virginia R. Lamp, a labor relations attorney at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

For years many big companies have been doing the job comparisons necessary to make judgments on comparable worth, mostly for white-collar staffs. They evaluate jobs accordings to factors such as responsibility, skill, and physical labor. The factors are given points, and jobs are ranked by total points. "We call this method internal equity, which can be used to do comparable worth," says Lance A. Berger, a vice-president at Hay Associates Inc., a compensation firm.

EYE STRAIN

Now some companies, such as Tektronix Inc. and Motorola Inc., have started to adhere closely to internal comparisons—even when it means paying more than the market demands. "Many companies go through the exercise of doing the internal equity analysis, but then they upset these relationships if the market tells, them to," says Richard A. Baker, Tektronix' corporate compensation manager. "We look at the market, but that's secondary to us." Both companies say it hasn't cost them much because their high-tech jobs don't have a history of being dominated by one gender.

Tektronix took another step when it put in a new pay system in the 1970s: It put all workers on the same evaluation system. Blue-collar pay rates tend to follow patterns set by unions, even in unorganized companies. Many female clericals are paid less because they're lumped in at the bottom of management evaluation systems, where there are not high-paying blue-collar jobs for comparison.

Other companies are trying to ensure that the factors used to evaluate jobs aren't biased against work usually done by women. After General Electric Co. was hit by a wage discrimination lawsuit in the 1970s, it overhauled its job evaluation methods, which now reflect comparable worth concerns.

BankAmerica Corp. went further in its new pay system by expanding the definition of physical labor used by most evaluation systems to include eye strain. This helps to measure work on video display terminals, which is usually done by women. The bank also looks at muscle strain, which lets it assess work done by tellers—also often female—who stand at bank windows all day. "This isn't the traditional evluation method, which thinks of physical demands as lifting a box or something, as men usually do," says Dan C. Rowland, BankAmerica's director of compensation.

CATCHING DEVIATIONS

Other companies, such as International Business Machines Corp. and Control Data Corp., are looking directly at pay disparities between men and women. One approach is to find an average pay level for a series of jobs. Each employee's pay is then compared with the average. At the same time, a mathematical analysis is done to see if factors such as sex are significant predictors of pay levels. "You look to see if anybody is two or more standard deviations below the norm and hope they're not women," says one consultant. If they are, the company may raise the pay of women below the average.

Industry sources say Chase Manhattan Bank Corp. compared vice-presidents' jobs. It found that those in commercial banking, where women predominate, were paid less than those in male-dominated investment banking, although the jobs weren't that different. The bank narrowed the salary gap, in part by giving commercial bankers more responsibility and paying them more.

Some unionized companies are unwilling converts to comparable worth. The St. Louis Newspaper Guild alleged in a suit last year that the St. Louis Post-Dispatch's largely female staff of in-house sales representatives, who sell ads over the phone, should be paid the same as its outside representatives, who are usually male. On Mar. 27, management agreed to raise in-house sales salaries by about 4.5 percent. "Our lawyers said the case had no merit, but we settled because of the legal fees we were running up," says Nicolas G. Penniman, publisher and general manager.

In 1980, pushed by its union, AT&T developed an evaluation system for comparing all the company's jobs with each other. The two sides didn't agree on how to implement the plan. But it's part of current bargaining aimed at reaching a new pact for 255,000 workers by May 31.

Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., which was spun off as part of U.S. West Inc. in AT&T's breakup, has gone further. Together with its unions, it developed a job evaluation sysem that reflects comparable worth. The two sides will use it to help set wages when they bargain over a new contract in August.

The pay gap between men and women won't shrink overnight. But as long as it persists, companies' subterranean efforts to close it will probably continue.

S. 16

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Pay Equity Technical Assistance Act".

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

Recognizing that the identification and elimination of discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage disparities is in the public interest, the purpose of this Act is to help eliminate such practices and disparities by—

(1) providing for the development and utilization of techniques that will promote the establishment of wage rates based on the work performed and other appropriate factors, rather than the sex, race, or national origin of the employee; and

(2) providing for the public dissemination of information relating to the techniques described in paragraph (1), thereby encouraging and stimulating public and private employers, through the use of such techniques, to correct wage-setting practices and eliminate wage disparities, to the extent that they are based on the sex, race, or national origin of the employee, rather than the work performed and other appropriate factors.

SEC. 3. PROGRAM SPECIFICATIONS.

In order to carry out the purpose of this Act, the Secretary of Labor shall develop and carry out a continuing program under which, among other things, the Secretary shall—

(1) develop and implement a program for the dissemination of information on efforts being made in the private and public sectors to reduce or eliminate wage disparities, to the extent that they are based on the sex, race, or national origin of the employee, rather than the work performed and other appropriate factors;

(2) undertake and promote research into the development of techniques to reduce or eliminate wage disparities, to the extent that they are based on the sex, race, or national origin of the employee, rather than the work performed and other appropriate factors; and

(3) develop and implement a program for providing appropriate technical assistance to any public or private entity requesting such assistance to correct wage-setting practices or to eliminate wage disparities, to the extent that they are based on the sex, race, or national origin of the employee, rather than the work performed and other appropriate factors.

SEC. 4. DEFINITION.

For the purpose of this Act, the term "other appropriate factors" includes factors such as—

(1) the skill, effort, responsibilities, and qualification requirements for the work involved, taken in their totality;

(2) geographic location and working conditions; and

(3) seniority, merit, productivity, education, and work experience.

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. HEINZ):

S. 17. A bill to direct the Consumer Product Safety Commission to promulgate fire safety standards for cigarettes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

FIRE SAFE CIGARETTE ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, most people do not realize that year after year cigarette fires are the No. 1 cause of residential fire deaths in the United States. This growing tragedy lies hidden for a very simple reason: Cigarette fires cause death and destruction without fanfare, without making the headlines in our daily newspapers. Because large numbers of lives usually are not lost in any one location at any one time, it is difficult to grasp fully the widespread devastation in terms of lost family members and damaged property that these fires cause.

In 1985, the most recent year for which the U.S. Fire Administration has compiled data, there were a total of 48,300 residential structural fires associated with cigarettes. These fires resulted in 1,640 deaths, 3,980 injuries, and $319.2 million of destroyed property. There were also thousands of nonresidential fires associated with cigarettes during that year.

More and more people are recognizing that cigarette fires pose a serious safety hazard and are an unacceptable risk, especially insofar as a solution is clearly within reach. I applaud the many State efforts, including my home State of California, to grapple with the problem. However, cigarette fires are not confined to any region of this country. It is a national problem that demands a national solution.

Mr. President, in order to address the problem of cigarette-ignited residential fires, I sponsored legislation in the 96th, 97th, and 98th Congresses that would direct the Consumer Product Safety Commission [CPSC] to establish performance standards ensuring that cigarettes and little cigars have a minimum capacity for igniting upholstered furniture and mattresses. That legislation was never enacted.

However, in order to address the Tobacco Institute's claim that a less fire-prone cigarette was infeasible, I joined Senator HEINZ in introducing legislation, S. 1935, in the 98th Congress that established an interagency cigarette safety task force to conduct studies and make recommendations concerning the technical and economic feasibility of developing less fire-prone cigarettes and little cigars. The bill specified that representatives of the Tobacco Institute, as well as private individuals, were to participate in the feasibility studies. S. 1935 passed both Houses and was enacted in 1984.

The final report of the technical study group established by S. 1935 was published in October 1987. According to that report, it is "technically feasible" to develop cigarettes that will have a "significantly reduced propensity to ignite upholstered furniture or mattresses." The report notes that the characteristics which reduce the ignition propensity of the cigarette included: reduced circumference, lower density tobacco, less porous paper, and the reduction of certain chemicals in the paper. The report also delineates the further technical research which is necessary to develop performance standards for less fire-prone cigarettes.

Mr. President, once the feasibility of fire-prone cigarettes was established, I introduced legislation in the 100th Congress mandating the development of performance standards for less fire-prone cigarettes and requiring cigarette manufacturers to comply with such standards. I am pleased to be joined by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] in reintroducing this legislation which was introduced in the House on January 3, 1989, by Representative MOAKLEY.

This is not an antismoking bill. It is legislation directed at a proven safety hazard.

In sum, Mr. President, the time has come for Congress to take a simple step to address the leading cause of residential fires. My bill directs the CPSC to seek the advice and expertise of the National Bureau of Standards and other Federal and State agencies engaged in fire safety in developing standards for less fire-prone cigarettes, and to take into account the results of the feasibility study. The bill further stipulates that the Commission shall issue the standards for firesafe cigarettes within 1 year of the date of enactment. In addition, Mr. President, my bill states that the standards shall be developed in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act, provides for judicial review, and clarifies that the standards developed pursuant to this bill shall not preempt any State law that prescribes more stringent standards for firesafe cigarettes.

Mr. President, this is a reasonable measure in light of the lives that may be saved and the property damage that can be avoided if cigarette manufacturers are required to produce less fire-prone cigarettes. The time is long overdue for Congress to turn the spotlight on the unpublicized killer and to get the tobacco industry to halt this needless loss of life and property. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 17

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE, FINDINGS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as "Fire Safe Cigarette Act of 1989".

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) cigarette ignited fires are the leading cause of fire deaths in the United States,

(2) in 1984 there were 1,570 deaths from cigarette ignited fires, 7,000 serious injuries from such fires, and $390 million in property damage caused by such fires,

(3) the final report of the Technical Study Group on Cigarette and Little Cigar Fire Safety under the Cigarette Safety Act of 1984 has determined that it is technically feasible to produce a cigarette with less propensity to ignite fires,

(4) it is appropriate for the Congress to require by law the establishment of a fire safety standard for the manufacture and importation of cigarettes,

(5) the value of a fire safety standard which will prevent property damage and personal injury and loss of life is economically incalculable, and

(6) it is appropriate that the regulatory expertise of the Food and Drug Administration be used to implement a fire safety standard.

SEC. 2. FIRE SAFETY STANDARD.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall by rule issue a fire safety standard for cigarettes to reduce the risk of ignition presented by cigarettes. In establishing the standard the Commission shall—

(1) consult with the National Bureau of Standards and seek the advice and expertise of other Federal and State agencies engaged in fire safety, and

(2) take into account the findings in the report of the Technical Study Group on Cigarette and Little Cigar Fire Safety under the Cigarette Safety Act of 1984 (15 U.S.C. 2054 note).

(b) STOCKPILING.—The Commission shall include in the rule issued under subsection (a) a prohibition of stockpiling of cigarettes to which the standard issued under subsection (a) will apply. For purposes of this subsection, the term "stockpile" means the manufacturing or importing of a cigarette between the date a standard is issued under subsection (a) and the date the standard is to take effect at a rate greater than the rate the cigarettes were manufactured or imported for the one year period ending on the date the standard was issued.

(c) PROCEDURE.—The rule under subsection (a) shall be issued—

(1) in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, except that if the rule is significantly different from the recommendation of the Technical Study Group on Cigarette and Little Cigar Fire Safety under the Cigarette Safety Act of 1984 the Commission shall include in the statement under subsection (c) of such section an explanation for the difference, and

(2) without regard for the requirements of Executive Order 12291.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The Commission shall prescribe the effective date of the rule issued under subsection (a), except that such date may not be later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(e) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

(1) Any person who is adversely affected by a rule issued under subsection (a) may, at any time before the 60th day after the Commission issues the rule, file a petition with the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or for any other circuit in which such person resides or has its principal place of business to obtain judicial review of the rule. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission. The Commission shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Commission based the rule as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

(2) If the petitioner applies to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shows to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there was no opportunity to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission the court may order such additional evidence (and evidence in rebuttal thereof) to be taken before the Commission in a hearing or in such other manner, and upon such terms and conditions, as the court deems proper. The Commission may modify the Commission's findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and the Commission shall file such modified or new findings, and the Commission's recommendations, if any, for the modification of the rule.

(3) Upon the filing of a petition under paragraph (1), the court shall have jurisdiction to review the rule of the Commission as modified, in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 3. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) PROHIBITION.—No person may manufacture or import a cigarette unless the cigarette is in compliance with a fire safety standard issued under section 2(a).

(b) PENALTY.—A violation of subsection (a) shall be considered a violation of section 19 of the Consumer Product Safety Act.

SEC. 4. PREEMPTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—This Act and the fire safety standard promulgated under section 2(a) do not preempt or otherwise affect in any way any law of a State or political subdivision which prescribes a fire safety standard for cigarettes which is more stringent than the standard promulgated under section 2(a).

(b) DEFENSES.—In any civil action for damages compliance with the fire safety standard promulgated under section 2(a) may not be admitted as a defense.

SEC. 5. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "Commission" means the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

(2) The term "cigarette" has the meaning prescribed by section 3 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act.

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, good morning, over 5 years ago, Senator CRANSTON, Representative MOAKLEY, and I first asked our colleagues in the Congress to move forward with legislation which could save thousands of lives and millions of dollars each year. We wanted a bill to develop and enforce manufacturing specifications for tobacco companies to reduce the risk of a cigarette igniting fabric.

As ranking member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, I have learned that cigarettes are the No. 1 cause of fire deaths in this country. Recently, the technical study group released a report on cigarette and little cigar fire safety. According to the report, in 1984, 67,000 cigarette-ignited fires resulted in 1,570 deaths, 7,000 serious injuries, and $390 million in property damage. I am particularly concerned that older Americans are two to three times more likely than other age groups to die in home fires.

For over two decades, fire safety efforts have focused on making mattresses and upholstery more flame retardant. Both of these industries are to be applauded for their dedication to developing and applying life-saving standards. But until we make the cigarette itself less likely to start a fire, we have broken the match, but failed to extinguish the flame.

Our efforts in 1983 and early 1984 met with stiff opposition from the tobacco industry and its lobbying groups. Tobacco companies argued that having at least two fire-safe cigarettes on the market did not prove that all cigarettes could be reasonably produced to meet safety standards.

We engineered a compromise, and in October 1984, we mandated an interagency committee to study the technical and commercial feasibility of fire-safe cigarettes. That study is now complete. The Government, industry, and consumer experts who participated in this effort conclude that a fire-safe cigarette is indeed technologically feasible, and can be produced at minimal additional costs.

I think we have paid a high price to prove the obvious. We have invested 3 years, lost almost 5,000 lives, and over $1 billion in property for official confirmation that a fire-safe cigarette can be manufactured and marketed at a cost that is certainly less than the potential benefit to society.

The legislation Congressman MOAKLEY, Senator CRANSTON, and I are introducing today is long overdue. All that now stands between the public and a fire-safe cigarette is the willingness of Congress to act. It is possible, profitable, and prudent for the tobacco industry to support this effort, and I would urge its full cooperation.

We have mandated seat belts and safety standards for cribs and highchairs. We require inspections for food purity and declarations for potential carcinogens. America is a health and safety-conscious nation. It is unconscionable that we continue to ignore one of the greatest public threats of all—a lit cigarette with the potential to maim, kill, and destroy.●

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 18. A bill to authorize payments to States to assist in improving the quality of child-care services; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CHILD-CARE STANDARDS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am introducing today, S. 18, the proposed Child Care Standards Improvement Act of 1989. This measure is based upon legislation I first introduced during the 99th Congress as S. 810 and reintroduced as S. 934 in the 100th Congress. Although the Senate approved portions of this measure as part of the 1986 continuing resolution, they were not enacted into law. Some of the concepts first put forward in this measure have since been incorporated into the major comprehensive child care initiative, the proposed Act for Better Child Care Services [ABC], considered in the last Congress. The ABC bill is also being introduced today, and I am proud to be one of its principal sponsors.

This measure is designed to stimulate State efforts to review and upgrade State child care licensing and regulation systems and procedures, thereby providing better protections and quality of care for children. As I indicated, certain concepts proposed in this measure have been incorporated into the ABC bill. At the same time, this measure has been drafted so that it can stand alone or be encompassed in a broader measure such as the ABC bill.

NEED FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues some of the history behind my efforts in this area. In 1984, Congress enacted legislation as part of the fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution, section 401 of Public Law 98-473, aimed at encouraging States to require national criminal records checks for child care workers and others who work with young children. That legislation also provided funding for training programs, including training in the prevention of child abuse in child care settings for child care workers and others. The 1984 legislation, which was the result of efforts in the Senate by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], and in the House by my colleague from California, Representative GEORGE MILLER, added $25 million to the $2.7 billion appropriation for social services block grants to the States under title XX of the Social Security Act.

Although the 1984 legislation represented an important first step toward helping protect the well-being of young children in child care settings, it is clear that there are many more complex issues that relate to the quality of care provided to children in these programs that must be addressed. Simply running the names of child care workers through FBI computers cannot alone guarantee that children are adequately protected and served in child care programs. The qualifications of child care workers, their training and supervision, the ratio of adults to children, health and safety standards, and parental access and participation are some of the critical factors which affect the quality of care that a child is likely to receive.

I first introduced S. 810 on March 28, 1985, to build upon the 1-year provision in the legislation passed in the fall of 1984 on the fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution and to expand those efforts in order to confront many issues that affect the quality of child care. As I indicated earlier, in December 1985 the Senate Appropriations Committee agreed to include in the fiscal year 1986 continuing resolution an amendment in which the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] and I proposed to continue to make available to the States the $25 million for child care training activities which was authorized and provided for under Public Law 98-473. Unfortunately, we were unable to persuade the House conferees to retain these provisions in the final fiscal year 1986 continuing resolution.

Although I strongly support and believe in the need to enact a comprehensive child care measure along the line of the ABC bill and the legislation, formerly S. 4, which I have introduced over the past decade, I also believe we must seek to move ahead in the child care area wherever and whenever we can.

Thus, I was very proud in the 100th Congress, as chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, to have pushed for enactment of section 412 of Public Law 100-322. This provision is intended to promote the expansion of child care centers at Veterans' Administration, soon to be Department of Veterans' Affairs, facilities.

Enactment of the provision of the proposed Child Care Standards Improvement Act either as part of a comprehensive measure such as the ABC bill, or prior to enactment of that measure, would start the movement needed in this country to improve the quality and standards for child care programs—programs to which we entrust our most valuable resource—our children.

WIDE VARIATIONS IN STATE STANDARDS FOR CHILD CARE PROGRAMS

Mr. President, the need to improve standards and monitoring procedures for child care programs has become a matter of increasing urgency in the past several years. The sexual abuse cases which have attracted media attention are only a small part of the problem. In many States, regulation of child care programs is totally insufficient. The Children's Defense Fund recently issued a report entitled "State Care Fact Book 1988," which demonstrates in a dramatic way the tremendous range in States standards for child care programs. Although all States require child care centers to meet some licensing requirements and most regulate family day-care homes in some fashion, these requirements vary tremendously.

ADULT CHILD STAFF RATIOS

For example, limitations on the number of children cared for by each adult is a critical factor in assuring the quality of care provided. The National Fire Protection Association has recommended a staff-child ratio of 1 adult for every 3 children under the age of 2. Although a number of States, including my own State of California, limit to 3 or 4 the number of children below age 1 that can be cared for by 1 adult, the CDF report finds that 11 States permit 5 or more babies to be cared for in family day-care homes by 1 provider without an assistant. As many as 12 States allow 1 adult to care for 8 or more infants. As Edward Zigler, former head of the Children's Bureau in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare during the Nixon administration, has been quoted as saying, "How could one caregiver get eight babies out of a burning building?"

With regard to older children, a 1985 Department of Health and Human Services report indicated that, while States like Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Virginia required 1 adult for every 10 4-year olds, States like Arizona, Delaware, Hawaii, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas allowed 1 adult to care for twice that number—that is 20 children supervised by 1 adult.

STAFF QUALIFICATIONS AND TRAINING

Similarly, although it is generally recognized that the qualifications and training of child care workers and those who operate child care centers are critical to the quality of the care provided to the children, States vary widely in these requirements for these individuals. For example, according to the HHS report, although 18 States required directors of child care centers to be 21 years or older, 15 States had no requirements regarding the age of center directors. Although 23 States required that these center directors be at least high school graduates or hold GED certificates, 11 States had no educational requirements for center directors. Eighteen States required at least 2 years of relevant experience for center directors, but eight States had no requirements regarding the experience of center directors.

As to child care workers, the disparities were just as great. Although 21 States required that child care workers in child care centers have a high school diploma or GED, 5 States required only that they be able to read and write, and 13 States had no requirements at all regarding the educational background of workers in centers.

According to the HHS document, 36 States did have some requirements regarding participation by child care center staff in in-service training programs. These requirements, however, ranged from very general directives that staff be provided appropriate in-service training to very specific requirements, including designating the subject areas to be covered. For example, HHS cited Nevada as requiring that all new center employees must be given training with respect to the center's policies, procedures, and program and, requiring new staff, within 6 months of employment, to participate in 3 hours of training each year through workshops, conferences, or formal training. North Dakota required an initial 2-day orientation for new staff and 5 hours of training annually. New Mexico required 12 hours of training per year.

In-service training requirements for family-day-care providers appeared to be much more sparse but equally as varied. HHS found 15 States mandating some type of inservice training and 7 requiring orientation sessions for new providers. For example, Tennessee required that family-day-care providers attend 2 hours of workshops or conferences on early-childhood development.

PARENTAL PARTICIPATION AND ACCESS

Mr. President, another area of concern has been parental access to child care facilities and parental involvement. As HHS noted in its January 1985 document, the right of parents to have access to programs is particularly important since "State and local staff who enforce child care requirements are limited in number and cannot frequently visit each facility." According to the survey conducted by the Children's Defense Fund, 27 States do not even have regulations guaranteeing parents access to child care centers. Thirty-five States do not guarantee unlimited parental access to family day care homes. The model standards of the National Association for the Education of Young Children explicitly recommend that parents should be free to visit a center unannounced at any time. In one of the very few recommendations made in the 1985 HHS document, it was stated that parents searching for child care should be sure that they have the right to drop in and visit the program, unannounced and at any time, once the child has been enrolled. I find it difficult to believe that there is any valid reason for such a standard not being universally applicable.

HEALTH AND SAFETY STANDARDS

With respect to health and safety standards utilized by the States, the CDF survey found that 10 States have no specific health training requirements for staff of child care centers. Six States have no requirement that staff wash their hands, even, as CDF points out, after diapering infants. Only 29 of the 50 States require a source of fresh water in a center's diaper changing room.

The Children's Defense Fund report also found that 10 States do not have any immunization requirements for children enrolled in family day care homes, and three States have no immunization requirements for preschool children in child care centers.

The 1985 HHS report collected much of its data from the 1981 Comparative Licensing Study, which was prepared under contract for HHS. That report found that less than half of the States have regulations which specify that centers have at least two exists—a requirement which could be a life or death matter in the case of a fire or other emergency requiring the rapid removal of large numbers of small children. Although local fire and safety codes might also require such exists, the omission of this important safety standard in so many States' child care regulations is troublesome and potentially lethal.

CONTINUED DETERIORATION IN STATE STANDARDS

Mr. President, there is evidence indicating that substantial deterioration has taken place in State laws and procedures relating to child care programs since the Federal standards were suspended in 1980 and States were subjected to massive reductions in title XX funding as a result of the 1981 budget cuts.

In 1983, the Children's Defense Fund did a State-by-State survey of the impact of those cutbacks in the title XX program. The results of their survey indicated 33 States had lowered their child care standards for title XX funded programs and 24 had reduced funds for training of child care workers.

In 1988, the CDF found that while some States had strengthened their child care standards, others had continued to weaken theirs. For instance, legislation passed in 1988 allows group day care providers in Georgia to exceed the limit of 18 children during two 1-hour periods in a day. Texas now no longer requires that probation notices be posted in day care facilities. In Alabama, the staff-to-child ratio for 30-month-olds to four-year-olds were increased from 1-to-10 to 1-to-12. The ratio for 18-month-olds to 30-month-olds was increased from 1-to-6 to 1-to-8.

LICENSING AND MONITORING ACTIVITIES

Mr. President, many States were also forced to cut back carrying out child care licensing and monitoring activities. For example, the 1983 CDF report provided the following very disturbing data: Arizona in 1980–81 provided for four monitoring visits per year to child care centers. In 1981–82, it cut the number of visits to two per year. In 1982–83, monitoring visits were eliminated altogether, except for an annual visit conducted by the State health department. Idaho cut its regional child care licensing staff from 12 positions down to 5. The State of Washington shifted from a 2- to 3-year license for child care programs. It eliminated routine monitoring of facilities which had previously occurred every 6 months.

Mr. President, it is clear that State efforts at monitoring child care programs have simply not kept up with the growth of their programs. For example, testimony presented to the House Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families in 1984 indicated that in Texas, while the number of regulated facilities increased by 53 percent between 1978 and 1983, the number of child care licensing staff decreased by 43 percent.

Evidence of inadequate State monitoring of child care programs are numerous. For example, the Ohio Children's Defense Fund in 1985 issued an excellent report reviewing the status of child care in Ohio. That report, entitled "Day Care: Investing in Ohio's Children," noted that the Ohio Department of Agriculture employed 180 meat inspectors who made unannounced inspections of nearly 600 meat and poultry plants once a month but that the State employed only one inspector for every 100 child care centers. Ohio also employed over 50 inspectors for roughly 2,000 health-care facilities, including nursing homes, and required, by law, that inspections of nursing homes be unannounced.

A report on child care in the State of Massachusetts, entitled "Final Report of the Governor's Day Care Partnership Project," issued in January 1985 also concluded that licensing staff had not kept up with the increases in the number of centers and homes. That report noted that one-third of the State's child care center licenses had expired, that family-day-care homes must wait months before they are registered—the waiting list for registration was over 2,500—and that the State's regulations had not been reviewed for 8 years. The report concluded that "maintaining the level of day care quality or expanding the supply will be impossible without adequately expanding [the State's] licensing capacity" and specifically recommended that all existing child care regulations be reviewed and revised, giving special attention to the need to improve staff-qualification requirements.

Mr. President, my own State of California, which has in many areas some of the better child care standards in the country, in 1984 had only 78 evaluators to handle licensing of child care programs. This represented a case load of 150 for center evaluators and 250 for family-day-care home evaluators. A 1978 report by the California Governor's Advisory Committee on Child Development Programs strongly recommended that the State institute a maximum case load of 75 facilities per licensing worker for centers and 125 facilities per worker for family-day-care homes. As a result of legislation passed in 1984, 19 more employees were added to the State's center licensing program. According to the 1988 report of the California League of Women Voters, the California Department of Social Services currently has approximately 228 evaluators at State and county levels to handle a caseload of over 40,000 facilities—7,000 centers and 35,000 family day care homes. Monitoring of about 1000 of those centers, which provide subsidized child care, is also conducted by the State department of education. The league's report noted that both the California Department of Social Services and the Department of Education have been criticized for not having enough staff who have been specifically trained in early childhood education.

The impact of limited licensing staffs can be dramatically illustrated at the local level. A report by Coleman Children and Youth Services issued in January 1983 on children's services in San Francisco noted that San Francisco had at that time only one licensing workers for family-day-care homes, resulting in a backlog of over 300 applications awaiting approval.

Until 1985, California required visits to centers and family-day-care homes only once every 3 years. These centers and homes are visited when they are first licensed, and upon request for renewal. As a result of the new law which went into effect in January 1985, the licensing period for centers was reduced from 3 years to 1 year, thereby requiring at least an annual contract. Family-day-care homes continue to have a required visit only once every 3 years.

Mr. President, one of my constituents, Marcy Whitebrook, director of the Berkeley Child Care Employee project, pointed out in testimony to the House select committee how the failure or inability of law enforcement and licensing agencies to respond quickly and decisively to reports of violations of State laws and regulations deters child care workers from reporting unsafe or abusive situations when they feel that their reports will have no impact. Incidentally, California enacted in 1984 legislation to protect against employer retaliations those child care workers who report licensing law violations. This whistleblowing protection can be of great value in encouraging child care workers to report problems to appropriate authorities. Additionally, California has launched a major child care consumer awareness program as part of its overall child care strategy.

Although my own State has helped lead the Nation in developing high quality child care standards, monitoring and enforcement still remain a problem, along with a need for sufficient resources to provide adequate training programs for child care staff—a critical component in any effort to upgrade the quality of child care.

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today has two principal components.

First, it would provide for the establishment of a national advisory committee to help develop recommended standards for child care programs, differentiating between those appropriate for child care centers and those for family-day-care homes and differentiating as well on the basis of the age of the children involved.

Mr. President, it is clearly appropriate for the Federal Government to provide some guidance to State and local governmental entities on the basic standards which should be applied to child care programs. In the 1984 amendment to the continuing resolution, provisions were included directing HHS to prepare and distribute to the States a Model Child Care Standards Act containing minimum licensing or registration standards for day-care centers, family-day-care homes, and group-day-care homes. The legislation specified that the HHS model standards cover six specific areas including, first, training, development, supervision, and evaluation of staff; second, staff qualification requirements, by job classification; third, staff-child ratios; fourth, probation periods for new staff; fifth, employment history checks for staff, and sixth, parent visitation. In January 1985, in response to this legislative mandate, HHS released a document entitled "Model Child Care Standards Act." Unfortunately, however, HHS declined to provide in this document any specific guidance to the States in the six areas delineated in the statutory provision or in other areas. Instead, the document produced by HHS simply reviews the types of requirements that various States have adopted in these areas. It does, however, include in the appendix two model child care standards developed by two private organizations. One is the "Accreditation Criteria and Procedures" developed by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs, a division of the National Association for the Education of Young Children. The other is "Standards for Day Care Service" by the Child Welfare League of America.

Mr. President, since HHS has failed to provide any guidance in this area, I have included provisions in the legislation that I am introducing to convene a panel of individuals representing parents, experts in the field of child development, and persons with experience in operating child care programs for the purpose of developing a set of recommended standards for child care programs, covering the areas of demonstrated impact on the quality of child care. The legislation directs that the standards deal separately with those appropriate for child care centers and for family-day-care homes, taking into consideration in both cases the age and number of children involved. The legislation does not mandate that States adopt these recommended standards; it merely provides that the standards will be developed so that the States will have some guidance in reviewing their own standards and licensing procedures.

Mr. President, prior to 1981, the Federal Government did have a set of Federal minimum standards for federally funded day care. These standards, originally entitled "Federal Interagency Day Care Regulations" [FIDCR], had been in effect since 1968. In 1978, Congress was provided with the results of a comprehensive HEW report supporting the appropriateness of Federal minimum standards for federally funded day-care programs. Between 1979 and 1980, much effort went into updating and revising the 1968 standards along the lines suggested in the 1978 report. The new standards, which were published in the Federal Register on June 15, 1979, were subjected to intense scrutiny and public hearings throughout the country. Ten regional hearings were held where over 1,000 witnesses testified and over 4,000 submitted written testimony. These standards enjoyed wide and strong support. They represented a realistic and sound approach to dealing with very basic issues in child care. The final regulations were published in the Federal Register in March 1980.

Unfortunately, however, this body voted in June 1980 to suspend entirely any Federal standards for federally funded child care programs. I led the fight on the Senate floor against this total abdication of responsibility for ensuring the safety and well-being of children enrolled in federally funded child care programs. Although those efforts were not successful, time has clearly shown that support for those standards was fully justified.

The tragic consequences of the withdrawal of Federal leadership in the area of child care are readily apparent from the lowering of State standards and diminishment of protections I described earlier. Now many have come to recognize the need for Federal guidance in this area. That was the impetus that led to the provisions included in the fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution, Public Law 98-473. The legislation that I am introducing today is designed to facilitate the development of such model or recommended child care standards. The National Advisory Committee which would be created under this legislation would be charged with the task of reviewing all of the various options for child care standards and devising a set of recommended standards.

Second, Mr. President, in order to continue the efforts begun in 1984 to provide States with fiscal incentives to make improvements in their licensing and monitoring programs, this legislation would authorize the appropriation of $25 million for each of fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991 to be used by the Secretary for making grants to States to carry out plans for improving State licensing and monitoring procedures. In effect, my proposal would continue the availability of the additional $25 million added to the fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution but would broaden the purposes for which such funds could be used to encompass other factors affecting the quality of child care services. In order to be eligible to apply for these funds, the Governor of the State would be required to establish or designate a State advisory committee on child care standards. These committees, patterned somewhat on the child-support commissions included in the title IV-D child-support enforcement legislation enacted in 1984 as part of Public Law 98-378, would be charged with the responsibility of reviewing the State's laws, regulations, and procedures for licensing, regulating, and monitoring child care services and programs within the State and identifying any deficiencies or areas for improvements in the laws or regulating systems.

Under the legislation, these committees would include not less than 15 members, of whom not less than one-third would be parents and not less than one-third would be either representatives of different types of child care programs or individuals who are professionals in the field of child development. The Governor could designate an existing body to carry out these functions so long as it had the requisite representation of parents and child development professionals or child care providers.

These committees would be responsible for preparing a report, by not later than June 1, 1990, on the results of their review for the Governor. This report would be required to be transmitted along with any comment by the Governor to the Secretary of HHS not later than September 30, 1990. In carrying out their reviews, the State advisory committees would be directed to take into consideration various models of appropriate standards for child care programs, including the 1989 HEW standards, the child care standards developed by the National Association for the Education of Young Children, and those developed by the Child Welfare League, which appear in the appendices to the material published by HHS in January 1985, pursuant to Public Law 98-473, as well as to consider the various options described in that material. The legislation provides for the National Advisory Committee to provide information and advice to State advisory committees in carrying out these reviews. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill being introduced today is to create an incentive for States to undertake reviews of their entire system of monitoring the quality of care of children in child care programs. By involving parents and child-development professionals in this type of review, we hope to encourage a thorough and careful reexamination of these issues at the State level.

Mr. President, I believe that this legislation provides a much needed, but realistic approach to dealing with the problems of quality and protection of children in child care programs. It would establish a mechanism for encouraging State governments to review and upgrade their own systems for ensuring the quality of child care programs within the State. It would provide for Federal leadership and guidance through the development of recommended standards which the States can utilize in carrying out their own self-assessments and development of plans for improvement. In sum, the measure is designed to provide a balanced approach to dealing with the troubling problems relating to the care and protection of young children by respecting the particular needs of individual States while restoring the appropriate role of Federal leadership and guidance.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, there is no question that Government entities at all levels need to be concerned about the care and well-being of young child care settings. More than 54 percent of the mothers of children under the age of 6 are now in the work force, and the vast majority are working full time. Child care is a necessity for most of these families.

Parents need to know that the facilities and homes that are caring for their children while they are at work are safe and adequate places for young children. Government licensing and monitoring programs cannot, alone, guarantee the safety and security of these children, but they can contribute significantly to ensuring that these goals of safety and adequacy are met. I strongly believe that the legislation I am introducing today can contribute to achieving that goal.

Every Member of this body is aware of the deep and growing concern among our constituents that adequate safeguards be provided for young children in child care settings. Fortunately, we do have the opportunity to do something constructive to help resolve these problems.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 18

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Child Care Standards Improvement Act of 1989".

GRANTS FOR IMPROVING STATE CHILD-CARE LICENSING AND REGULATORY SYSTEMS

SEC. 2. (a)(1) In order to further the activities begun with funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 by section 401(a)(2) of Public Law 98-473, making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 for the purpose of making grants to the States as provided for in subsection (b).

(2) Funds appropriated under this subsection shall remain available for expenditure until the end of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which such funds became available.

(b)(1) From the funds made available under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall make grants, upon application and submission by a State of a plan which meets the requirements of subsection (b)(2), for the purpose of assisting the State in carrying out such plan.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any State desiring to receive a grant under this section shall submit to the Secretary a plan to carry out the recommendations, for correcting the deficiencies in or improving the State's licensing, regulating, or monitoring of child-care programs, contained in the report submitted under section 3.

(B) A State's plan submitted under this paragraph may include carrying out less than all of such recommendations, but in the event that a plan omits carrying out any recommendation the plan shall include a detailed explanation of the reasons for the State not planning to carry out any such omitted recommendation.

(3) No grant may be made under this section unless the State submits an application to the Secretary therefor at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary.

(c) In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall initially allocate funds among the States in the same proportions as their regular allotments as determined under title XX of the Social Security Act, except that if any part of the amount made available under this section remains after all grants have been made in accordance with the preceding provisions of this sentence, the Secretary shall use the remaining part for making further grants to States which require additional assistance to carry out their plans submitted under subsection (b), but for years after fiscal year 1990 priority shall be given in distributing such additional funds to those States which have developed a plan which will lead to such States meeting or exceeding the recommended standards established by the National Advisory Committee pursuant to this Act.

(d) Each State which submits an application for a grant under this section must provide satisfactory assurances that the funds therefrom will be used solely for improving the State's licensing, regulating, or monitoring of child-care programs or otherwise improving the quality of child-care programs within the State.

STATE REVIEW OF CHILD-CARE LICENSING AND REGULATORY SYSTEMS

SEC. 3. (a) As a condition of the State's eligibility for receiving Federal payments under this Act, the Governor of each State shall establish or designate a State Advisory Committee on Child-Care Standards (hereinafter referred to as the "State Advisory Committee") which shall be composed of not less than fifteen members, of which not less than one-third shall be parents of children who are currently enrolled in child-care programs (including both center-based and family day care home programs) and not less than one-third shall be either representatives of different types of child-care programs (including both center-based and family day care home programs) or individuals who are professionals in the field of child development.

(b)(1) It shall be the function of each such State Advisory Committee to examine, investigate, and study the State's laws, regulations, and procedures for licensing, regulating, and monitoring child-care services and programs within the State, to prepare the report described in paragraph (2), and, if requested by the Governor, to monitor such licensing, regulating, and monitoring activities on a regular basis.

(2) Each State Advisory Committee shall prepare a report outlining the committee's findings and recommendations resulting from its examination, investigation, and study under this section, including a description of the current status of child-care licensing, regulating, or monitoring within the State, the deficiencies, if any, in the existing licensing, regulating, or monitoring programs (including an assessment of the adequacy of staff to carry out effectively the State program), and recommendations to correct such deficiencies, if any, or to improve such licensing, regulating, or monitoring programs. The report shall set forth separately such information and recommendations with respect to center-based programs and family day care programs. The committee shall submit the report to the Governor not later than June 1, 1990, and the Governor of each State shall, not later than September 30, 1990, transmit it to the Secretary along with the Governor's comments and the State's plan, as provided for under section 2, for correcting deficiencies in or improving its licensing, regulating, or monitoring programs.

(c) In carrying out its activities under subsection (b), each State Advisory Committee shall review and take into consideration the final 1980 HEW Day Care Regulations, volume 45, page 17870 of the Federal Register (March 19, 1980), and the options for child-care standards published by the Department of Health and Human Services in January 1985 pursuant to Public Law 98-473, including the standards set forth in the appendices to that document.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CHILD-CARE STANDARDS

SEC. 4. (a)(1) In order to assist and provide guidance to the States in improving the quality of child-care services, there is established a National Advisory Committee on Child-Care Standards (hereinafter referred to as the "National Advisory Committee").

(2) The National Advisory Committee shall be composed of fifteen members who shall be individuals with expertise in the area of child-care services selected from among persons who are representatives of child-care providers, professionals in the field of child development, or parents who have been actively involved in community child-care programs. The members shall be appointed as follows:

(A) Seven by the President of the United States;

(B) Two by the majority leader of the Senate;

(C) Two by the minority leader of the Senate;

(D) Two by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

(E) Two by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

Not more than four of the members described in clause (A) shall be members of the same political party.

(3) All appointments under this subsection shall be made not later than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this section.

(4) A vacancy in the membership of the National Advisory Committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. Any such vacancy shall not affect the powers of the National Advisory Committee except with respect to satisfaction of the quorum requirements specified in paragraph (7).

(5) The President shall designate a Chairman of the National Advisory Committee.

(6) The National Advisory Committee shall adopt such rules and regulations as it considers necessary to establish its procedures and to govern the manner of its operations, its organization, and its personnel.

(7) Eight members of the National Advisory Committee shall constitute a quorum.

(b)(1) The National Advisory Committee shall review the options for child-care standards published by the Department of Health and Human Services in January 1985 pursuant to Public Law 98-473, including the standards set forth in the appendices to that document, the standards set forth in the final 1980 HEW Day Care Regulations, volume 45, page 17870 of the Federal Register (March 19, 1980), and such other materials as the National Advisory Committee may deem appropriate and shall, not later than fourteen months after the date of the enactment of this section, submit to the Secretary proposed recommended standards for child-care programs (setting forth separate recommended standards for center-based programs and for family day care programs). Such recommended standards shall cover factors having a demonstrated impact on the quality of child care including, but not limited to—

(A) group size and composition in terms of the number of teachers and the number and age of children;

(B) qualifications, training, and background of child-care personnel, including provision for background checks;

(C) health and safety requirements;

(D) parental rights and opportunities for involvement; and

(E) necessary support services (including, but not limited to, health, nutrition, and social services).

(2) The National Advisory Committee may submit to the Secretary and to the Congress such additional comments on the final recommended standards published pursuant to subsection (c) as the National Advisory Committee considers appropriate and may provide to a State Advisory Committee (established or designated pursuant to section 3), upon its request, such information and advice as the National Advisory Committee considers appropriate.

(c) Not later than thirty days after the National Advisory Committee submits such proposed recommended standards, the Secretary shall publish them in the Federal Register, along with any comments or modifications proposed by the Secretary and, not later than one hundred and eighty days after such publication and, after completion of a process of not less than sixty days for notice and opportunity for public comment and after consulting further with the National Advisory Committee, shall issue final recommended standards and publish them in the Federal Register along with any additional comments that the National Advisory Committee considers appropriate.

(d) The National Advisory Committee shall cease to exist ninety days after the date of publication by the Secretary of the final recommended standards.

(e) Each member of the National Advisory Committee who is not an officer or employee of the United States Government shall be paid compensation at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the rate of basic pay in effect for level IV of the Executive Schedule for each day the member is engaged in the performance of the duties of such Committee and, while so serving away from his or her home or regular place of business, be paid per diem, travel, and transportation expenses in the same manner as provided for under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code.

(f) The Secretary shall make available to the National Advisory Committee such personnel, technical assistance, and funds as are necessary for it to carry out effectively its functions under this section.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 5. The Secretary is authorized to—

(1) establish such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act; and

(2) make payments in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

By Mr. LEVIN (for himself and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 19. A bill to allow State Governors to file petitions for action under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 301 OF THE TRADE ACT

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to make clear that the workers and businesses of this country can petition through their State Governors to have the U.S. Trade Representative initiate an investigation under section 301 of the Trade Act of unfair trade practices by another country.

Late last year, the USTR denied a petition by Governor Blanchard of Michigan that the USTR initiate an investigation of Canada's discriminatory automotive duty remission programs. The Governor made persuasive arguments that these programs put the American auto-parts producers and workers at an unfair competitive disadvantage.

The USTR denied this petition, one of the grounds being that the Governor of Michigan lacked standing to file a 301 petition.

The legislation that I am introducing today is necessary for two reasons. First, the law itself and the regulations that are based on it are silent on whether the Governor of a State has standing to file a 301 petition. The statute refers to "any interested person." The regulations offer a number of examples along with the general definition which refers to "any person representing a significant economic interest affected * * * by the act, policy or practice complained of in the petition." It is clear to me that the Governor who represents the people of a State which includes an industry that is vital to that State's economic well-being "represents a significant economic interest affected" by an unfair foreign trade practice. Unfortunately, since the USTR has not interpreted the statute in that way, a congressional clarification is necessary. The legislation which I am introducing today will provide that clarification.

Second, this legislation is necessary as a matter of basic fairness. It does not seek to impose a decision upon the USTR with respect to the substantive merits of the petition. What it does, however, is to give workers and businesses the right to be heard through their State Governors in defense of their economic interests. This legislation allows the Governors to get their feet in the door at the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative on behalf of workers and businesses, instead of having that door slammed in their faces. This step in the direction of fair trade should be taken early in this new Congress, and I urge my colleagues to give it their support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That paragraph (1) of section 302(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2412(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "(including the Governor of any State)" after "interested person".●

S. 20. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to strengthen the protections available to Federal employees against prohibited personnel practices, and for other purposes; read the first time.

WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, last fall, the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1988 was unanimously approved by both Houses of Congress with a clear commitment from the Office of Management and Budget that the bill had the administration's support. On October 27, 1988, the administration reneged on this commitment, and the President pocket-vetoed the bill.

This veto violated the basic understanding that we in Congress need to make the legislative process work—that is, the confidence that an administration's word is good when it commits itself to support a bill. Simply put, there is no way that we in the Congress can negotiate with, and address the concerns of, the executive branch unless we have confidence that the President's designated negotiators actually speak for the administration.

The veto of the whistleblower bill also struck a blow against good government by denying much-needed protection to Federal employees who step forward, at the risk of their jobs, to expose waste, fraud, or gross mismanagement in their agencies. Earlier this month, the outgoing administration submitted draft legislation which would not only gut the bipartisan compromise passed unanimously by the House and Senate with the administration's approval last fall, but would go so far as to seriously undermine existing laws protecting whistleblowers.

Needless to say, this extraordinary antiwhistleblower proposal does not even merit serious discussion. We can only hope that the incoming administration will be more sincere in its commitment to assist whistleblowers in their efforts to root out waste and mismanagement.

Because Congress was out of session and did not have an opportunity to act on the veto last year, I am today reintroducing the Whistleblower Protective Act as it was agreed to by the Office of Management and Budget, unanimously approved by both Houses of Congress, and pocket-vetoed. I am hopeful that this bill will be quickly approved by both Houses of Congress and that President Bush will see the merits in this legislation and sign this bill into law.

I am pleased that the cosponsors of last year's bill—Senators GRASSLEY, PRYOR, COHEN, NUNN, METZENBAUM, RIEGLE, SARBANES, DURENBERGER, ADAMS, BURDICK, MOYNIHAN, BOREN, MITCHELL, MATSUNAGA, WIRTH, DECONCINI, and KENNEDY, have agreed to sponsor the bill again this year.

I am also pleased to announce six new sponsors of the bill from the Governmental Affairs Committee, which approved the bill without dissenting vote in markup last spring. The new sponsors are Senators GLENN, ROTH, SASSER, BINGAMAN, KOHL, and LIEBERMAN.

Mr. President, whistleblowers serve as an important check on fraud and waste in our Government programs by identifying potential problems and abuses at an early stage. It is worth noting, for example, that the "Ill Wind" investigation of procurement fraud at the Pentagon was reportedly triggered by the complaints of a whistleblower—in this case, a former Federal employee. All too frequently, however, Federal employee whistleblowers appears to have been punished, rather than rewarded, for their efforts to save the taxpayer's money.

Congress recognized its responsibility to protect whistleblowers in 1978 by passing the Civil Service Reform Act, which created the Office of Special Counsel and the Merit Systems Protection Board to investigate and handle hearings and appeals involving retaliation for whistleblowing by Federal employees and other prohibited personnel practices.

Since 1978, however, it has become clear that the Civil Service Reform Act did not go far enough in its protection for whistleblowers. Despite the enactment of this bill, two separate surveys in 1980 and 1983 found that an astonishing 70 percent of the Federal employees with knowledge of fraud, waste, and abuse did not report it and that the percentage of employees who did not report government wrongdoing because of fear of reprisal rose dramatically from 20 percent in 1980 to 37 percent in 1983. These statistics are a clear sign that the system has not worked as intended and needs to be improved.

The Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989 is a carefully balanced response to this longstanding problem. It is the product of months of discussions with the Office of Management and Budget, the Justice Department, the Office of Personnel Management, the Office of Special Counsel, and the Merit Systems Protection Board.

In the course of these discussions, we agreed to modify numerous provisions of the bill in response to concerns raised by the administration. As a result, changes were made to the purposes section of the bill, the powers and duties of the Office of Special Counsel, timetables for investigations, restrictions on information that may be provided to whistleblowers and to others about investigations of whistleblowers' complaints, the right of the Office of Personnel Management and the Office of Special Counsel and other Federal agencies to participate in litigation of whistleblowers' complaints, the proper venue for appeals, and the proper parties to appeals. As with any good compromise, the administration made concessions, too.

Near the close of the lengthy negotiations, I met personally with the Acting Director of OMB, and we worked out a compromise on the so-called Mount Healthy issue, which we understood to be the administration's sole remaining concern with the bill. Following this meeting, the Office of Management and Budget advised my staff that this compromise was acceptable. The bill was then unanimously passed by both Houses of Congress and sent to the President for signature.

At that time, we had every indication—including a letter from the Acting Director of OMB that was introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—that the administration would support enhanced protection for whistleblowers. Instead, the bill was vetoed.

Three reasons were given for the veto of the bill.

First, the argument was made that the bill established too lenient a standard for proving retaliation against a whistleblower—the so-called Mount Healthy provision of the bill. This provision was the subject of months of direct negotiations between representatives of the administration and my staff. Compromise language was expressly agreed to by the Acting Director of OMB. Even the legislative history of this provision—as presented in a joint explanatory statement of Senate and House managers of the bill and in my own statement on the bill—was expressly agreed to by the administration.

After such extensive negotiations and such a well-balanced and reasonable outcome, we should not compromise further on this issue. The Mount Healthy provision in this bill has been drafted to avoid any implication that protection is to be afforded to employees who are not genuine whistleblowers. We have made it crystal clear that a personnel action must be upheld—even against a genuine whistleblower—if an agency can demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that it would have taken the same action against the employee regardless of the whistleblowing.

At the same time, however, we must not be so concerned about protecting management's rights that we fail to satisfactorily and fairly protect the whistleblowers. These are the employees who are on the front line in the struggle to save our tax dollars from waste and mismanagement. These are the people who put their jobs on the line to speak up for the public interest. Whistleblowers both need and deserve the protections provided in this bill. The efforts of a Federal employee to expose fraud, waste, or mismanagement in the Government should never be a factor in a personnel action against that employee. That is the important proposition for which this bill stands.

Second, the argument in support of the veto was made that the bill creates "serious constitutional concerns" by limiting the President's power to remove the special counsel from office.

Remarkably, the "good cause" removal provision in this bill which was singled out by the administration for criticism is exactly the same provision in current law. Our bill only restates current law. Moreover, the administration's argument that the President must have unfettered discretion to remove all appointees at will was squarely rejected by the Supreme Court in the Independent Counsel case (Morrison v. Olson, 108 S. Ct. 2597 (1988)) issued less than a year ago. Perhaps for these reasons, the administration—including the Justice Department—did not raise any objection to the inclusion of this provision in numerous compromise proposals and counterproposals leading up to the final passage of the bill last fall.

Finally, the argument was made in the veto message that by authorizing the special counsel to obtain judicial review of adverse decisions, the bill would unconstitutionally permit the executive branch to "litigate against itself." Here again, the administration raised no objection to the inclusion of this provision in numerous compromise proposals and counterproposals discussed with the House and Senate last summer and fall.

More importantly, however, the argument that it is unconstitutional for the courts to resolve a dispute between two Federal agencies has been squarely rejected by the Supreme Court since the seminal case of United States v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 337 U.S. 426 (1949). In fact, the Federal Labor Relations Authority is authorized to litigate against other Federal agencies and routinely does so. Recent cases of this nature include Department of Treasury v. FLRA, 837 F.2d 1163 (D.C. Cir. 1988), Department of Health and Human Services v. FLRA, 833 F.2d 1129 (4th Cir. 1987), and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (S. Ct. 1983).

It now appears that these so-called constitutional arguments were a mere smokescreen for the administration's outright hostility to Federal employee whistleblowers. This hostility finds harsh emphasis in the extraordinary antiwhistleblower proposal sent to the Congress by the outgoing administration earlier this month.

The administration proposal would deprive the Office of Special Counsel—the primary whistleblower protection agency in the Government—of the independent status granted to it under current law. More than that, it would also deprive the Merit Systems Protection Board—the agency that hears whistleblower complaints—of its independence under current law. Further, the proposal would eliminate provisions in current law which give the courts power to compel testimony by Federal agencies and employees in whistleblower cases tried by the MSPB. This remarkable provision would enable Federal employees to defy Board subpoenas without any recourse by the whistleblower or OSC.

In more than 30 key provisions, the outgoing administration retreated from the bipartisan compromise bill it agreed to last October. Many of these proposed changes reflect a deep-seated antipathy to the interests of whistleblowers. For example, the administration proposal would:

Delete a requirement that the special counsel act in the interests of whistleblowers who seek its assistance;

Delete a requirement that the special counsel treat communications from whistleblowers with confidentiality;

Permit the special counsel to intervene in MSPB cases against whistleblowers;

Delete provisions authorizing the MSPB to protect witnesses from harassment and authorizing whistleblowers to petition for sanctions against agency officials who fail to comply with Board orders;

Make it much more difficult for whistleblowers to prove that they have been retaliated against and make it easier for agencies to prevail even in cases where they have taken retaliatory action;

Delete provisions requiring the special counsel to notify whistleblowers of the status of their cases and to inform them of facts that support their allegations; and

Leave whistleblowers with no independent recourse against retaliation through unfavorable performance ratings, decisions concerning pay, benefits, awards, education and training, as well as most unfavorable transfers, details, reassignments, and changes in duties and responsibilities.

In sum, Mr. President, the outgoing administration has not only reneged on its compromise with the Congress to enhance whistleblower protections, but with its proposed legislation, it has sought to undermine important whistleblower safeguards that have already been enacted into law.

Mr. President, the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989 which I am introducing today along with Senator GRASSLEY is an important and balanced bill which was negotiated on a bipartisan basis. As unanimously passed by the 100th Congress, and as introduced today, this bill would:

Significantly enhance the authorities and responsibilities of the OSC to protect whistleblowers and other employees victimized by prohibited personnel practices;

Ensure that employees seeking the assistance of the OSC are kept informed of the status of their cases, are assured of confidentiality in their communications with OSC, and are protected from any use in any other proceeding of a decision by OSC to terminate an investigation;

Authorize whistleblowers for the first time to appeal their own cases directly to the Merit Systems Protection Board if the Office of Special Counsel fails to act on their behalf; and Remove certain factors which unfairly impede the ability of the special counsel or an employee to prove that a retaliatory action has been taken in a whistleblowing case.

This bill provides substantial improvements in the laws protecting Federal employee whistleblowers, and I am pleased that it has achieved broad bipartisan support. Protecting whistleblowers is one of the simplest and one of the most effective means available to us to reduce the cost and improve the functioning of our Federal Government. If we are going to achieve a more honest and efficient government, it is essential that we restore confidence in Federal employees that their government will respond in an ethical and responsible manner whenever they disclose wrongdoing.

Once again, I would like to thank my cosponsors for their support of this bill. And, I hope we can send this bill to President Bush for his signature as one of our first orders of business in this Congress.●

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I join Senator LEVIN today in introducing the Whistleblower Protection Act. We're back with this legislation in the 101st Congress, and this time, we're going to make it stick.

Congress passed this bill last fall, after extensive discussions with members of the Reagan administration. But in spite of the compromise we worked out, this bill fell victim to President Reagan's pocket veto.

Whistleblowers are a very important part of Government operations. By exposing waste, fraud, and abuse, they work to keep Government honest and efficient. And for their loyalty, they are often penalized—they get fired, demoted, and harassed.

We need stronger protections for whistleblowers. Under the current system, the vast majority of employees choose not to disclose the wrongdoing they see. They are afraid of reprisals and the result is a gross waste of taxpayers' dollars. Government employers should not be allowed to coverup their misdeeds by creating such a hostile environment.

I am hopeful that President Bush will demonstrate a greater commitment to protecting whistleblowers. And support for this legislation is a great starting place.

The bill strengthens the Office of Special Counsel. Currently, OSC turns away almost all whistleblower cases without correcting the discipline imposed on the employee. Under our bill, the mission of OSC would be "to protect Government employees, especially whistleblowers."

And the bill eases the employee's burden of proving retaliation for whistleblowing. In addition, the employer would be required to justify the discipline based upon reasons other than the whistleblowing activity.

The bill we are introducing today is the product of significant compromises made during the last Congress. We worked with various members of the administration to meet their concerns. I hope we can pass this bill swiftly so that the Congress and President Bush can send a strong message to the Federal sector: First, to the vast majority of professional career Government employees—a thank you for the important contribution they make; second, to the whistleblowers in particular—a recognition of their role in the efficient operation of our democratic Government; and third, to those few who abuse the public trust—a warning that their activity will not be tolerated any longer.

Mr. President, as we begin the tough budget decisions, we must utilize every resource available to combat fraud. Whistleblowers provide us with great opportunities to uncover and pare Government waste. Let's not penalize them for the public service they perform.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am pleased to be joining Senators LEVIN and GRASSLEY in co-sponsoring the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989. I would like to commend Senators LEVIN and GRASSLEY for their work on this difficult issue. The bill being introduced today was passed unanimously by both Houses of Congress last November and was then pocket vetoed by the President. Passage of this legislation was a victory for Federal workers who have blown the whistle on Government fraud and waste, and have been persecuted for their honesty. These whistleblowers have come under attack over the past 8 years and have not received the protection that they deserve. The veto of this bill simply continued that treatment.

This bill will substantially improve the protections available to whistleblowers. This legislation will enable the Office of the Special Counsel to more vigorously protect employees and prosecute those managers who retaliate against whistleblowers. However, as has been demonstrated in hearings held by the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office and Civil Service in the 100th Congress, this legislation will only benefit employees if the Office of Special Counsel works to help and defend whistleblowers. Congress is concerned about the manner in which the Office of Special Counsel employs its resources and will continue its oversight in this area.

This legislation will alter the current Mount Healthy test and replace it with a standard which will require the agency to prove by clear and convincing evidence that it would have taken the personnel action even if the whistleblowing activity had not occurred. Currently, agencies only have to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the personnel action would have occurred. This change will significantly heighten the standard of proof required from the agency. I am hopeful that this will improve the Office of Special Counsel's ability to protect whistleblowers from unwarranted adverse personnel actions.

The bill will also provide interim relief to those whistleblowers who receive a favorable decision at the Merit Systems Protection Board [MSPB] regional level. This change will ensure that an employee does not suffer undue hardship waiting for a final decision from the MSPB. The bill also includes a transfer preference for whistleblowers to help them move to a new job if their relationship with management deteriorates as a result of their whistleblowing activity. This preference will only apply to whistleblowers who prevail before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill addresses many of the concerns that have been raised about current statutory whistleblower provisions. With the assistance of a vigilant Office of Special Counsel, whistleblowers will be better protected from retaliation and able to expose fraud, waste and abuse without fear for their jobs.●

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989, I rise in support of this important legislation upon its introduction today. This bill, like its predecessor in the 100th Congress (S. 508), is designed to strengthen the protections available to Federal employees who blow the whistle on waste and fraud in Federal programs and enhance the authorities and responsibilities of the Office of Special Counsel to protect those Federal employees.

The Office of Special Counsel was created in 1978 as part of the Merit Systems Protection Board [MSPB] to investigate prohibited personnel practices and when appropriate, seek corrective action on behalf of the wronged employee before the Board. For much of its existence, this office has been severely criticized for failing to meet its statutory mandate. In order to encourage Federal employees to continue to report waste and fraud, thereby saving thousands of dollars in taxpayer money, we must send a signal that the system will treat these employees fairly. This bill sends the right signal by establishing the Office of Special Counsel as an independent agency and by clarifying in civil service law that its primary purpose is to protect employees, especially whistleblowers.

Other important provisions of the bill would:

Prohibit the Special Counsel from revealing information to an agency which had been disclosed in confidence by a whistleblower to the Special Counsel;

For the first time, authorize whistleblowers to appeal their own cases directly to the MSPB if the Office of Special Counsel fails to act on their behalf; and Amend present civil service law to simplify the burden on the Special Counsel or an employee to show unlawful retaliatory action for whistleblowing and to establish that any personnel action against an alleged whistleblower must be justified by an agency with reasons other than the disclosure of waste and fraud.

During the 100th Congress, the Governmental Affairs Committee reported and Congress passed without dissent a whistleblower protection bill with similar provisions (S. 508). OMB Director Joseph R. Wright, Jr. served as the administration's liaison with Congress on that bill. President Reagan pocket-vetoed the measure despite Mr. Wright's assurances at the time of final congressional approval that the administration would support the bill.

As chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, I believe that President Reagan's pocket-veto of this sound legislation was unjustified and perhaps will serve to discourage Federal employees from coming forward. In 1984, the MSPB estimated that 70 percent of Government waste and illegality goes unreported, in part because those Federal employees who personally observe it fear reprisal if they do report.

I hope the Bush admininstration will recognize the importance of this problem for the Federal Government and work responsibly with Congress to correct it. This will require that the Bush administration's communications with Congress, and especially the Governmental Affairs Committee, on this issue be coordinated among the agencies and fully reflect the President's policy. The committee has been assured by Mr. Richard Darman, the nominee for OMB Director, that this will be done during the 101st Congress.

I urge my colleagues to give this bill their full support.●

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to cosponsor the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989. Good faith whistleblowers—Federal workers who disclose mismanagement, waste, abuse, illegality, or threats to public health—deserve the strengthened procedural protections this bill provides.

The necessity of this legislation has been obvious for at least 5 years. But it has yet to be enacted. In the 100th Congress, both the Senate and the House managed to pass this measure. Its passage was the result of protracted negotiations between the House, the Senate, and the Reagan administration in which a variety of disagreements were supposedly ironed-out. In the end, however, despite assurances to the contrary, President Reagan pocket vetoed this measure. Given the circumstances of the veto, and the explicit need to strengthen the laws that protect whistleblowers, the President's veto was most disappointing. The veto sent exactly the wrong message to Federal employees who witness and wish to report fraud, mismanagement and corruption in Government agencies. It told them not to bother, and that they won't be given meaningful protection if they do come forth.

Indeed, for too many years now, Federal employee whistleblowers have been treated shabbily. Too many have paid a personal price for the millions of dollars they have saved the Government. They have lost their jobs, derailed promising careers or forfeited promotions as the price for calling the public's attention to what they see as wasteful Government spending, illegal activity or hazardous conditions. Too often, instead of being rewarded for their efforts, whistleblowers appear to have been punished. They have suffered retaliation simply for upholding the public trust. Such treatment is unfortunate and we must move now to correct it. Most importantly, we must insure that those Federal employees who disclose wrongdoing are confident that their efforts will not be met by indifference or worse.

One of the goals of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 was to strengthen protection for whistleblowers. The law created categories of illegal retaliation known as prohibited personnel practices. It also established the Office of Special Counsel to investigate employees' allegations of retaliation and to litigate on their behalf before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

However, since its creation, the Office of Special Counsel has turned down 99 percent of the whistleblower cases brought to it without attempting disciplinary or corrective action. Between 1981 and 1986, the total number of requests issued by the counsel for stays, or injunctive relief, was approximately the same as in one previous year, 1980.

Indeed, further evidence suggest that rather than strengthening protection for legitimate whistleblowers, the 1978 reform act did little to augment employee confidence in their ability to speak out. Comparing the results of the 1980 and 1983 Merit Systems Protection Board surveys reveals that, in terms of employee confidence, freedom of speech actually declined during this period. In 1980, 19 percent of the employees who witnessed significant misconduct cited fear of reprisal as the reason for remaining silent. By 1983 the figure was 37 percent—what the Merit Systems Protection Board called a significant increase in fear of reprisal.

This bill thus contains several urgently needed protective measures for whistleblowers. As a whole, it significantly improves the protections available to good faith whistleblowers by simplifying the advocacy process, granting increased confidentiality, and mandating specific and rather strict timetables for Office of Special Counsel actions.

It establishes the Office of Special Counsel as an independent agency, separate from the Merit Systems Protection Board and clarifies the Office of Special Counsel's role by establishing that the role of the Special Counsel is to act in the interest of employees seeking assistance.

The bill also provides that Federal employees alleging reprisal for whistleblowing may take their own cases to the Merit Systems Protection Board if the Special Counsel fails to act within 90 days. Moreover, this measure ensures that alleged whistleblowers are kept informed of the status of their cases on a continuous basis and improves the confidentiality between the Office of Special Counsel and employees by prohibiting the special counsel, with certain exceptions, from providing any information on employees who seek corrective action.

It also requires that agencies pay attorney's fees if an employee wins a case against them, expands the definition of prohibited personnel practices to protect those who aid whistleblowers, and requires that a given agency investigate the disclosure of waste, fraud and abuse if the disclosure has a substantial likelihood of being valid.

Mr. President, I believe that this legislation represents a significant improvement over current law, If we are to ask Federal employees to blow the whistle on management abuses and corruption, we have an obligation to ensure that those who do are supported and treated fairly. Good faith whistleblowers represent the highest ideal of public service and embody the American tradition of individuals challenging Government abuses of power. I am hopeful that this bill will encourage good faith whistleblowers by making it clear that their efforts will be protected—just as their courage and integrity will be applauded.●

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of the Whistleblower Protection Act being reintroduced by my friend and distinguished colleague from Michigan. I am proud to add my name as an original cosponsor of this urgently needed legislation.

This is identical to the bill that Congress enacted last fall. It had been introduced in both Houses in 1987, with bipartisan support. During the lengthy consideration of S. 508 in the 100th Congress, Senator LEVIN and members of the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office and Civil Service worked diligently with the administration to settle differences over the legislation. Members of Congress from both parties voted unanimously to pass the Senate version of the bill, as amended. We did so on the strength of representations that the Department of Justice, and the Office of Management and Budget, were agreeable to the compromises worked out.

But to our amazement, the bill was pocket vetoed after we adjourned last October, on the grounds that fresh concerns had arisen within the executive branch. This about-face was rightfully met with expressions of disappointment on both sides of the aisle, here and in the House.

We can now underscore that concern by acting expeditiously to return this well-considered measure to the White House. That will provide an opportunity to honor last year's commitment. We hope this chance will be seized by the new administration.

I think the need for this legislation was demonstrated to all of us last session. The record of enforcement of whistleblower protection up to now speaks eloquently in support of this bill.

Surveys by the Merit Systems Protection Board showed that 60 percent of employees observed waste, fraud, or mismanagement but remained silent, out of a sense of resignation that nothing would be done. And up to 37 percent of those who witnessed abuses stated that they refrained from reporting them specifically for fear of reprisal.

Those fears, sad to say, have been well founded. When the Merit Systems Protection Board was created in 1978, as part of the reorganization of the civil service, the Office of Special Counsel was instituted at the Board to investigate prohibited personnel practices and other civil service law violations. The Special Counsel was also to protect employees from agency reprisal, including whistleblowers who disclose waste, fraud, and abuse.

Yet, the Special Counsel adopted a policy of protecting the civil service system against employees, rather than the other way around. The Special Counsel's Office in fact, openly admitted its reluctance even to file a complaint on an employee's behalf unless there is substantial certainty that evidence will support the allegation. Thus, rather than investigating allegations, the Special Counsel in effect placed the onus on the employee to prove his case at the outset.

Such deterrents to open disclosure of agency wrongdoing were compounded by agency retaliations against employees who blew the whistle. In fact, up to 99 percent of alleged reprisal cases were closed by the Special Counsel's Office without further disciplinary or corrective action against the agency.

That is the intolerable situation we seek to correct. The Whistleblower Protection Act will achieve this through several key provisions.

First, it will establish the Office of Special Counsel as an independent agency, outside the Merit Systems Protections Board. The bill clarifies that the Special Counsel's primary obligation is the protection of individual employees.

In contrast with existing practice, if the Special Counsel declines to take further action on an employee complaint, the employee under this bill may appeal directly to the Merit Systems Protection Board. The bill does specify, however, that only whistleblowers may take such an independent appeal, rather than any and all disaffected employees. That clarification, by the way, is one of those which was added to last year's bill at the administration's request.

In cases where attempted agency reprisals are alleged, the agency may still prove as an affirmative defense that an adverse personnel action would have been taken even in the absense of an employee disclosure. However, the present bill modifies the Supreme Court's standard in the Mount Healthy decision, and requires that the agency establish its defense by "clear and convincing" evidence, rather than by a mere preponderance of the evidence.

In addition, should the Office of Special Counsel determine that there is not substantial validity to an employee complaint, the Special Counsel may not disclose to the agency the information provided by the employee without the latter's consent. This will go far toward correcting the prior experience, whereby the special counsel seemed far more interested in helping the agency build its case against the employee than in helping to investigate and substantiate the employee's own allegations.

I reiterate, Mr. President, that the bill introduced today reflects the very compromises worked out with executive agencies, when this legislation was passed overwhelmingly in last year's session. We look forward to the new administration's cooperation in promptly ratifying the agreement already achieved, with so much effort.

At a time of ever-heightened concern over the Federal budget and the need to reduce waste and fraud, Federal employees with the conscience to come forward deserve our help. And the bill we introduce today deserves the renewed support of all in this Chamber, which embraced the legislation unanimously last fall.●

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise as an original cosponsor and a strong supporter of the Whistleblower Protection Act, introduced today by Senator LEVIN, Senator GRASSLEY, and others. Both Houses of Congress unanimously passed this legislation last term. Regrettably, we must revisit this issue in the 101st Congress because President Reagan, despite representations to the contrary from administration officials, turned his back on Congress and ignored the needs of Federal workers by pocket vetoing the bill.

The Civil Service Reform Act created the Merit Systems Protection Board and the Office of Special Counsel. That act protects Federal employees from reprisals when they disclose Government wrongdoing or fraud. But instead of protecting Federal whistleblowers, the Office of Special Counsel has turned the act on its head.

Federal employees increasingly are afraid to come forward with information about Government fraud, waste, and abuse. Those, who do come forward, do not get relief from the Office of Special Counsel. Coming forward merely marks them as whistleblowers and targets them for reprisal.

The Whistleblower Protection Act corrects the problem. It establishes an independent Office of Special Counsel and makes clear that the primary purpose of the Office is to protect Federal employees from prohibited personnel practices. The bill gives real teeth to the promise of the Civil Service Reform Act by ordering the Office of Special Counsel to act for Federal whistleblowers instead of against them.

I applaud Senators LEVIN and GRASSLEY for their leadership on this issue. I know they share my belief that whistleblowers who uncover wrongdoing and help us enforce the law should be honored as heroes.

My concern for whistleblowers is not limited to civil service employees. Today, I introduced the Major Fraud Act Amendments of 1989 to provide a financial incentive to whistleblowers who furnish information leading to the conviction of contractors for major fraud against the United States. Next month, I will introduce a comprehensive antireprisal package to protect private sector whistleblowers who disclose unlawful practices that threaten the public health and safety. I believe we can move quickly on these three bills—the Whistleblower Protection Act for civil service employees, the Major Fraud Act Amendments for Government contractor whistleblowers, and the antireprisal package for private sector employees. I urge my colleagues to join in this bipartisan effort to protect our citizens who dare to tell the truth about wrongful, unlawful, or dangerous practices.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator LEVIN and my other colleagues by cosponsoring the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989. I believe that in light of the recent procurement problems at the Defense Department and the historic problem of waste and fraud in Government, that a stronger Whistleblower Protection Act is needed to help to alleviate these very serious problems.

Mr. President, as we all know by now, the previous attempt to pass a whistleblower protection bill was pocket vetoed by President Reagan in November of last year. At that time the administration expressed a concern that portions of the bill did not pass constitutional muster and that the reduced burden of proof that whistleblowers were required to show would present numerous administrative and legal problems. In light of these concerns, I want to express my willingness to engage in dialog with the new administration regarding those areas where we may disagree in the hope of ultimately passing a bipartisan whistleblower protection bill.

Mr. President, passage of the bill would strengthen the procedural protections available to Federal employees who blow the whistle on waste and fraud in Federal programs. During my service in Congress, I have learned first hand, that the problem of waste and fraud in Government is widespread and pervasive. The Whistleblower Protection Act is needed to reduce unnecessary and wasteful Government spending by encouraging and protecting Federal employees who report waste, fraud, and abuse. Many Federal employees are reluctant to report wrongdoing for fear of reprisal. I believe that in order to have an effective whistleblower law we must encourage and protect those employees who decide to blow the whistle on waste and fraud in Government. I believe that this bill goes a long way toward accomplishing that goal.

Mr. President, passage of this bill would protect Federal employees who report waste, fraud, and abuse by enhancing the role of the Office of Special Counsel [OSC] in protecting the employee by making this Office an independent agency, separate from the Merit System Protection Board [MSPB]. The bill also clarifies the purpose of the OSC by establishing that its primary role is the protection of employees, especially whistleblowers. The bill adds an important additional right for an employee to pursue a claim independent of the OSC.

The legislation that is before us today retains the core provisions of the original bill, but does make several substantive and technical changes to the legislation which help to strengthen the law. For example, the legislation provides the MSPB the authority to grant protective orders to protect a witness or other individual from harassment. The bill also facilitates the ability of a whistleblower to prove a prima-facie case of retaliation and at the same time raises the level of proof required for an agency to meet in defending its actions.

Mr. President, passage of this bill is needed to restore the faith of conscientious Federal employees in the fairness and integrity of our Federal service. Additionally, I believe that the act will contribute substantially to our efforts to eliminate the massive and perplexing problem of Government waste and fraud. A central component to eliminating waste is the ability of our Federal workers to exercise their civic duty and report any wrongdoing that they observe in the workplace. But we are fooling ourselves if we believe that this can occur without having adequate protections in place that will protect those employees who risk their jobs and careers to expose the problems of waste and fraud.●

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 21. A bill to provide the President with line-item veto authority; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

LINE-ITEM VETO

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, between 1980 and 1988 Federal revenues jumped 76 percent, but Federal spending grew at a faster rate. The Office of Management and Budget estimates that between 1989 and 1994, Federal revenues will jump $370 billion. I believe the source of our budget problem is not that America is undertaxed, but that the Federal Government spends too much. It is critical for the Federal Government to restrain spending growth. And I strongly believe that providing the President of the United States with line-item veto authority will help keep Federal spending down.

The legislation that I introduce today to provide the President with line-item veto authority is, in my opinion, an improvement over other options that have been offered. It is first and foremost simple legislation, not a constitutional amendment that would require two-thirds majorities in both Houses plus a lengthy ratification process to secure the approval of legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

Second, it works as simply as a constitutional amendment. It would allow the President to select specific provisions to veto. That veto would, as a practical matter, require two-thirds majorities in both Houses to override—the same as for a traditional veto of a bill.

Third, the legislation I have introduced is constitutional. It does not interfere with the constitutional process governing the enactment of legislation. Rather, my proposal envisions the interaction of three separate pieces of legislation: The bill creating the budget authority, the legislation I am introducing to empower the President to rescind budget authority that has just been enacted, and legislation that Congress might pass to overturn the President's exercise of his authority. Since the President would surely veto any legislation Congress would enact to overturn his line-item rescission, a two-thirds majority in both Houses would be necessary to revive the vetoed budget authority.

The net result is that the President is given line-item veto authority on the same terms that he has constitutional authority to veto legislation in its entirety. This is as it should be. Line-item veto authority is not novel. It is a prerogative enjoyed by 43 Governors in over 50 States. It is an indispensable tool in achieving the level of fiscal discipline which we sorely lack.●

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 22. A bill to prohibit all United States military and economic assistance for Turkey until the Turkish Government takes certain actions to resolve the Cyprus problem; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROHIBITION ON MILITARY AND ECONOMIC AID TO TURKEY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, Turkey invaded Cyprus in 1974. Occupying forces of Turkey still control a large area of northern Cyprus, where they support the illegal Denktash regime. More than 1,600 Greek Cypriots and 5 American citizens who were captured by the Turks in 1974 still are missing and unaccounted for.

It is unfortunate, Mr. President, that the Government of the United States has been implicated, at least indirectly, in the continuing illegal Turkish occupation of Cyprus. The United States is the major supplier of Turkish military equipment. That equipment was illegally used in the 1974 invasion and continues to be used today to enforce Turkish control of northern Cyprus.

The United Nations has managed to initiate a series of discussions between Rauf Denktash, leader of the self-proclaimed breakaway territory, and the President of Cyprus, George Vassiliou. These talks have not resulted in progress toward a peaceful reconciliation. The political and military stalemate still exists.

Mr. President, it is time to put aside patience and forbearance in this matter. Soviet troops are leaving Afghanistan. Cuban troops are leaving Angola. Vietnamese troops are leaving Cambodia. Yet, illegal Turkish troops and colonists remain in Cyprus. Fifteen years of Turkish occupation of over one-third of Cyprus must be brought to an end, and the United States and NATO have an obligation to contribute to a resolution of this problem.

Therefore, today I am introducing a bill to prohibit any military or economic assistance to Turkey until certain conditions are met. All U.S. aid would be prohibited until the President certifies that:

First, all Turkish military forces and illegal Turkish colonists are withdrawn from Cyprus;

Second, the formerly Greek Cypriot-occupied area of Famagusta-Varosha has been returned to the Government of Cyprus for the immediate resettlement of refugees;

Third, the negotiations under United Nations auspices have achieved significant progress toward genuine democracy in Cyprus based on majority rule, the rule of law, and the protection of minority rights;

Fourth, Turkey has released the Americans and Greek Cypriots abducted by the Turkish invaders in 1974;

Fifth, Turkey has withdrawn recognition of the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus; and Sixth, Turkey has taken the necessary steps to reverse the illegal declaration of an independent state in northern Cyprus.

Mr. President, I recognize that this is tough legislation. It is deliberately meant to be tough. We have tried other legislative formulas in the past. They have not worked. The UN-sponsored discussions have resulted in no concrete progress. Those talks are likely to continue to drag on, punctuated now and then by propagandistic displays of movement synchronized with the foreign assistance legislative calendar here in Congress. It is time for us to stop being led around on this issue by a recalcitrant ally. It is time for us to display courage in defending the principles of democracy as applied to Cyprus.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 22

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no military or economic assistance may be provided under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, or any other law, for Turkey, and that no credits may be extended and no guarantees may be issued under the Arms Export Control Act for Turkey, until the President certifies to the Congress that—

(1) all Turkish military forces, in excess of those permitted by the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee, and all illegal Turkish colonists are withdrawn from Cyprus; and

(2) the Government of Turkey has returned to the Government of Cyprus under the auspices of the United Nations the formerly Greek Cypriot-occupied area of Famagusta/Varosha for the immediate resettlement of refugees; and

(3) the negotiations under United Nations auspices have achieved significant progress towards establishing a constitutional democracy in Cyprus based on majority rule, the rule of law, and the protection of minority rights; and

(4) the Government of Turkey has released and returned the five Americans abducted by the Turkish invasion forces in 1974 and 1,614 Greek Cypriots who have been missing since the Turkish invasion; and

(5) the Government of Turkey has withdrawn its recognition of the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus;" and

(6) the Government of Turkey has taken all necessary steps to reverse the illegal declaration of an independent state in northern Cyprus.

S. 23. A bill to amend title X of the Public Health Act to permit family planning projects to offer adoption services; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FAMILY PLANNING PROJECTS ADOPTION SERVICES

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation which would amend title X of the Public Health Service Act to allow family planning clinics to provide, at their discretion, adoption services.

I stress at the outset that the bill does not require family planning projects to offer adoption services. The legislation explicitly provides that projects may offer adoption services based on their assessments of the needs of the community as well as their own budgetary and training restraints.

For too long, our image of family planning has been narrowly focused on the prevention or spacing of pregnancies and limiting family sizes. In reality, family planning means much more. The title X program should reflect it. In my view, it is time to recognize the importance of planning families through adoption. The benefits are obvious for both parents unable to care for children as well as for couples who would otherwise be unable to have a family.

In addition to contraceptive and infertility services, title X grantees provide a variety of services to adolescents. Title X is the largest Federal program dealing with the problem of teenage pregnancy. More than a third of the individuals served by title X are adolescents. Teenagers need accurate and complete information about adoption. Therefore, family planning clinics are the most important place to reach teenagers with information about adoption.

If a young, single woman finds herself pregnant, she may not know much about adoption, and the counselors she encounters may be poorly informed as well. Even if a woman considers adoption, she may dismiss it prematurely as too expensive or too difficult, and instead choose to have an abortion or raise her child out of wedlock. No pregnant woman should ever be coerced into releasing her child for adoption, but she should be allowed to make an informed decision, after considering all available alternatives.

A recent report on teenage pregnancy by the National Research Council stressed the importance of presenting adoption as an option for pregnant adolescents. The report noted the many agencies involved in a teenager's pregnancy—including family planning clinics—and stated that the "fragmentation of needed services may serve as a disincentive for some pregnant teenagers to make adoption plans."

The council's report also included the recommendation that "public agencies, in cooperation with the private sector, explore ways of strengthening adoption services, including, first, improved decision counseling for pregnant teenagers and second, development of effective models for providing comprehensive care to pregnant girls who choose adoption as an alternative to parenthood." This legislation is a much needed start in that direction.

Let me again reiterate that this legislation is written in permissive language only. It is neither my intent nor my desire to force family planning clinics to provide adoption services which they are not able to provide.

This legislation merely clarifies policy regarding adoption services in title X projects. Research has shown that adoption is more likely to be discussed by counselors in a social agency setting than by counselors in a health provider setting. This provision will help to emphasize the role that health care providers can play in discussing and encouraging adoption.

Mr. President, adoption has been called the loving option. I urge my colleagues to support this effort to ensure that adoption does not become the forgotten option because of a lack of information.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 23

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ADOPTION SERVICES.

Section 1001(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300(a)) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentences: "Such projects may also offer adoption services. Any adoption services provided under such projects shall be nondiscriminatory as to race, color, religion, or national origin.".●

By Mr. WALLOP (for himself, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. MURKOWSKI):

S. 24. A bill to clarify that charges and fees may be collected in connection with foreign trade zones at certain small airports; to the Committee on Finance.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR SERVICES AT USER-FEE AIRPORTS

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today along with Senators SIMPSON, STEVENS, and MURKOWSKI, is intended to allow the U.S. Customs Service to be reimbursed for services provided at foreign trade zones at user-fee airports.

As my colleagues may know, user-fee airports were set up under the law in order to allow the Customs Service to put an inspector at the airport, with the proviso that the airport must reimburse the Customs Service for all expenses in connection with the services provided, including the salary, rent and other charges for the Customs inspector. User-fee airports are unique in that they are not at or near a port of entry, as is the case with all other foreign trade zones.

As interpreted by the Customs Service and the Treasury Department, current law prohibits the Customs Service from charging fees at the foreign trade zone at a user-fee airport, thus creating a budgetary problem for the U.S. Customs Service.

While most of the services provided by Customs are done in the trade zone at the airport, the foreign trade zone and the user-fee airport in this instance are being treated as two separate entities. This discrepancy in the interpretation of the statute has created several problems for states with user-fee airport designations. Speaking for my State of Wyoming, this situation has been most taxing—our foreign trade zone application has been pending since early 1986. This long and arduous process finally came to fruition on January 19 when Commerce Secretary Verity signed the application. This approval, however, only gives us a 1-year temporary authority contingent on enacting this legislation.

Mr. President, I cannot begin to stress to you the importance of this foreign trade zone to the economic development of Wyoming. For example, a small company—Inter-Mountain Pipe Co.—has already been established at the airport in anticipation of the foreign trade zone. Also, there are many small businesses in Wyoming, particularly the Wyoming Wool Growers Association, which are interested in expanding their businesses through exports. And, in addition to Wyoming's favorable tax climate, I expect our ability to attract new businesses to grow immensely with this foreign trade zone. More importantly, the main purpose of a foreign trade zone is to provide employment by encouraging activities in the United States which could otherwise be conducted outside this country.

In the last year, Wyoming has made some real progress in its efforts to revitalize the economy. I believe Wyoming's foreign trade zone will greatly assist in furthering that effort along. Foreign trade zones continue to be a positive force for U.S. competitiveness and economic development. Recent figures show that there are 1,409 firms using zone, employing 71,508 people. Their facilities received $30.8 billion in merchandise and exports amounted to $6.57 billion. A number of companies in Wyoming have expressed an interest in using this foreign trade zone.

I find this most encouraging because I believe the numerous advantages offered by the zone will provide even greater incentives to Wyoming businesses to expand, thereby creating the potential for new jobs. The enactment of this legislation will nurture the growth that Wyoming has already accomplished and serve to open overseas markets to our products, and I will work very hard to see it through the 101st Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my legislation be printed in the RECORD in its entirety at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 24

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LIMITATION ON FEES.

Paragraph (2) of section 13031(e) of Public Law 99-272 (19 U.S.C. 58c(e)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "This subsection" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) This subsection", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Subparagraph (C) of paragraph (6) shall not apply with respect to any foreign trade zone or subzone that is located at, or in the vicinity of, an airport to which section 236 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 applies.".

SEC. 2. SMALL AIRPORT CUSTOMS FEES.

Section 236 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 (19 U.S.C. 58b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) For purposes of this section, customs services provided in connection with, or with respect to, any foreign trade zone or subzone that is located at, or in the vicinity of, any airport described in paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) shall be considered to be customs services provided at such airport.".●

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 25. A bill to protect the lives of unborn human beings; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

UNBORN CHILDREN'S CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill which I have introduced in the two prior Congresses. It is entitled, the Unborn Children's Civil Rights Act. If enacted, this bill would take a first step in overcoming the Roe versus Wade decision.

Specifically, this bill would accomplish four things. First, it would put Congress clearly on record as finding that abortion takes the life of an unborn child, that the Constitution sanctions no right to abortion and that Roe versus Wade was erroneously decided. Second, it would prohibit congressional appropriations from being used to pay for or promote abortion. In this regard, it permanently defunds abortion, thereby relieving Congress of annual fights over abortion restrictions in appropriations bills. Third, it would end certain indirect funding for abortion by prohibiting discrimination at federally funded institutions against individuals who object in conscience to abortion and by curtailing attorneys' fees in abortion-related cases. Fourth, it would provide for appeals to the Supreme Court as a right if a Federal court declares State restrictions on abortion unconstitutional. As a practical matter, this provision will assure Supreme Court reconsideration of the abortion issue in the future.

Mr. President, there's the old adage, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." All of us have heard those words but many in our Government have refused to heed them. Only 45 years after thousands of German Jews died at the hands of Hitler's Nazis, we have forgotten the critical lesson of that atrocity—that all human life is sacred regardless of the color, race, religion, or physical or mental capabilities of that human being.

We are today reliving the Holocaust. We know it by a different name. It is called abortion. Yet, the same fate that was met by millions of Jews is being met by millions of unborn children right here in this country. At latest count, over 22 million unborn children—the most innocent of human life—have been murdered.

Abortion has become a tool of convenience, Mr. President. We have slipped so far down the slippery slope that now children are being aborted because they do not have the desired hair color, sex, physical attributes, or mental capabilities. The same excuses for murdering countless Jews are now being used to justify the murder of the most innocent and helpless of humanity.

Mr. President, Roe versus Wade was, simply put, an unconstitutional decision. It has no foundation whatsoever in the text or history of the Constitution. It was invented out of whole cloth. As Justice White said in his dissent, Roe was an exercise in raw judicial power.

How has it endured for 17 long years? Why do we permit some 4,000 unborn babies to perish every day through legalized abortion?

The answer is woefully simple, Mr. President. Even though Roe versus Wade is an unconstitutional decision, Congress has been unwilling to right the wrong—to exercise its powers to check and balance a usurping Supreme Court which has destroyed the right to life of the most defenseless among us. The powers exist, but Congress has nonetheless permitted Roe to stand because many Members of Congress are apparently committed to legalized abortion. These Members share the same antihistorical, secularized, liberal view of law and public order as those Justices who gave us Roe versus Wade in the first place.

In their view—with which I disagree—the Ten Commandments are not the eternal rules of Almighty God which give authority to human law, but the transitory precepts of a bygone age in need of periodic updating by wiser heads here on Earth. Of course, human nature being what it is, there is never any shortage of wiser heads.

Mr. President, for these reasons, Roe versus Wade stands and the holocaust continues. It is not the Constitution or our system of government which is at fault. Ample means exist within them, even apart from a constitutional amendment, to overturn Roe. The fault, on the part of Members of Congress, lies in a failure of intellect to perceive the true nature of abortion and a failure of will to do something about it. These are the ingredients which perpetuate the travesty of Roe versus Wade.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is ever hopeful that, with God's help and human effort, hearts and minds—even in Congress—will change. Enactment of the Unborn Children's Civil Rights Act, certainly would be a step in the right direction. I urge Senators to seek its early enactment.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 25

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Unborn Children's Civil Rights Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) scientific evidence demonstrates that abortion takes the life of an unborn child who is a living human being;

(2) a right to abortion is not secured by the Constitution; and

(3) in the case of Roe v. Wade (410 U.S. 113) and Doe v. Bolton (410 U.S. 179) the United States Supreme Court erred in not recognizing the humanity of the unborn child and the compelling interest of the States in protecting the life of each person before birth.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR ABORTION.

No funds appropriated by the Congress shall be used to take the life of an unborn child, except that such funds may be used only for those medical procedures required to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or her unborn child so long as every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

SEC. 4. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS TO ENCOURAGE OR PROMOTE ABORTION.

No funds appropriated by the Congress shall be used to promote, encourage, counsel for, refer for, pay for (including travel expenses), or do research on any procedure to take the life of an unborn child, except that such funds may be used in connection with only those medical procedures required to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or her unborn child so long as every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

SEC. 5. PROHIBITION ON ENTERING INTO CERTAIN INSURANCE CONTRACTS.

Neither the United States, nor any agency or department thereof shall enter into any contract for insurance that provides for payment or reimbursement for any procedure to take the life of an unborn child, except that the United States, or an agency or department thereof may enter into contracts for payment or reimbursement for only those medical procedures required to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or her unborn child so long as every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

SEC. 6. LIMITATIONS ON RECIPIENTS OF FEDERAL FUNDS.

No institution, organization, or other entity receiving Federal financial assistance shall—

(1) discriminate against any employee, applicant for employment, student, or applicant for admission as a student on the basis of such person's opposition to procedures to take the life of an unborn child or to counseling for or assisting in such procedures;

(2) require any employee or student to participate, directly or indirectly, in a health insurance program which includes procedures to take the life of an unborn child or which provides counseling or referral for such procedures; or

(3) require any employee or student to participate, directly or indirectly, in procedures to take the life of an unborn child or in counseling, referral, or any other administrative arrangements for such procedures.

SEC. 7. LIMITATION ON CERTAIN ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, attorneys' fees shall not be allowable in any civil action involving, directly or indirectly, a law, ordinance, regulation, or rule prohibiting or restricting procedures to take the life of an unborn child.

SEC. 8. APPEALS OF CERTAIN CASES.

Between the first and second paragraphs of section 1252 of title 28, United States Code, insert the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the absence of the United States as a party, should any State or any subdivision of any State enforce or enact a law, ordinance, regulation, or rule prohibiting procedures to take the life of an unborn child, and such law, ordinance, regulation, or rule is declared unconstitutional in an interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of any court of the United States, any party in such a case may appeal such case to the United States Supreme Court, notwithstanding any other provision of law.".●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. WILSON):

S. 26. A bill to make certain supplemental appropriations in order to fully fund the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988; to the Committee on Appropriations.

ANTI-DRUG ACT OF 1988 APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill that will provide full funding for the omnibus drug bill that Congress passed with so much fanfare last October. The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 authorized $2.8 billion in new money to fight the epidemic of substance abuse, but appropriated less than $1 billion to fund the effort it proposed. When Congress passed the drug bill it made a promise. It is my intent to keep that promise. This bill provides a supplemental appropriation of $1.7 billion, allocating it to the same programs authorized by the drug bill—treatment, law enforcement, education, and research. It is based on the premise that the issue of drug abuse must remain a priority as the new Congress works with the new President to shape the next budget.

In an ABC News poll taken between August 30 and September 1, 1988, Americans chose drug abuse as the most important national problem of the moment by more than a 3 to 1 margin over such problems as the deficit, unemployment, poverty, and the threat of war. Their concern, and our legislative effort, is part of a general awakening to what has been happening to children and young people in this country. According to the 1985 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, 15.1 percent of those 12 to 17 years of age and 25.5 percent of those 18 to 25 have used illicit drugs in the previous 30 days.

Crack is the most vicious drug the species—us, that is—seems ever to have encountered. No one knows the size of the afflicted population, but the Drug Enforcement Administration estimates there are 600,000 regular users in New York City; 600,000 young persons in a city with 1.1 million inhabitants between the ages of 15 and 24. Young people everywhere are endangered, but most virulently the young people of the inner cities. The violence associated with drug use could resegregate American society. Single parent families could become no-parent families: A devastating prospect already taking shape.

Yet when these children do what we wish them to do and ask for help at a treatment center they are told to come back in 6 months. And when the dealer who sells them crack is arrested, his chances for punishment are so small as to make no matter. The jails, too, keep a waiting list.

These are but some of the reasons the drug bill promised to deliver $2.7 billion. It was an unprecedented bipartisan effort to produce a bill dealing with everything from the eradication of jungle foliage in Peru to the structure of research laboratories in Bethesda, with the Armed Forces, the police, the courts, the hospitals, the jails, the schools, the crack dens all mixed up in between. It committed us to provide the policeman on the street with enough resources to do his job. But law enforcement assistance to the States in 1989 will be only $119 million, down from $178 million in 1987. ABC News reported on January 4 that in Washington, DC, the new money provided by the drug bill will only enable the city to keep 10 extra prisoners in jail for a year.

The drug bill also promised, for the first time, to provide substance abuse treatment on request to addicts. This is perhaps the central policy initiative embodied in the act. But 15 States—Arkansas, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, West Virginia, and Wyoming—will receive less Federal assistance for drug treatment in 1989 than they did in 1988. According to ABC News, the drug bill will enable the District of Columbia to treat only 30 more addicts in 1989. A result not nearly as impressive as the rhetoric that preceded it, nor one of which we can be proud.

The reasons the drug bill failed to keep its promise are no less real than the conditions that led us to make the promises. If the money had been there to appropriate it would have been appropriated. But Congress, working together with the President, must try again. Last fall I supported a small increase in alcohol and tobacco taxes to fund the drug bill. I would do so again. I supported enhancing IRS tax collection. I would do so again.

This initiative is not meant to be a symbolic gesture. I am introducing this measure to establish that Congress is still serious about drugs. And I do so bearing in mind that perhaps a more elemental principle is at stake. Whether the American people believe their Government when it makes a promise. And whether their Government deserves to be believed. I urge its favorable consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 26

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, and for other purposes, namely:

Because of the urgent need to provide drug treatment and rehabilitation services to drug users upon request and to provide law enforcement agencies sufficient resources to arrest, prosecute, and incarcerate violators of the law, there is hereby appropriated an additional sum of $1,786,175,000.

For an additional amount to carry out the United States Insular Areas Drug Abuse Act of 1986, $13,975,000, of which $350,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of American Samoa, $500,000 shall be available to provide the Government of American Samoa with a vessel to be used in the enforcement of narcotics and other laws, $500,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of Guam to carry out the purposes of such Act in accordance with a plan approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $500,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of Guam for drug abuse law enforcement equipment, $125,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, $7,000,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of Puerto Rico, $2,000,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of the Virgin Islands to carry out the purposes of such Act in accordance with a plan approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500,000 shall be available for a grant to the Government of the Virgin Islands for a substance abuse facility, and $500,000 shall be available for grants to the Government of Palau.

TITLE IX—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 901. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 902. It is the sense of Congress that funding for Federal anti-drug abuse programs for fiscal year 1990 should, at a minimum, maintain the aggregate level of funding provided for such programs for fiscal year 1989 by the regular appropriation Acts for fiscal year 1989, the Urgent Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1989 to Meet the Dire Emergency Created by the Crisis of Drug Abuse, and the Anti-Drug Abuse Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1989, and should include the full amount of any increases authorized for fiscal year 1990 by the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

SEC. 903. This Act may be cited as the "Anti-Drug Abuse Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1989".

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 27. A bill to establish a federally sponsored program for the restoration, conservation, and management of Onondaga Lake in Onondaga County, NY, and to provide for the sharing of costs of such clean up, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

ONONDAGA LAKE RESTORATION ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, we need a Federal commitment to clean up Onondaga Lake once and for all. The bill I am introducing today, the Onondaga Lake Restoration Act of 1989, will be the centerpiece of this effort. I am determined to make the restoration of Onondaga Lake a model for the rest of the Nation. Some might say that such an effort is hopeless. Not so. The whole Nation can profit and learn from such a model. Cleaning up Onondaga Lake can show that there are very few environmental problems that cannot be overcome.

What I am presenting today may not be what is finally enacted—I am still open to suggestion as to how best to proceed—but I am set on one idea: there will be no more delay. Onondaga County and the city of Syracuse are beginning their own small renaissance right now, and they will not flourish as they should if the lake they share remains so highly polluted. With a clean and usable lake, the area will blossom. Without it, its future is very much in doubt.

It is enough that New York State is home to Love Canal, arguably the single most prominent symbol of reckless toxic waste disposal in the country. But our State has yet another distinction; it has been claimed that Onondaga Lake is the most polluted inland body of water in the country. Such a ranking is impossible to make with undisputed accuracy, but our lake clearly ranks near the bottom of the list. This distinction is something New Yorkers could well do without. But we did something about Love Canal—I helped get Federal money for that—and the time has come to do the same for Onondaga Lake.

Some may be not intimately familiar with the history of the lake, and consequently may believe there is no point in saving it. In the latter part of the last century Onondaga Lake was a well known aquatic playground. Water slides shot into the lake from prestigious lakeside resorts. Pleasure boats abounded and swimming was a common thing on hot days. But for most of this century, the lake has served more as a cesspit than a public waterway. In 1884 the Solvay Process Co. opened operations on the lakeshore for the production of soda ash. This process, however, produced substantial quantities of chemical sludge as waste, which was dumped directly into the lake until 1907. Thereafter it was deposited along the lakeshore, and substantial chemical leaching from the waste beds continued to pollute the lake.

Another unfortunate byproduct of this process was mercury. The Solvay Co., and later Allied Chemical which bought out the original owners, dumped as many as 25 pounds of mercury into the lake per day.

In 1896 the city of Syracuse began construction of a rudimentary sewage system, which drained all of the city's wastes directly into the lake. This was corrected years later by the construction of a sewage treatment plant on the lake's south shore, but many combined sewer outfalls still dump untreated sewage into the lake during heavy rains. In addition, the county's treatment plant discharges nitrogen and phosphorus in sufficient quantities to cause the growth of undesirable levels of algae.

For all practical purposes, the lake has been considered dead for as many years as most of us can remember. But in 1985, Allied Chemical left Onondage County, and moved its soda production facilities to Wisconsin. And since then there have been small stirrings of hope that perhaps the lake can be reborn.

This is a worthy goal, and achievable. The lake may never recover fully from its past, but we can reclaim it for human use. For swimming, for boating, and even for fishing. But this will not come cheap.

My bill will provide $100 billion in Federal funds for the lake. It will bring the Environmental Protection Agency in to the process to look at the lake's various environmental problems, and will charge the Army Corps of Engineers with telling us what we might do to fix it, and how much it will cost. I should point out that much work has been done already in these areas by the State of New York and Onondaga County, but much more still needs to get done. And once our alternatives are clearly set before us, there must be a consensus among all involved on how to proceed.

The $100 billion provided by this legislation will be administered not by the Federal Government, or even the State of New York, but by a lake management conference made up of representatives of the U.S. EPA, the Corps of Engineers, New York State, Onondaga County, the city of Syracuse, a citizens' advisory committee, and a technical advisory committee. This management conference will decide what work should be done and in what order, and will identify additional sources of funding.

Such a collective decisionmaking process has its purpose. It will ensure accountability, and it will give all sides a voice in the decisions that are made about how much to spend, and how to spend it.

Mr. President, this is very simple. In central New York we have a beautiful little lake that has been horribly abused for more than a century. The time has come to correct this longstanding mistake, and I will do everything in my power to see this happen.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the appropriate point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 27

Be it enacted in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TITLE.

This Act may be cited as "The Onondaga Lake Restoration Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(a) Onondaga Lake has been for many years received sewage discharge from a variety of sources, including numerous combined sewer outfalls, which can discharge raw sewage into the lake as many as one hundred times per year;

(b) Onondaga Lake has received industrial discharges of mercury, chlorine, sodium, carbonate ions, calcium, benzene, sodium hyperchloride, various petroleum distillates and other chemical pollutants since the late nineteenth century;

(c) there are restrictions on the consumption of fish taken from Onondaga Lake because of elevated mercury levels in fish flesh;

(d) existing waste beds in the Towns of Geddes and Camillus still contribute many tons of contaminants to the lake every year through runoff and infiltration;

(e) Onondaga Lake borders directly on New York's fifth largest city, and has the potential of being a central part of the economic and recreational activity for the City of Syracuse, Onondaga County, and central New York;

(f) the number, variety and mixture of sources of pollution in Onondaga Lake is unique for bodies of fresh water of comparable size in the United States;

(g) pollution from Onondaga Lake flows into the Oswego River and is a potentially major source of pollution to Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River;

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to formulate and implement a cooperative program for the restoration, conservation and management of Onondaga Lake in Onondaga County, New York. This plan shall build on the efforts undertaken to date by the State of New York, Onondaga County, the Central New York Regional Planning and Development Board, the Onondaga Lake Advisory Committee, other public entities and private individuals and businesses, and shall coordinate all activities undertaken to clean up the lake.

SEC. 4. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Title III of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is hereby amended by adding a new Section 321, as follows:

"SEC. 321. ONONDAGA LAKE RESTORATION PROGRAM.

"(a) CONVENING OF CONFERENCE.—The Administrator shall convene a management conference for the restoration, conservation, and management of Onondaga Lake. The purpose of the management conference convened with respect to this subsection shall be to—

"(1) catalog and evaluate all existing research and information regarding like conditions;

"(2) assesss the need for ongoing research regarding the lake and assure that such research is carried out as expeditiously as possible;

"(3) coordinate with all ongoing research and modeling efforts in an attempt to gather all information needed to formulate a comprehensive restoration, conservation, and management plan for the lake;

"(4) develop a comprehensive restoration, conservation and management plan that recommends priority corrective actions and compliance schedules addressing point and non-point sources of pollution to restore and maintain the chemical, physical, and biological integrity of the lake, including an assessment of the feasibility and desirability of projects to assure that—

"(A) there is sufficient dissolved oxygen in Lake water to allow fish to survive, reproduce and flourish,

"(B) presence of mercury in the Lake is reduced to the extent that fish taken from the Lake can be consumed without threat to health,

"(C) discharge of untreated sewage into the lake is reduced to negligable levels,

"(D) high phytoplankton levels and other sources of turbidity in the lake are reduced to the extent that lake water can meet the standard of 1.22 meter average visability;

"(E) concentrations of fecal coliform and other bacteria are reduced to the extent that swimming in the Lake is permissible and does not pose a threat to health.

"(5) coordinated implementation of the plan by the State of New York, the Environmental Protection Agency and all local agencies, governments and other groups participating in the conference under existing authorities, and recommended additional authority that should be granted to the management conference or to any of its participants that will aid in the execution of the plan agreed upon by the management conference;

29-059 O-90-19 (Pt. 1)

"(6) monitor the effectiveness of actions taken pursuant to the plan and recommend modifications to the plan should they be necessary; and

"(7) review all Federal financial assistance programs and Federal development projects in accordance with the requirements of Executive Order 12372, as in effect on September 17, 1983, to determine whether such assistance program or project would be consistent with and further the purposes and objectives of the plan prepared under this section. For purposes of paragraph (7), such programs and projects shall not be limited to the assistance programs and development projects subject to Executive Order 12372, but may include any programs listed in the most recent Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance which may have an effect on the purposes and objectives of the plan developed under this section.

"(b) MEMBERS OF CONFERENCE.—The members of the management conference convened under this section shall include, at a minimum, the Administrator and a representative of—

"(1) the Governor of the State of New York,

"(2) the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works;

"(3) Onondaga County,

"(4) The City of Syracuse

"(5) a Technical Advisory Committee to be convened by the management conference to provide advice and assistance concerning the technical and scientific aspects of the plan; and

"(6) a Citizens Advisory Committee to be convened by the management conference.

"(c) UTILIZATION OF EXISTING DATA.—In developing a plan under this section, the management conference shall survey and utilize existing reports, data, and studies relating to the lake that have been developed by or made available to Federal, interstate, State, and local agencies.

"(d) APPROVAL AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PLANS.—

"(1) APPROVAL.—Not later than 120 days after the completion of a restoration, conservation and management plan and after providing for public review and comment, the Administrator shall approve such plan if the plan meets the requirements of this section and the Governor of the State of New York concurs.

"(2) IMPLEMENTATION.—Upon approval of a conservation and management plan under this section, such plan shall be implemented. Funds authorized to be appropriated under titles II and VI and section 319, and this section of this Act may be used in accordance with the applicable requirements of this Act to assist States with the implementation of such plan.

"(e) GRANTS.—

"(1) RECIPIENTS.—The Administrator is authorized to make grants to State, interstate, and regional water pollution control agencies and entities, State lake management agencies, interstate agencies, other public or nonprofit private agencies, institutions, organizations, and individuals.

"(2) GRANTS UNDER THIS SUBSECTION SHALL BE MADE TO PAY FOR—

"(A) assisting research, surveys, studies, and modeling and other technical work necessary for the development of a restoration, conservation and management plan under this section, provided that the amount of grants to any person (including a State, interstate, or regional agency or entity) under this paragraph for a fiscal year shall not exceed 75 percent of the costs of such research, survey, studies and work and shall be made on condition that the non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources;

"(B) conducting activities identified in the plan developed pursuant to this section for the restoration, conservation and management of Onondaga Lake, provided that the amount of grants to any person (including a State, interstate, or regional agency or entity) under this paragraph for a fiscal year shall not exceed 55 percent of the costs of such work and shall be made on condition that the non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources.

"(f) GRANT REPORTING.—Any person (including a State, interstate, or regional agency or entity) that receives a grant under subsection (g) shall report to the Administrator not later than 18 months after receipt of such grant and biennially thereafter on the progress being made under this section.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator not to exceed $17,000,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994 for—

"(1) expenses related to the administration of management conferences under this section, not to exceed 5 percent of the amount appropriated under this subsection;

"(2) making grants under subsection (g); and

"(3) monitoring the implementation of a conservation and management plan by the managment conference or by the Administrator, in any case in which the conference has been terminated."

SEC. 5. ROLE OF THE ARMY CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works is directed to undertake a study to assess the cost, feasibility, probable duration, and effectiveness of various strategies for the reduction of pollutant and nutrient input into Onondaga Lake. The Assistant Secretary shall cooperate to the fullest extent possible with the State of New York, Onondaga County, the city of Syracuse and other interested parties in establishing a list of alternatives to be assessed, and descriptions of the individual projects. No later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Assistant Secretary shall submit a report to Congress and to the Management Conference convened under section 321 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act as amended that includes the findings of this study. This report shall recommend which projects and techniques will offer the greatest benefits for the clean up of the Lake, and which are the most cost effective.

By Mr. RIEGLE (for himself, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 28. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to increase the basic standard deduction for child dependents; to the Committee on Finance.

INCREASE IN STANDARD DEDUCTION FOR CHILD DEPENDENTS

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation that I originally introduced last April to increase the amount of income that dependents may earn before such income is subject to Federal income tax.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 contained an unfortunate change in how the incomes of dependents are taxed. In an effort to close a loophole through which some wealthy taxpayers were sheltering part of their income through their dependents, millions of other dependents are now taxed at higher rates on their earnings and savings. The U.S. tax system should be amended to not tax the small incomes of those dependents who work and save.

Our economic system is based on the industriousness of our work force. We want to instill this work ethic at an early age because we know that our children should begin to see the rewards that come from work.

S. 28. The Children's Economic Equity Tax Act, will raise the amount of earned income of a dependent that is not subject to tax to $4,000 and will increase the unearned income level of $500. These increases will allow dependents to keep their hard earned income and to save for college and other expenses. At the same time, the abusive sheltering of income by parents that existed under the hold tax law is still not allowed—the new tax law rules take effect after the new levels of earned and unearned income are reached.

I do not think it was the intent of the tax writers to go after children who work hard at delivering newspapers, doing yard work, babysitting, working at the local fast food restaurant, caddying, and stocking grocery store shelves. These types of jobs are absolutely essential; we should not penalize our children by imposing taxes on the earnings from such jobs. The new law hurts dependents who earn over $500 from jobs and also save some of the money they have earned. Even if the interest from a savings account is only $1, that income is taxed. This type of tax policy needs to be corrected. Such a correction does not weaken tax reform, it corrects the unwanted consequences of the 1986 reform law.

Increasing the earned income standard deduction level to $4,000 will both eliminate the tax of most of our children, but just as important, not encourage them to go around the system by seeking "cash only" types of jobs. Our laws should be designed to encourage our children to follow them, not to circumvent them.

Setting a reasonable unearned income level that is not subject to tax will also encourage our children to save a portion of their earnings. We want to instill this savings ethic at an early age. As my colleagues well know, the saving base in America is too low. We should be doing everything possible to raise this savings base.

It is my strong hope that Congress will act swiftly to amend our tax code and not tax the initial levels of earned and unearned income of dependents.●

S. 29. A bill to provide for a 2-year Federal budget cycle, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Budget and Governmental Affairs jointly pursuant to order of August 4, 1977.

BIENNIAL BUDGET ACT

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am honored to be reintroducing, on behalf of myself and Senator ROTH, the Biennial Budget Act, legislation to put the Federal budget on a 2-year cycle. We are pleased to have joining us in introducing this bipartisan legislation 28 of our colleagues, including Senator DOMENICI, Senator NICKLES, Senator DECONCINI, Senator COHEN, Senator SYMMS, Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator NUNN, Senator INOUYE, Senator MCCONNELL, Senator BUMPERS, Senator BOREN, Senator COCHRAN, Senator BOSCHWITZ, Senator HEINZ, Senator DASCHLE, Senator SHELBY, Senator SANFORD, Senator WILSON, Senator DANFORTH, Senator PELL, Senator GARN, Senator WARNER, Senator CONRAD, Senator PRESSLER, Senator WALLOP, Senator WIRTH, Senator BREAUX, and Senator BENTSEN.

I first introduced a proposal to put the Federal budget on a 2-year cycle in the 1st session of the 97th Congress, and have continued to reintroduce this legislation up through, and including, the 100th Congress. Then in June of last year I was most pleased to introduce, along with my distinguished colleague from Delaware, Senator ROTH, a bipartisan proposal to establish a biennial budget process for the Federal Government: S. 2478. We were pleased to have 29 of our colleagues join us in cosponsoring that legislation last year, which was reported unanimously from the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee in late August. The bill was subsequently discharged from the Senate Budget Committee, under the provisions of the August 4, 1977, unanimous consent agreement governing referral of budget-related legislation, and was placed on the Senate Calendar in late September. While there was obviously insufficient time for the Budget Committee and the full Senate to consider this legislation in the last Congress, I was pleased that this proposal made such progress in the 100th Congress.

With that success, Senator ROTH and I decided to reintroduce our legislation, virtually identical to S. 2478, as reported from the Governmental Affairs Committee in the 100th Congress. In an effort to simplify the legislation, and address the concerns of some of our colleagues, we have deleted the automatic continuing resolution provisions of the bill [section 9 of S. 2478]. I continue to believe that an automatic continuing appropriation removes the incentive for both the Congress and the White House to sandbag individual appropriation bills in the hope of enacting controversial items in a virtually veto-proof continuing resolution. However, in an attempt to expedite consideration of this legislation, I will be introducing this provision as separate legislation.

The bill we are introducing today amends the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 to provide for a 2-year Federal budget cycle. In the first session of each Congress, beginning in the 102d Congress, a concurrent budget resolution and reconciliation measure covering a 2-fiscal-year period will be enacted, as will appropriation bills covering the same 2-fiscal-year period. Deficit reduction measures and tax bills included as part of reconciliation would therefore be adopted in the nonelection year of a Congress. The second session of each Congress would be devoted to authorizing legislation and oversight by Congress, and compliance review by the executive branch. The biennial budget period would begin on October 1 of each odd-numbered year and cover the 2 consecutive fiscal years.

It is important to note that this legislation does not disturb the discipline of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Each fiscal year in the biennium must comply with the statutory deficit limits of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and the threat of a sequester and the procedure for avoiding it remain unchanged. Similarly, this legislation does not preclude action on supplemental spending measures in either year of a Congress, and maintains the existing Budget Act points of order governing such measures.

This legislation again provides increased authority for chairmen and ranking members of standing committees of the Congress to request information, analyses, studies, and other assistance from Federal agencies to aid in the budget formation, appropriations, authorization, and program oversight process. The effective date of this legislation is January 1, 1990, with the first biennium beginning on October 1, 1991, and covering the 2-fiscal-year period of fiscal year 1992-93. This will give the Congress and the executive branch the 101st Congress in which to lay the groundwork for a successful transition to multiyear budgeting.

Many of our colleagues recognize that the complexity of the current congressional budget process does not lend itself to efficient budgeting. While the 1974 reforms were a positive step, our experience over the past nearly 15 years has proven that the process needs reform. Until last year, Congress had been unable to complete action on all regular appropriation bills before the beginning of the fiscal year. This was due in part to the consistent inability of Congress, often in consultation with the White House, to complete action on the budget in time for the appropriations committees to take final action on the individual appropriation bills. This has lead in recent years to a reliance on omnibus spending bills, often resulting in the entire Federal Government operating on a succession of several short-term continuing resolutions.

While biennial budgeting cannot replace the will to make hard decisions about how to cut spending and increase revenues in order to balance the Federal budget, it will give Congress and the executive branch a management tool for getting our fiscal house in order. As the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee noted in its report to accompany S. 2478 in the last Congress,

> While biennial budgeting will not solve all of the problems which have developed relating to the budget process, it will substantially improve the process, and will create a greater presumption in favor of carefully considered, timely decisions.

We know from the experience of the 1987 budget summit agreement, that biennial budgeting can contribute to a more orderly consideration of appropriation measures. The budget summit agreement was an unintended experiment in biennial budgeting that proved to be overwhelmingly successful. That agreement produced a 2-year deficit reduction package that eliminated much of the repetitive floor debate on budget resolutions and priorities, and established caps on appropriations which allow the appropriations committees to begin, and complete, their work in a timely manner. But biennial budgeting can produce other benefits as well.

By dedicating an entire year to the authorization and oversight process, Congress will have the time needed to make reasoned decisions about how to spend the taxpayer's money. A 2-year budget with one session reserved specifically for oversight and authorizations, will give Congress the adoption of a budget resolution and appropriation bills. We cannot be expect to be able to make responsible decisions about how to allocate over $1 trillion of revenues each year without time to consider those spending decisions outside of the deficit reduction process. Congress simply needs more time to review existing spending programs to determine whether they should be maintained, modified, or replaced.

A 2-year budget will also give the executive branch sufficient time to conduct compliance reviews and discover waste and abuse in Government programs before they become a national scandal. Biennial budgeting will also give both the executive branch and State and local recipients of Federal funds 2 years to plan for the most efficient use of these funds. As a former Governor of a State which operates on a biennial budget, I know the savings that can result from a 2-year budget which gives States and local executives the stability to plan and get a bigger bang out of the buck. The Federal Government can achieve those same savings. Last year, Mr. Robert Helm, then Comptroller of the Department of Defense, testified before the Governmental Affairs Committee that the Department's experience with biennial budgeting, especially in the procurement area, showed that advanced funding had the advantage of enabling managers to pursue Defense procurement in the most efficient manner.

There is a broad, bipartisan base of support building for biennial budgeting. In a survey conducted in the last Congress by the Center for Responsive Politics, more than 85 percent of the Members of Congress polled said they favored 2-year appropriations. Former President Reagan called on Congress in his last two budgets to adopt biennial budgeting, citing in his fiscal year 1980 budget many of the very benefits of biennial budgeting that Senator ROTH and I have been advocating for many years. In testimony before the National Economic Commission last summer, uniform support was expressed for moving to a 2-year budget cycle, including support from former CBO Director, Dr. Alice Rivlin. During hearings in the Governmental Affairs Committee last year, there was uniform support expressed for the concent of biennial budgeting, including testimony from Charles Bowsher, Comptroller General of the United States, former OMB Director, Jim Miller, former Comptroller of the Department of Defense, Robert Helm, and representatives of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, including former House Budget Committee Chairman JIM JONES. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has also endorsed the concept of biennial budgeting.

The support for biennial budgeting continue to grow. Director/Designate of OMB, Richard Darman, stated at his confirmation hearings last week before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, that he thought moving the Federal budget to a 2-year cycle was highly desirable, and that it would find support in the Bush administration. Mr. Darman's comments confirmed what were earlier press reports that members of the Bush administration would be favorable to the idea of biennial budgeting.

Biennial budgeting is not a panacea for our Federal budgetary problems. Nor is it a short-term fix, or a gimmick, for reducing our Federal budget deficit. It is a tried procedure that can produce savings to the Federal Treasury and give both Congress and the executive branch a tool for making informed decisions on how to reduce the deficit and balance the Federal budget.

There are numerous ways to establish a biennial budget cycle, and many members of the Senate have been working on this issue for a number of years. This concept is not without its skeptics, but the overwhelming opinion appears to be that the advantages of moving to multiyear budgeting and appropriations outweigh the concerns. I was pleased to join with my distinguished colleague, Senator ROTH, last year in putting together what we felt was a bipartisan approach to biennial budgeting, and I am encouraged by the strong support we have in reintroducing this legislation again this year. We look forward to working with our colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee and the Budget Committee to fashion a proposal which will produce a biennial budget in the next Congress.

This is the year to enact biennial budgeting and lay the foundation for moving to multiyear budgeting and appropriations. I encourage my colleagues to review the benefits of biennial budgeting and join us in producing such legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section summary and a copy of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 29

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Biennial Budget Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that the present annual Federal budgeting process—

(1) allows insufficient time for the fulfillment by the Congress of its legislative and oversight responsibilities;

(2) allows insufficient time for the review and consideration by the Congress of authorizing legislation, budget resolutions, and appropriation bills and resolutions and other spending measures;

(3) allows insufficient time for the evaluation of costly and complicated Federal programs, and thereby contributes to the unrestrained growth of the Federal budget; and

(4) allows insufficient time for agencies and State and local governments to plan for the implementation of programs.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to establish a process through which the Federal budget will be adopted for a two-year period;

(2) to improve congressional control over the Federal budget process;

(3) to streamline the requirements of the budget process in order to promote better accountability to the public;

(4) to improve the legislative and budgetary processes by providing additional time for congressional oversight and other vital legislative activities;

(5) to provide stability and coherence for recipients of Federal funds; and

(6) to implement other improvements in the Federal budget process.

SEC. 3. REVISION OF TIMETABLE.

Section 300 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 631) is amended to read as follows:

"TIMETABLE

"SEC. 300. The timetable with respect to the Congressional budget process for any Congress (beginning with the One-Hundred-and-Second Congress) is as follows:

"First Session

"On or before:	Action to be completed:
First Monday after January 3.	President submits budget recommendations.
February 15	Congressional Budget Office submits report to Budget Committees.
February 25	Committees submit views and estimates to Budget Committees.
March 31	Senate Budget Committee reports concurrent resolution on the biennial budget.
April 15	Congress completes action on concurrent resolution on the biennial budget.
May 15	Biennial appropriation bills may be considered in the House.
June 10	House Appropriations Committee reports last biennial appropriation bill.
September 30	Congress completes action on reconciliation legislation.
September 30	Congress completes action on biennial appropriation bills.
October 1	Biennium begins.

"Second Session

"On or before:	Action to be completed:
May 15	Congressional Budget Office submits report to Budget Committees.
The last day of the session.	Congress completes action on bills and resolutions authorizing new budget authority for the succeeding biennium.".

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET AND IMPOUNDMENT CONTROL ACT OF 1974.

(a) DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.—Section 2(2) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621(2)) is amended by striking "each year" and inserting in lieu thereof "biennially".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—

(1) Section 3(4) of such Act (2 U.S.C. 622(4)) is amended by striking "fiscal year" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "biennium".

(2) Section 3 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 622) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) The term 'biennium' means the period of 2 consecutive fiscal years beginning on October 1 of any odd-numbered year.".

(c) DUTIES OF CBO.—

(1) Section 202(f)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 602(f)(1)) is amended—

SEC. 9. EFFECTIVE DATE; APPLICATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective January 1, 1990, and shall apply to bienniums beginning after September 30, 1991.

(b) FISCAL YEAR 1990 and Fiscal Year 1991.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), the provisions of—

(1) the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, and

(2) title 31, United States Code,

(as such provisions were in effect on the day before the effective date of this Act) shall apply to the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1989, and on October 1, 1990.

(c) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term "biennium" shall have the meaning given to such term in section 3(11) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 622(11)), as added by section 3(b)(2) of this Act.●

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce with my distinguished colleague from Kentucky, WENDELL FORD, legislation to establish a biennial budget process. There is growing support for a multiyear budget process and I am pleased that we are joined by more than 20 of our colleagues for introduction of this legislation today. With this type of support, I am optimistic that we can move a biennial budget bill during this session of Congress.

In 1981 Senator FORD and I introduced separate bills to establish a Federal biennial budget. In 1988 we joined forces and introduced a bipartisan approach. The bill we are introducing today is virtually identical to last year's bill and represents a continuation of our efforts to enact a 2-year budget process.

The Biennial Budget Act is designed to put the Federal budget on a 2-year basis. This legislation would create a 2-year budget resolution and appropriations cycle. The first session of each Congress would be devoted to the budget resolution and appropriations, culminating with a 2-year budget effective that October 1. The second session would be devoted to oversight and multiyear authorizations for the next 2-year period.

Recently, the Johns Hopkins Foreign Policy Institute and the Center for Strategic and International Studies released a joint project entitled "Making Defense Reform Work." Among the reports major recommendation is the establishment of a biennial budget. According to the report, "The substantive arguments for 2-year budgets are compelling. The longer term focus could help to force hard choices; it is too easy to defer difficult choices. * * * And the burden of annual budgets on both branches of Government is too great, for domestic programs as well as defense programs."

Before outlining what I believe the merits of this legislation, I would like to commend Senator FORD. His foresight, persistence, and conviction last year helped us to move this bill farther than we ever have. For the first time since 1981, the Committee on Governmental Affairs reported the legislation favorably, 13-0. Mr. President, the progress we made last session should be viewed as a step toward eventual passage in the 101st Congress.

I would like to briefly point to six reasons why we should move to a 2-year process on the Federal level.

First. The current process needs reform—deadlines are often missed and we end up with massive continuing resolutions.

Last year notwithstanding, only once since 1974, when the Budget Act was established, has the Congress passed all 13 regular appropriation bills by the beginning of the fiscal year. Between fiscal year 1980 and 1988, the Congress passed only 12 regular appropriation bills on time. In 8 years, the Congress passed less than the number we are suppose to pass each year. In fiscal year 1987 and 1988, the Congress passed all 13 in a continuing resolution. It is clear the process calls out for reform.

Because the Congress does not meet its deadlines and ends up voting in the late hours of the night, very few Members, if any, have a good understanding of the entire legislation contained in these massive continuing resolutions. This procedure is frustrating at best. Authorizing legislation is frequently attached without due consideration. It is my impression that the public does not have a good understanding of what is contained in these bills either. And with this lack of understanding, it makes it very difficult to hold Members accountable for their votes.

A 2-year budget will allow more time for consideration of underlying authorizations, which will promote a smoother appropriations process, and one which is more accountable to the American people.

Second. Budget summit agreement shows system can work.

The budget summit agreement reached in November 1987 set out spending and tax guidelines for a 2-year period. The overall totals helped the Congress move briskly on the budget. As I stated earlier, last year was the first time in more than a decade that the Congress completed action on all 13 regular appropriation bills before the beginning of the fiscal year.

The summit agreement laid the foundation for a 2-year period. The leadership did not let the so-called uncertainty of economic forecasts deter them in moving toward a multiyear plan. This legislation would make permanent the success we have had so far with the 2-year agreement.

Third. Reduce repetitive nature of the process.

A 2-year budget reduces the repetitive nature of the current budget process. Each year the Congress considers the budget resolution, annual authorizations, appropriations, and reconciliation. This does not include the extra layer of debate provided by the Gramm-Rudman sequestration or debt-limit deliberations.

For fiscal year 1988, the Congress debated the level of defense five different times—during consideration of the budget resolution, the Defense authorization bill, Defense appropriations, the revision in Gramm-Rudman, and the budget summit agreement.

This redundancy causes widespread frustration. Streamlining the process could reduce the repetitive nature of the process. This legislation does not eliminate any of the processes—they all play a significant role in our deliberations, but by making the decisions once every 2 years instead of twice, we reduce the burden. In addition, we avoid debating an issue which might have been decided earlier in the Congress.

Fourth. Recipients of Federal funds will be more secure.

By providing funds for a 2-year period, recipients of these funds will be able to plan better and administer their funds better. On June 7, 1988, the Committee on Governmental Affairs held a hearing on S. 2478, the Biennial Budget Act introduced in the previous Congress. The Comptroller of the Department of Defense, Mr. Robert Helm, made a very persuasive argument to this effect at the hearing.

As a result of the current process he said, "Defense budgets are plagued with uncertainty * * * program managers have little time to develop rational program execution plans based on available resources, when the available resources become known mere weeks before the next year's budget is transmitted to the Congress * * * ironically, in this period of concern over the deficit, the budget process lends itself to the least economical use of our Nation's resources by denying program managers the very tools they need—stability, predictability, and commitment."

These same arguments apply to procurement officers in every agency in the Government, as well as State and local governments and individual recipients of Federal funds.

Fifth. Might help reduce the deficit.

Two-year budgeting would allow authorizing committees a stronger ability to review entitlements and other Government functions.

It would help to reduce gimmickry such as the transfer of spending from one fiscal year to the next just to hide the effect on the deficit. Some have suggested that the Department of Defense not pay its bills the last 10 days of the fiscal year simply to appear to lower the deficit.

Multiyear budgeting could reduce the potential for pork-barrel spending in an election year, since appropriations are made in the first session of each Congress.

Two-year budgeting also provides a better means to consider the long-term savings in reconciliation bills. Currently, Congress concentrates on savings in the first year and sometimes ignores the out-year effects. This may convince us to consider more than the first-year effects.

By retaining the Gramm-Rudman enforcement mechanisms, the Congress can assure that it does not spend more in the second year of the cycle on supplementals. Supplementals will occur, but all decisions must be made within the parameters of the deficit targets.

Sixth. Broad, bipartisan support.

Mr. President, there is widespread support for the idea of biennial budgeting. OMB Director-designate Richard Darman expressed support for multiyear budgeting during his confirmation hearing before the Committee on Governmental Affairs last week.

In a 1988 survey by the Center for Responsive Politics, over 85 percent of Senate and House Members polled favored 2-year appropriations. This was the "overwhelming favorite" among the seven process reforms offered.

The bill we are introducing today has the bipartisan support of more than 20 Senators.

The chamber of commerce, former Director of the Congressional Budget Office Alice Rivlin, now at the Brookings Institution, and a host of other budget and policy analysts support the idea.

Again, I would like to extend my appreciation to my colleague from Kentucky, Senator FORD, for forging a bipartisan approach on this issue. I am confident that with our joint efforts, we can enact a Biennial Budget Act during the 101st Congress.

THE BIENNIAL BUDGET ACT—SECTION SUMMARY

Section 1 states the title of the legislation—the "Biennial Budget Act".

Section 2 sets forth the findings and purposes of the legislation.

The findings are that the Federal budget process allows insufficient time for (a) the fulfillment by the Congress of its legislative and oversight responsibilities; (b) the review and consideration of authorizing legislation, budget resolutions, and appropriations bills; (c) the evaluation of costly and complicated Federal programs, and thereby contributes to the unrestrained growth of the Federal budget; and (d) for agencies and State and local governments to plan for the implementation of programs.

The purposes are (a) to establish a biennial budget process; (b) to improve congressional control over the budget process; (c) to improve legislative and budget processes by providing additional time for oversight and other vital activities; and (d) to provide stability and coherence for recipients of Federal funds.

Section 3 revises the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (Budget Act) to establish a timetable for the biennial budget cycle, as follows:

FIRST SESSION

First Monday after January 3: President submits budget recommendations.

February 15: Congressional Budget Office submits report to Budget Committees.

February 25: Committees submit views and estimates to Budget Committees.

March 31: Senate Budget Committee reports concurrent resolution on the biennial budget.

April 15: Congress completes action on concurrent resolution on the biennial budget.

May 15: Biennial appropriation bills may be considered in the House.

June 10: House Appropriations Committee reports last biennial appropriation bill.

September 30: Congress completes action on reconciliation legislation.

September 30: Congress completes action on biennial appropriation bills.

October 1: Biennium begins.

SECOND SESSION

On or before May 15: Congressional Budget Office submits report to Budget Committees.

The last day of the session: Congress completes action on bills and resolutions authorizing new budget authority for the succeeding biennium period.

Section 4 amends the Budget Act by: (a) establishing the term "biennium" and defining it as the period of 2 consecutive fiscal years beginning October 1 of any odd numbered year; (b) creating a biennial concurrent resolution on the budget; and (c) conforming points of order to each fiscal year within the biennium.

Section 5 amends Title 31, United States Code by: (a) requiring that the President consult with the Budget, Appropriations, and Authorizing Committees before making changes in the table of accounts in the budget submission; (b) requiring the President to submit a two-fiscal-year budget on or before the first Monday after January 3 of each odd-numberd year; (c) requiring the President's two-fiscal-year period to comply with maximum deficit amounts in Gramm-Rudman for each year.

Section 6 amends Title 1, United States Code regarding the title and style of appropriation acts.

Section 7 provides increased authority for the chairmen and ranking members of standing committees to request information, analyses, studies, and other assistance from Federal agencies to assist in the budget formation, appropriations, authorization, and program overrsight processes.

Section 8 makes conforming changes in the Rules of the House of Representatives with regard to biennial budget timetable set forth in Section 3.

Section 9 sets out the effective dates of the Act. The provisions of the Act are effective January 1, 1990. The first biennial budget begins October 1, 1991, for fiscal years 1992 and 1993. The current authorizing, budget, and appropriations processes will continue to operate for the 101st Congress.

S. 30. A bill to provide for certain requirements relating to the conversion of oil shale mining claims located under the general mining law of 1872 to leases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

OIL SHALE MINING CLAIMS CONVERSION ACT

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to settle nearly 70 years of controversy regarding oil shale claims made prior to the passage of the Mineral Leasing Act in 1920. This legislation would prevent the senseless giveaway of thousands of acres of public lands in the West, protect the public interest in those lands and their resources, and respect the purposes and aims of the 1872 law under which those claims were made.

Before the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 was passed, oil shale mining claims were filed across parts of the West. Few of those claims have ever been developed. In many cases, annual assessment work required by the mining laws to maintain these claims was just not done, for years—in some cases, decades—at a time. Very real questions still exist about whether these claims will be economically viable in the foreseeable future.

Nevertheless, in 1986 the Department of the Interior established a very unwise precedent by settling such claims to 82,000 acres of public land in Colorado for the bargain basement price of $2.50 per acre. Outraged by this giveaway, the Congress passed a ban on further processing of oil shale claims in appropriations legislation. But the moratorium has expired and Congress has not yet acted to correct the situation. The Department of the Interior now states that it will once again begin to process these claims, and issue patents which transfer to claimants not only all the minerals, but the surface of these lands as well, all for a small fee. There remain 260,000 acres which may yet be subject to such action.

While the Department may want to move ahead, it should not have restarted this controversial program in Colorado without first meeting its commitment to have the public review new regulations. At a minimum, the new administration should be given a chance to review this entire issue in consultation with the appropriate committees of Congress before making irretrievable conveyances of public lands.

The lands given away in 1986 were prime habitat for the largest mule deer herd in North America. Every autumn, people from Colorado and across the country used these lands for hunting. Because these lands were part of the public domain, they were open to families who wanted to camp, hike or just picnic in our Nation's great outdoors.

Until 1986, these lands were open to every Coloradan, indeed every American. Today, they are no longer public lands. The Department of Interior's recent action threatens thousands of more acres of public lands with important recreation, wildlife, watershed, public access and other surface values by transferring land into private hands in a manner never contemplated in the 1872 law.

The purpose of that law was to encourage the prompt, efficient development of mineral resources in our country. The granting of patents to these oil shale claims does nothing to contribute to the development of America's oil shale resource—and may, in fact, do the opposite.

If the Department of Interior begins granting patents to these claims, it will, in fact, be agreeing to an even worse deal than that which outraged the Congress in 1986. In that settlement of litigation, the Department at least negotiated some small concessions to public access and use of the surface of these lands, and some restrictions on what mineral rights were conveyed. The new patents will carry none of those caveats. Public use and public resources will be given away, without getting any assurance of oil shale development in return.

The bill I am proposing provides a fair deal for those who say they want to develop oil shale. This legislation provides that no patents for oil shale claims shall be issued after January 25, 1989, unless a patent application had been filed and all requirements met by that date, consistent with the requirements of Freese v. United States 629 F.2d 754 (Ct. Cl. 1981) cert. denied, 454 U.S. 827 (1981). An oil shale claim holder would be required to elect either to hold the claim or to convert it to a mineral lease, subject to certain requirements. Either option would allow the claimant to develop the oil shale resources of these lands. These options will not, however, allow real estate speculation, blocking of public access, or untrammelled exploitation of nonmineral resources of the affected lands—things which are all too possible if the Department carries out the course of action it now intends to pursue.

The most important aspect of this bill is that it will keep these lands in public ownership. Ranchers won't lose their grazing permits, the public won't lose their access for hunting, camping or hiking and the public trust in these lands will be preserved.

This bill is a fair one and in keeping with our Nation's longstanding commitment to wise use of its natural resources. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill. It is time to take down the for sale signs that are hanging over hundreds of thousands of acres of public lands in Colorado and other Western States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and a section-by-section analysis, be printed in their entirety in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 30

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act shall be known as the "Oil Shale Mining Claims Conversion Act".

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with respect to any oil shale mining claim located prior to enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. Sec. 181, et seq.; 41 Stat. 437); no patent for such claim shall be issued after January 25, 1989, except for those claims for which a patent had been fully complied with by such date.

SEC. 3. (a) The owner of any valid oil shale mining claim located pursuant to the General Mining Law of 1872, as amended (30 U.S.C. Sec. 22, et. seq.; 17 Stat. 91) prior to enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 shall make an election under subsection (b) or subsection (c) of this section. The election shall be made within 180 days after the enactment of this Act. Failure to make an election within such period shall be deemed conclusively to constitute an abandonment of the oil shale claim. Not later than thirty days after the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall notify the owner of each such claim of the election required under this subsection.

(b) The holder of a claim required to make an election under this section may elect to convert such claim to a lease. Such lease shall be issued within 60 days after any such election and administered in accordance with those provisions of the Mineral Leasing Act, as amended, applicable to leases for deposits of oil shale, except as follows:

(1) the term of the lease shall be for 20 years and for so long thereafter as shale oil is produced annually in commercial quantities from the lease;

(2) the acreage limitations contained in section 21(a) (30 U.S.C. Sec. 241(a)) shall not apply;

(3) the first and second provisos of section 21(a) shall not apply;

(4) the limitation on the number of leases to be granted to any one person, association, or corporation contained in section 21(a) shall not apply; and

(5) the royalty shall be not less than 12½ per centum in amount or value of production removed or sold from the lease.

(c) The holder of a claim required to make an election under this section may elect to maintain the claim by complying with the mining laws of the United States and with the provisions of this Act, including the following:

(1) notwithstanding any other provision of law, commencing with the date of enactment of this provision, on each claim $1000 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each and every year. The failure to fulfil this requirement each and every year shall be deemed conclusively to constitute an abandonment of the oil shale mining claim.

(2) notwithstanding any other provision of law, in addition to the requirements set forth in Section 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. Sec. 1744; 90 Stat. 2769), the owner of an unpatented oil shale mining claim shall file annually in the office of the Bureau of Land Management designated by the Secretary of the Interior an affidavit of assessment work performed thereon. The failure to file the affidavit shall be deemed conclusively to constitute an abandonment of the oil shale mining claim.

SEC. 4. The Mineral Leasing Act, as amended (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.; 41 Stat. 437) is amended by inserting after section 44, the following new section:

"SEC. 45. Prohibition on Lease Issuance. "The Secretary shall not issue, or approve the assignment of, a lease or leases under the terms of this Act to any person, association, corporation, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or person controlled by or under common control with such person, association, or corporation, where any such entity holds an oil shale mining claim located under the General Mining Law of 1872 (30 U.S.C. 22, et seq.; 17 Stat. 91).".

SEC. 5. In addition to other applicable requirements, any person who holds a lease pursuant to subsection 3(b) of this Act or who maintains an oil shale mining claim pursuant to subsection 3(c) of this Act shall be required to reclaim the site subject to such lease or claim and to post a bond before disturbance of the site to guarantee such reclamation. Any person who holds a lease issued or readjusted pursuant to section 21 of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 after the date of enactment of this Act shall also be subject to such requirements. The Secretary of the Interior shall promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to implement this section.

SUMMARY OF OIL SHALE MINING CLAIM LEGISLATION

Section 1 states the short title.

Section 2 of the bill provides that no patent for any oil shale mining claim located prior to enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act shall be issued after January 25, 1989, except for those claims for which a patent application had been filed and all requirements for a patent has been fully complied with by such date.

Subsection 3(a) requires that the owner of any such oil shale claim shall make an election under subsection (b) or subsection (c) of section 3 within 180 days after the enactment of this Act. Failure of the owner to make an election within such period shall be deemed conclusively to constitute an abandonment of the oil shale claim. Not later than thirty days after the enactment of subsection 3(a), the Secretary is required to notify the owner of each such claim of the election required under subsection 3(a).

Subsection 3(b) provides that the holder of a claim required to make an election may elect to convert such claim to a lease. Such lease is to be administered in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Mineral Leasing Act, with certain specified exceptions.

Subsection 3(c) of the bill provides that the holder of a claim required to make an election may elect to maintain the claim by complying with the mining laws of the United States and with specified provisions of this Act, including: (1) commencing with the date of enactment, on each claim $1000 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each and every year; and (2) in addition to the requirements set forth in Section 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, the owner of an unpatented oil shale mining claim shall file annually in the office of the Bureau of Land Management designated by the Secretary of the Interior an affidavit of assessment work performed thereon.

Section 4 amends the Mineral Leasing Act to provide that the Secretary shall not issue, or approve the assignment of, a lease or leases under the terms of the bill to any entity that holds an oil shale mining claim located under the General Mining Law of 1872.

Section 5 requires that any person who holds a lease or maintains an oil shale claim pursuant to this Act shall be required to reclaim the site subject to such lease or claim and to post a bond before disturbance of the site to guarantee such reclamation. Any person who holds a lease issued or readjusted pursuant to section 21 of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 after the date of enactment of this Act shall also be subject to such requirements.●

By Mr. FORD:

S. 31. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to minimize the impact on State and local governments of unexpected provisions of legislation proposing the imposition of large unfunded costs on such governments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

IMPACT OF LEGISLATION ON STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am pleased to be reintroducing legislation to create a procedural safeguard against federally mandated spending programs which impose major new costs on State and local governments. This bill is identical to legislation I introduced in the 100th Congress as S. 933.

As a former Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, I am concerned that the Federal Government sometimes asks State and local governments to assume responsibilities and deliver services without any consideration of how such mandates will affect our constituents as State and local taxpayers. In these times of Federal budgetary restraint, the tendency to shift the costs of providing services from the Federal Government to State and local governments is creating unfunded mandates.

The legislation I introduce today does not prohibit Congress from imposing unfunded mandates upon State and local governments. It simply establishes a procedural red flag to ensure that we are fully aware of the true fiscal impact of the requirements Congress imposes upon these governments. This bill would create a point of order against legislation which imposes a net cost of $50 million or more on States and localities. However, action taken pursuant to a sequester order under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings would not be subject to such a point of order.

The bill would also expand existing provisions of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide that the House and Senate Budget Committees, in conjunction with the report on the budget resolution, conduct an analysis of the impact of budgetary decisions on State and local governments. This provision will ensure that we in Congress are aware of the fiscal impact of our actions on not just the Federal deficit but on our State and local governments as well.

I continue to be concerned about the abrupt termination of the General Revenue Sharing Program and the impact continuing Federal cuts in other programs have had on our State and local governments. Revenue sharing provided one of the most efficient and effective means of financial assistance to our States and localities in meeting the costs of unfunded Federal mandates such as environmental protection. This bill will not replace those dollars, nor will it guarantee that further cuts in Federal programs will not be made. But it will ensure that we in Congress do not act to terminate programs or mandate new services without knowing the costs we are imposing on State and local governments.

This legislation is a small gesture on the part of Congress in recognition of the important role our partners in State and local governments play in providing necessary services to our constituents. As we continue to reduce Federal assistance to State and local governments for responsibilites and services we demand from them, the very least we can do is to carefully understand and recognize the costs we impose upon them.

This bill was supported in the 100th Congress by the National Governors' Association, the National League of Cities, the National Conference of State Legislatures, the National Association of Counties, The United States Conference of Mayors, the National Association of Towns and Townships, and the Kentucky Municipal League. I urge my colleagues to join with me in cosponsoring this legislation and send a message to our constituents back home that we will carefully weigh our actions before we shift financial burdens on to State and local governments, and ultimately the taxpayers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 31

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION IMPOSING LARGE UNFUNDED COSTS ON STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

Section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) POINT OF ORDER.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided by paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill or resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, which would impose any duty or requirement on State or local governments which in the judgment of the Director of the Congressional Budget Office is likely to result in an annual cost to State and local governments of $50,000,000 or more with respect to any particular program, project, or activity.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any bill or resolution, including any amendment thereto or conference report thereon, which is in compliance with any order issued under section 252(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.".

SEC. 2. IDENTIFICATION IN COMMITTEE REPORTS ACCOMPANYING BUDGET RESOLUTIONS OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN FEDERAL AND PROGRAMS TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

Paragraph (7) of subsection (e) of section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", including changes in federal aid programs respecting State and local governments on a program-by-program basis".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act and shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1991.●

S. 32. A bill to establish constitutional procedures for the imposition of the sentence of death, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary

FEDERAL DEATH PENALTY ACT OF 1989

● Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as the 101st Congress convenes, I am introducing a bill that establishes constitutional procedures for the imposition of the death penalty and provides the death penalty for certain Federal offenses. The death penalty is not a new issue for the Senate. In the 100th Congress, as part of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, legislation was enacted which provides constitutional procedures for the implementation of the death penalty in cases involving certain drug related murders and killing of law enforcement officers.

Regarding constitutional procedures, this bill provides procedures similar to those put in place by the death penalty included in the drug bill. Currently, numerous Federal statutes provide that a sentence of death may be imposed if a person is found guilty. However, the reality is that the death penalty cannot be imposed because constitutional procedures for imposing such a sentence have not existed. The 1972 Supreme Court decision of Furman versus Georgia rendered the Federal dealth penalty procedures unconstitutional. Subsequently, in a series of landmark decisions handed down in 1976, the Supreme Court determined that the death penalty was constitutional when imposed under certain procedures specifically designed to guard against the jury using its unfettered discretion. The Supreme Court has subsequently handed down numerous decisions clarifying the circumstances and means by which the death penalty may be implemented.

In the past, I have undertaken numerous efforts in the Senate to establish procedures which satisfy the constitutional standards set by the Supreme Court. The bill I am offering today comports with the constitutional requirements outlined by the Supreme Court and establishes the procedures for the imposition of the death penalty for the numerous Federal crimes that currently authorize a sentence of death.

Briefly, I will discuss these procedures. The bill mandates a bifurcated process which the factfinder must follow when determining whether a sentence of death is justified. This process consists of a first hearing to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant and a second hearing to determine whether the death penalty should be imposed if the defendant is found guilty.

Additionally, this bill requires that in order to seek a sentence of death, the Government must give notice to the defendant within a reasonable time before the trial is initiated. The Government must also identify in that notice the statutory aggravating factors it intends to prove. As well, the sentencing hearing would be held before the same jury which determined the guilt of the defendant, unless the defendant requests and the Government agrees to have the hearing before the trial judge alone.

The factfinder, whether the jury or judge, in its deliberation following the sentencing hearing, would have to make a series of determinations before a sentence of death could be imposed. First, depending upon the crime involved, the factfinder must determine that special threshold requirements exist, such as the defendant intentionally killed the victim or the defendant intentionally engaged in conduct which the defendant knew would create a grave risk of death to a person. If none are found to exist, a sentence other than death would have to be imposed. Second, if the required threshold factors are found to exist, the factfinder would have to make a special finding as to the existence of a statutory aggravating factor presented at the sentencing hearing. All members of the jury must find the existence of at least one aggravating factor, although they need not agree upon the same one, in order to move onto a final weighing process. If any one member of the jury fails to find the existence of an aggravating factor, a sentence other than death would have to be imposed. Only those aggravating factors found to exist by a majority of the jury may be considered in the final weighing process.

Finally, the deliberation moves to the third step, the final weighing process. Here the jury or judge will weigh all of the aggravating factors against all the mitigating factors to determine whether the aggravating factors sufficiently outweigh the mitigating factors. During this final process, any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such factor established for purposes of the final weighing as to whether the death penalty should be applied, regardless of the number of jurors who believe the factor has been established. If the jury or judge does in fact determine that the aggravating factors sufficiently outweigh the mitigating factors, a death sentence could then be appropriately imposed.

In addition, this bill also contains provisions which prohibit the imposition of a sentence of death on a person who was less than 18 years of age at the time of the offense.

As well as applying these constitutional procedures to crimes where the death penalty is already authorized, this bill authorizes the death penalty for the following offenses: First, certain attempts to assassinate the President; second, murder by a Federal prisoner serving a life term in a Federal correctional institution, third, hostage taking situations where death results to the hostage, or to a person attempting to rescue a hostage or apprehend the hostage takers; fourth, murder for hire and murder in aid of racketeering activity; and fifth, genocide where death results. With the exception of the genocide provision, these provisions were all contained in similar bills introduced in the 99th and 100th Congresses.

In closing, the death penalty is a familiar issue to the Senate. In the 98th Congress, the Senate approved a death penalty bill which is essentially the same as the bill I offer today. That bill passed by an overwhelming vote of 63 to 32. In the 99th Congress the Senate Judiciary Committee approved a bill virtually identical to this bill. Finally, in the 100th session, Congress considered and passed these much needed procedures as part of the drug bill. This action on the part of the 100th Congress was a valuable first step. However, we did not go far enough. The legislation enacted only permits imposition of the death penalty for those who murder law enforcement officers and for those who commit certain drug related murders. It is time for Congress to broaden the category of offenses for which the death penalty should be applied such as the killing or attempted killing of the President, certain acts of treason and espionage, and the crime of genocide. We should not hesitate any longer. The law abiding citizens and this Nation demand action and they demand it now. I urge my colleagues to take swift action on this vital legislation.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"A defendant who has been found guilty of—

"(a) an offense described in section 794 or section 2381 of this title;

"(b) an offense described in section 1751(c) of this title, if the offense, as determined beyond a reasonable doubt at the hearing under section 3593, constitutes an attempt to kill the President of the United States and results in bodily injury to the President or comes dangerously close to causing the death of the President; or

"(c) any other offense for which a sentence of death is provided, if the defendant, as determined beyond a reasonable doubt at the hearing under section 3593—

"(1) intentionally killed the victim;

"(2) intentionally inflicted serious bodily injury that resulted in the death of the victim;

"(3) intentionally participated in an act, contemplating that the life of a person would be taken or intending that lethal force would be used in connection with a person, other than one of the participants in the offense, and the victim died as a direct result of the act; or

"(4) intentionally and specifically engaged in an act, knowing that the act created a grave risk of death to a person, other than one of the participants in the offense, such that participation in the act constituted a reckless disregard for human life and the victim died as a direct result of the act, shall be sentenced to death if, after consideration of the factors set forth in section 3592 in the course of a hearing held pursuant to section 3593, it is determined that imposition of a sentence of death is justified; provided that no person may be sentenced to death who was less than 18 years of age at the time of the offense.

"§ 3592. Factors to be considered in determining whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) MITIGATING FACTORS.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for any offense, the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following mitigating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) the defendant's mental capacity was significantly impaired, although the impairment was not such as to constitute a defense to prosecution;

"(2) the defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, although not such duress as would constitute a defense to prosecution; and

"(3) the defendant was an accomplice whose participation in the offense was relatively minor.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider whether any other mitigating factor exists.

"(b) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR ESPIONAGE AND TREASON.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591(a), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) the defendant has previously been convicted of another offense involving espionage or treason for which either a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute;

"(2) in the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of substantial danger to the national security; and

"(3) in the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor exists.

"(c) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR HOMICIDE AND FOR ATTEMPTED MURDER OF THE PRESIDENT.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591 (b) or (c), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) the death, or injury resulting in death, occurred during the commission or attempted commission of, or during the immediate flight from the commission of, an offense under section 751 (prisoners in custody of institution or officer), section 794 (gathering or delivering defense information to aid foreign government), section 844(d) (transportation of explosives in interstate commerce for certain purposes), section 844(f) (destruction of Government property in interstate commerce by explosives), section 1118 (prisoners serving life term), section 1201 (kidnaping), or section 2381 (treason) of this title, or section 902 (i) or (n) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1472 (i) or (n)) (aircraft piracy);

"(2) the defendant has previously been convicted of another Federal or State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or a sentence of death was authorized by statute;

"(3) the defendant has previously been convicted of two or more Federal or State offenses, punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury or death upon another person;

"(4) the defendant, in the commission of the offense, or in escaping apprehension for the violation of the offense, knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim of the offense;

"(5) the defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner;

"(6) the defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value;

"(7) the defendant committed the offense as consideration for the receipt, or in the expectation of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value;

"(8) the defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation to cause the death of a person or commit an act of terrorism;

"(9) the defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the distribution of a controlled substance;

"(10) the victim was partially vulnerable due to old age, youth, or infirmity;

"(11) the defendant had previously been convicted of violating title II or title III of the Controlled Substances Act for which a sentence of 5 or more years may be imposed or had previously been convicted of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise;

"(12) the defendant violated section 408(e) of the Controlled Substances Act to the extent that the conduct described in section 408(c) of such Act was a violation of section 405 of such Act; or

"(13) the defendant committed the offense against—

"(A) the President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice President, the Vice-President-elect, the Vice-President-designate, or, if there is no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession to the office of the President of the United States, or any person who is acting as President under the Constitution and laws of the United States;

"(B) a chief of state, head of government, or the political equivalent, of a foreign nation;

"(C) a foreign official listed in section 1116(b)(3)(A) of this title, if he is in the United States on official business; or

"(D) a Federal public servant who is a judge, a law enforcement officer, or an employee of a United States penal or correctional institution—

"(i) while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties;

"(ii) because of the performance of his official duties; or

"(iii) because of his status as a public servant.

For purposes of this subparagraph, a 'law enforcement officer' is a public servant authorized by law or by a Government agency or Congress to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, or prosecution of an offense.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor exists.

"§ 3593. Special hearing to determine whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) NOTICE BY THE GOVERNMENT.—If, in a case involving an offense described in section 3591, the attorney for the government believes that the circumstances of the offense are such that a sentence of death is justified under this chapter, he shall, a reasonable time before the trial, or before acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, or at such time thereafter as the court may permit upon a showing of good cause, sign and file with the court, and serve on the defendant, a notice—

"(1) stating that the government believes that the circumstances of the offense are such that, if the defendant is convicted, a sentence of death is justified under this chapter and that the government will seek the sentence of death; and

"(2) setting forth the aggravating factor or factors that the government, if the defendant is convicted, proposes to prove as justifying a sentence of death.

The court may permit the attorney for the government to amend the notice upon a showing of good cause.

"(b) HEARING BEFORE A COURT OR JURY.—If the attorney for the government has filed a notice as required under subsection (a) and the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense described in section 3591, the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or another judge if that judge is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(1) before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt;

"(2) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(A) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(B) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(C) the jury that determined the defendant's guilt was discharged for good cause; or

"(D) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, reconsideration of the sentence under this section is necessary; or

"(3) before the court alone, upon the motion of the defendant and with the approval of the attorney for the government.

A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (2) shall consist of twelve members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate, with the approval of the court, that it shall consist of a lesser number.

"(c) PROOF OF MITIGATING AND AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—Notwithstanding rule 32(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, when a defendant is found guilty or pleads guilty to an offense under section 3591, no presentence report shall be prepared. At the sentencing hearing, information may be presented as to any matter relevant to the sentence, including any mitigating or aggravating factor permitted or required to be considered under section 3592. Information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits if the hearing is held before a jury or judge not present during the trial. Any other information relevant to a mitigating or aggravating factor may be presented by either the attorney for the government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The government and the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in the case of imposing a sentence of death. The government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of any aggravating factor is on the government, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established by a preponderance of the information.

"(d) RETURN OF SPECIAL FINDINGS.—The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return a special finding as to each mitigating and aggravating factor, concerning which information is presented at the hearing, required to be considered under section 3592. The jury must find the existence of an aggravating factor by a unanimous vote, although it is unnecessary that there be a unanimous vote on any specific or aggravating factor if a majority of the jury finds the existence of such a specific factor. A finding with respect to a mitigating factor may be made by one or more members of the jury and any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such a factor established for purposes of this section, regardless of the number of jurors who consider that the factor has been established.

"(e) RETURN OF A FINDING CONCERNING A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—If, in the case of—

"(1) an offense described in section 3591(a), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(b) is found to exist; or

"(2) an offense described in section 3591 (b) or (c), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(c) is found to exist;

the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether all the aggravating factors found to exist sufficiently outweigh all the mitigating factors found to exist to justify a sentence of death, or, in the absence of a mitigating factor, whether the aggravating factors alone are sufficient to justify a sentence of death. Based upon this consideration, the jury by unanimous vote, or if there is no jury, the court, shall return a finding as to whether a sentence of death is justified.

"(f) SPECIAL PRECAUTION TO ASSURE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, prior to the return of a finding under subsection (e), shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether a sentence of death is justified, it shall not consider the race, color, national origin, creed, or sex of the defendant. The jury, upon return of a finding under subsection (e), shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that consideration of the race, color, national origin, creed, or sex of the defendant was not involved in reaching the juror's individual decision.

"§ 3594. Imposition of a sentence of death

"Upon a finding under section 3593(e) that a sentence of death is justified, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Upon a finding under section 3593(e) that a sentence of death is not justified, or under section 3593(d) that no aggravating factor required to be found exists, the court shall impose any sentence other than death that is authorized by law. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offense is life imprisonment, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without parole.

"§ 3595. Review of a sentence of death

"(a) APPEAL.—In a case in which a sentence of death is imposed, the sentence shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal must be filed within the time specified for the filing of a notice of appeal. An appeal under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all other cases.

"(b) REVIEW.—The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case, including—

"(1) the evidence submitted during the trial;

"(2) the information submitted during the sentencing hearing;

"(3) the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing; and

"(4) the special findings returned under section 3593(d).

"(c) DECISION AND DISPOSITION.—

"(1) If the court of appeals determines that—

"(A) the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor; and

"(B) the information supports the special finding of the existence of an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592;

it shall affirm the sentence.

"(2) In any other case, the court of appeals shall remand the case for reconsideration under section 3593.

"(3) The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death under this section.

"§ 3596. Implementation of a sentence of death

"A person who has been sentenced to death pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and for review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States marshal, who shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed. If the law of such State does not provide for implementation of a sentence of death, the court shall designate another State, the law of which does so provide, and the sentence shall be implemented in the latter State in the manner prescribed by such law. A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"§ 3597. Use of State facilities

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A United States marshal charged with supervising the implementation of a sentence of death may use appropriate State or local facilities for the purpose, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such an official employs for the purpose, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"(b) EXCUSE OF AN EMPLOYEE ON MORAL OR RELIGIOUS GROUNDS.—No employee of any State department of corrections or the Federal Bureau of Prisons and no employee providing services to that department or bureau under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment, or contractual obligation to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participation in executions' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for execution and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.".

(b) REPEAL.—Sections 3566 and 3567 of title 18, United States Code, are hereby repealed.

(c) AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—(1) The chapter analysis of part II of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new item after the item relating to chapter 227:

"228. Death sentence ..... 3591".

(2) The section analysis of chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by amending the items relating to sections 3566 and 3567 to read as follows:

"3566. Repealed.

"3567. Repealed.".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING CHANGES IN TITLE 18.

(a) AIRCRAFTS AND MOTOR VEHICLES.—Section 34 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the comma after "imprisonment for life" and inserting a period and striking the remainder of the section.

(b) ESPIONAGE.—Section 794(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the period at the end of the section and inserting ", except that the sentence of death shall not be imposed unless the jury or, if there is no jury, the court, further finds that the offense directly concerned nuclear weaponry, military spacecraft or satellites, early warning systems, or other means of defense or retaliation against large-scale attack; war plans; communications intelligence or cryptographic information; or any other major weapons system or major element of defense strategy.".

(c) EXPLOSIVE MATERIALS.—(1) Section 844(d) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "as provided in section 34 of this title".

(2) Section 844(f) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "as provided in section 34 of this title".

(3) Section 844(i) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the words "as provided in section 34 of this title".

(d) MURDER.—(1) The second undesignated paragraph of section 1111(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Whoever is guilty of murder in the first degree shall be punished by death or by imprisonment for life;".

(2) Section 1116(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "any such person who is found guilty of murder in the first degree shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life, and".

(e) KIDNAPPING.—Section 1201(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "or for life" the following: "and, if the death of any person results, shall be punished by death or life imprisonment".

(f) NONMAILABLE INJURIOUS ARTICLES.—The last paragraph of section 1716 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the comma after "imprisonment for life" and inserting a period and striking the remainder of the paragraph.

(g) PRESIDENTIAL ASSASSINATIONS.—Subsection (c) of section 1751 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Whoever attempts to kill or kidnap any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be punished (1) by imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or (2) by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, if the conduct constitutes an attempt to kill the President of the United States and results in bodily injury to the President or otherwise comes dangerously close to causing the death of the President.".

(h) WRECKING TRAINS.—The second to the last undesignated paragraph of section 1992 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the comma after "imprisonment for life" and inserting a period and striking the remainder of the section.

(i) BANK ROBBERY.—Section 2113(e) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "or punished by death if the verdict of the jury shall so direct" and inserting "or if death results shall be punished by death or life imprisonment".

(j) HOSTAGE TAKING.—Section 1203(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "or for life" the following: "and, if the death of any person results, shall be punished by death or life imprisonment".

(k) RACKETEERING.—(1) Section 1952A(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "and if death results, shall be subject to imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or shall be fined not more than $50,000, or both" and inserting "and if death results, shall be punished by death or life imprisonment, or shall be fined not more than $250,000, or both".

(2) Section 1952B(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(1) for murder, by death or life imprisonment, or a fine of not more than $250,000, or both; and for kidnapping, by imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or a fine of not more than $250,000, or both;".

(m) GENOCIDE.—Section 1091(b)(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "a fine of not more than $1,000,000 or imprisonment for life," and inserting ", where death results, a fine of not more than $1,000,000, or imprisonment for life or a sentence of death,".

SEC. 4. CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL AVIATION ACT OF 1954.

Section 903 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1473), is amended by striking subsection (c).

SEC. 5. CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT.

Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848) is amended by striking subsections (g) through (r).

SEC. 6. APPLICABILITY TO UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE.

The provisions of chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code, as added by this Act, shall not apply to prosecutions under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. 801).

SEC. 7. MURDER BY A FEDERAL PRISONER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 51 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 1118. Murder by a Federal prisoner

"(a) Whoever, while confined in a Federal correctional institution under a sentence for a term of life imprisonment, murders another shall be punished by death or by life imprisonment without the possibility of parole.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'Federal correctional institution' means any Federal prison, Federal correctional facility, Federal community program center, or Federal halfway house;

"(2) the term 'term of life imprisonment' means a sentence for the term of natural life, a sentence commuted to natural life, an indeterminate term of a minimum of at least fifteen years and a maximum of life, or an unexecuted sentence of death; and

"(3) the term 'murders' means committing first degree or second degree murder as defined by section 1111 of this title.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The chapter analysis for chapter 51 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"1118. Murder by a Federal prisoner.".●

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor Senator THURMOND's bill which establishes rational procedures for the imposition of the sentence of death in specified limited circumstances. This bill is carefully and narrowly drafted to comport with U.S. Supreme Court decisions on capital punishment.

The death penalty issue is not new to Congress. Last term, Congress passed the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 which provides the death penalty for the murders of law enforcement officers and for certain drug-related murders. In the 98th Congress, Senator THURMOND sponsored a death penalty bill, very similar to the one proposed today, which passed the Senate. In the 96th and 97th Congresses, I introduced death penalty legislation, cosponsored by Senator THURMOND. Senator THURMOND's hard work and careful handling of the death penalty legislation has produced a much improved bill from the original introduced in 1973 after Furman versus Georgia.

The issue and arguments surrounding the use of the death penalty are among the most familiar in American debate. Polls consistently show that two-thirds of the American electorate favor the death penalty; and in my home State of Arizona, 81 percent of the people support a death penalty for certain offenses. A clear majority of the American people want a Federal death penalty statute. The courts and Congress have exhausted the debate on the death penalty and it is now time for action. The Federal death penalty bill is a significant step toward resolving the death penalty issue.

The primary function of a society is to protect its members from threats upon their safety, and there is no greater threat than those who intentionally murder others. But while our criminal justice system exists to protect people, it also must insure that a criminal's punishment is just. Accordingly, we must evaluate the death penalty by examining whether it advances the aims of punishment.

It is true that the rehabilitative function of punishment is not advanced by the death penalty. However, there are serious questions about the effectiveness of rehabilitation when dealing with the type of hardened, vicious criminals that typically receive the death penalty. A 1987 study by the U.S. Department of Justice reveals that 68 percent of death row inmates in the United States had prior felony convictions, and 11 percent had prior convictions for homicide at some point we must recognize that these repeated killers cannot be rehabilitated. The Federal Death Penalty Act requires that the sentencing party consider mitigating and aggravating factors which will help to insure that those with the potential for rehabilitation will not receive the death penalty.

The most convincing justification for punishment generally, and for capital punishment specifically, is deterrence. And capital punishment is the most effective specific deterrent possible. If we do not execute murderers, how are we to stop them from killing again? Without the death penalty the criminal justice system is faced with a dangerous dilemma. If the lock the criminals away for life, with no chance of parole, the criminals have nothing to lose by attacking prison guards or other inmates, or attempting escape. On the other hand, if they attempt to maintain prison security with parole programs, they insure that some murderers will eventually be unleashed on society. Few things outrage the public more than stories of paroled or escaped murderers that return to society only to terrorize it by killing again. Just this week Florida executed the notorious Ted Bundy, a man responsible for the deaths of between 30 and 100 people. Bundy escaped twice from jail, the last escape ending with the murder of three more people including a 12-year-old girl for whose killing he received the death penalty. It is only now that he is dead that we can say with assurance, Ted Bundy will never kill again.

In the absence of reliable statistical evidence, great weight should be placed on the experience of those who are most frequently called upon to deal with murderers and potential murderers and who are thus in the best position to judge the effectiveness of the remedy—our law enforcement officials. The vast majority of these officials continue to favor the retention of the death penalty as a deterrent to violent crime. As Sheriff Peter Pitchess of Los Angeles County testified before the California Senate Committee on the Judiciary:

I can tell you that the overwhelming majority of people in law enforcement—the ones who are dealing with these criminals, the ones who are seeing them not as statistics but real live human beings, and who are studying their human behavior—are overwhelmingly convinced that capital punishment is a deterrent.

The issue, for our purposes here, has been definitely resolved by the Supreme Court in Gregg versus Georgia where it concluded that it is appropriate for a legislature to consider deterrence as a justification for the imposition of the death penalty. As the court in Gregg states:

Although some of the studies suggest that the death penalty may not function as a significantly greater deterrent than lesser penalties, there is no convincing empirical evidence either supporting or refuting this view. We may nevertheless assume safely that there are murderers, such as those who act in passion, for whom the threat of death has little or no deterrent effect. But for many others, the death penalty undoubtedly is a significant deterrent.

Capital punishment also serves the legitimate function of retribution. It is through retribution that society expresses its outrage and sense of revulsion toward those who undermine the foundations of civilized society by disregarding its laws. Society has a right, indeed a duty, to the now silent victims to exact the fullest possible punishment.

Critics of capital punishment sometimes assert that the United States is the only modern, industrialized nation with the death penalty. But the United States also has the highest murder rate of any industrialized nation. A great nation recognizes its problems and fashions its own remedies. Nearly two-thirds of the States have the death penalty and the U.S. Supreme Court has upheld capital punishment. If the Federal Government needs a reminder of the violence in America it only needs to look in its own backyard, because this year the Nation's Capital has become the murder capital.

Mr. Chairman, the Federal Death Penalty Act is a necessary weapon in the war to rid the streets and sidewalks of America from violent crime. It is with these thoughts in mind that I lend my support to the death penalty bill introduced today by Senator THURMOND.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have always been an ardent supporter of the Federal death penalty. I firmly believe that the death penalty is a deterrent to crime as well as a legitimate expression of society's outrage at those individuals who commit capital offenses.

THE DRUG BILL

Last year, the Senate passed and the President signed into law the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. This bill has given us some needed firepower in our war on drugs by authorizing the death penalty for anyone who murders a law enforcement officer or who commits a murder while engaging in a drug-related felony. I believe that our neighborhoods and local communities are safer places to live as a result.

THE DEATH PENALTY ACT

The Federal Death Penalty Act of 1989—introduced today by Senator THURMOND—builds upon the 1988 drug bill by authorizing the death penalty for other crimes—crimes that, in my view, are so heinous that they deserve a punishment no less than death. These crimes include: First, certain assassination attempts on the President; second, murder by a Federal prisoner serving a life term; third, murder-for-hire and murder in aid of racketeering activity; fourth, hostage-taking resulting in death; and fifth, genocide. Similar bills imposing the death penalty for these offenses were introduced in the 99th and 100th Congresses.

The Federal Death Penalty Act also establishes certain sentencing procedures for the imposition of the death penalty—procedures that satisfy the often complicated constitutional standards developed by the Supreme Court over the past 15 years.

A clear enunciation of constitutionally sound sentencing procedures has been sorely needed ever since the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Furman versus Georgia. In this case, the Court struck down as unconstitutional the sentencing procedures for the imposition of the Federal death penalty.

Unfortunately, since the Court's decision in Furman, adequate sentencing procedures have not been adopted by Congress for most Federal capital crimes. As a result, many Federal statutes today authorize the death sentence, but these sentences cannot be carried out. The Federal Death Penalty Act will go a long way toward solving this problem.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, we read about crime—violent crime—everyday in our newspapers. But as crime increases, so does the public outcry for an effective and fair Federal death penalty.

The Federal Death Penalty Act introduced today will help us win back our neighborhoods and help to ensure the safety of our citizens. They deserve no less. It will also help to ensure that the penalties proscribed for Federal capital crimes—penalties that have already been approved by Congress and signed into law by the President—will indeed be carried out.

I urge the Senate's speedy consideration and adoption of this very important legislation.

By Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. COATS):

S. 33. A bill to provide that each item of any appropriation measure that is agreed to by both Houses of the Congress in the same form be enrolled as a separate bill or joint resolution for presentation to the President; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

LINE ITEM VETO

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on behalf of nine cosponsors and on my own behalf, I am introducing legislation to grant the President, for a trial period of 2 years, line-item veto authority in appropriation bills.

This legislation provides authority for all items in appropriation bills to be enrolled and presented to the President as separate bills. The President would be able to exercise authority to approve or disapprove each piece of legislation rather than as one omnibus package or bill.

There are two important points to be made in justification for this legislation. First, the Nation's fiscal affairs are in a bad way, while the so-called budget process, originally conceived to preserve the integrity of our finances, has become ineffective, unwieldy and in most recent years, irrelevant.

With regard to our finances, rhetoric and popular perception notwithstanding, Federal spending continues to increase and the Government continues to claim a larger and larger share of the gross national product. Indeed, sometime this summer, the President will be forced to request that Congress again increase the statutory debt ceiling. In constant dollars, Federal spending has climbed from $529 billion in fiscal year 1974 to $879 billion in fiscal year 1988. As a percentage of GNP, outlays have risen from 19 percent in 1974 to 22.3 percent in 1988. It took over 200 years for the total Federal debt to reach $1 trillion. But this coming fiscal year, in 1990, the debt is expected to exceed $3 trillion.

With the notable exception of last year, Congress' track record on the budget has been abysmal. Prior to enactment of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974—allegedly full of deadlines and discipline—it was unusual for all 12 months of a fiscal year to go by without Congress passing 13 appropriation bills. These days, of course, the appearance of a massive continuing resolution is a certain harbinger of autumn in Washington.

Until fiscal year 1975, continuing resolutions were both rare and relatively small. For instance, during the entire period between 1968 and 1974, only 2 of the 13 separate appropriations bills which Congress must pass each year were included in continuing resolutions. There is a sharp contrast in the post Budget Act era when CR's began to get larger and larger. From 1975 to 1985, a total of 27 of the separate appropriations bills were included in continuing resolutions. Then, of course, there were the 2 years—1986 and 1987—when not a single separate appropriations bill was enacted. Consequently, the President is faced with a mammoth bill containing billions of dollars for programs he has not requested. A perfect case in point was the fiscal year 1987 CR which contained $604 billion for Federal programs and weighed 43 pounds. That presents the President and the country with an untenable situation. With the clock ticking, the President must either sign the bill or shut down much of the Government.

The perpetuation of this process has left the Nation poorer, in more ways than one. First, needless and unnecessary spending is enacted, wastefully draining the Treasury. Second, and more fundamentally, the accountability which our forefathers so carefully incorporated into our system of Government was badly undermined.

I believe the line-item veto is one part of the solution. It will provide a tool for the President in fighting unnecessary spending and it will ensure a greater degree of accountability on the part of the Congress and the President to the people. The idea is neither new, nor radical. Nor is it in any sense partisan. Interestingly, both Ulysses S. Grant and Jefferson Davis were among the earliest advocates for line-item veto. Moreover, at one level of our political institutions, the line-item veto is ubiquitous and effective. Democratic and Republican Governors in 43 States—from Massachusetts to California—have some form of item-veto authority.

One of the canards most often heard with regard to the line-item veto is that it will result in a wholesale shift in power from the Congress to the Executive. Even absent the backdrop of two decades of congressional encroachment—from the War Powers Resolution to the Budget Act itself—the assertion is ridiculous. The fundamental basis of this legislation is the restoration of accountability on the part of Congress.

Further, whatever relatively increased leverage the President will gain with line-item veto authority should be examined in the historical context. There can be no doubt that the enactment of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, over the veto of a President whose public support at the time was greatly undermined by other matters, eroded the Executive's power. As the former chairman of the House Budget Committee, Representative Giaimo, was quoted by noted budget expert Louis Fischer:

The Budget Act of 1974 was basically a contract whereby Congress agreed to curb its undisciplined spending habits and the President gave up his impoundment powers.

That is, Congress would establish spending limits and stick to them. In exchange, the President gave up his long held authority to impound funds—a power first exercised by Thomas Jefferson. Presidents through Nixon frequently refused to spend funds which had been appropriated by Congress for specific items. The Budget Act, in effect, stripped the President of this power and replaced it with weak rescission authority. Rescissions are wholly contingent upon the approval of the Congress, and Congress has rarely approved. In other words the Congress' rescission authority is nearly worthless.

The Budget Act ushered in the present era of fiscal madness. An important check had been removed and the balance shifted to an increasingly free wheeling Congress. As Louis Fisher noted in "The Politics of Shared Power:"

The result of the 1974 Budget Act was an irresponsible process in which neither branch could be held politically accountable.

Mr. President, my legislation is not unique. The U.S. Senate considered a nearly identical bill, introduced by Senator MATTINGLY, in 1985. This bill had 46 cosponsors and was reported without amendment from the Rules Committee. It is a relatively modest proposal. Present circumstances, I believe, make its prompt consideration compelling.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

S. 33

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ENROLLMENT OF APPROPRIATION MEASURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—When any appropriation measure is agreed to by both Houses of Congress in the same form, the Secretary of the Senate (in the case of a bill or joint resolution originating in the Senate) or the Clerk of the House of Representatives (in the case of a bill or joint resolution originating in the House of Representatives) shall cause the enrolling clerk of such House to enroll each item of such appropriation measure as a separate bill or joint resolution, as the case may be.

(b) ENROLLMENT PROCEDURES.—Each appropriation measure—

(1) shall be enrolled without substantive revision;

(2) shall conform in style and form to the applicable provisions of chapter 2 of title 1, United States Code; and

(3) shall bear the designation of the measure of which it was an item prior to such enrollment, together with such other designation as may be necessary to distinguish such bill or joint resolution from other bills or joint resolutions enrolled pursuant to this Act with respect to the same measure, it such measure.

SEC. 2. EFFECT OF SUCH ENROLLMENT.

A bill or joint resolution enrolled pursuant to this Act with respect to an item shall be deemed to be a bill under clauses 2 and 3 of section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States and shall be submitted to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate for signature and presentation to the President for approval or disapproval in the manner provided for bills and joint resolutions generally.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) the term "appropriation measure" means any general or special appropriation bill or any bill or joint resolution making supplemental, deficiency, or continuing appropriations; and

(2) the term "item" means any numbered section and any unnumbered paragraph of any appropriation measure as determined by the committee of conference for such measure, if such measure is sent to conference.

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE PERIOD.

The provisions of this Act shall apply to bills and joint resolutions agreed to by the Congress during the two-calendar-year period beginning with the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. HELMS):

S. 34. A bill to amend title 28 of the United States Code to clarify the remedial jurisdiction of inferior Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REMEDIAL JURISDICTION OF INFERIOR FEDERAL COURTS

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am introducing today, with my colleagues Senators GRASSLEY, THURMOND, SYMMS, and HELMS, the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act.

The rallying cry of the American Revolution rings as true today as it did over 200 years ago: "taxation without representation is tyranny."

But it seems the lesson our Founding Fathers taught to George the Third has not gotten through to certain latter-day tyrants of the Federal judiciary.

A Federal judge recently took it upon himself to impose an income tax surcharge and substantial increase in the property tax upon the citizens of Missouri. Let those words sink in Mr. President: an unelected, totally unaccountable judge usurping the taxing power of the democratically elected legislatures.

This is a new and alarming spectre on the American scene. Taxation by the judiciary. If we in Congress allow it to continue, we will certainly betray the trust of the Founding Fathers.

The great Chief Justice John Marshall warned us: "The power to tax involves the power to destroy." That's why the Constitution, in article I, section 8, places the tax power squarely and solely in the hands of an elected Congress. Abuse of the tax power can only be controlled when the power is in the hands of those who must stand for election.

But Federal judges are appointed for life, one member of the Supreme Court has been there since 1956, while no less than seven Presidents have come and gone. Short of impeachment, there is no way to hold Federal judges accountable for their decisions.

And when those decisions extend to the power to impose and increase taxes, the absence of accountability makes a mockery of our democracy and our Constitution. Unelected and unaccountable officials must never be allowed to wield the taxing power in America. It makes no difference whether those officials wear ermine robes or black robes.

The judge who imposed the taxes in the Missouri case felt he had leeway to devise a broad remedy because the case involved racial balancing in the public schools. But while judges may have extensive power to fashion integration remedies, they do not have the power to suspend the rest of the Constitution or to usurp the powers of the legislatures. As our distinguished colleague Senator DANFORTH wrote in an article criticizing the decision:

> If the courts have the power to tax, then is there any legislative power that can be deemed beyond the reach of the judiciary? . . . No power is more clearly legislative and popular in character than the power to tax. No power is more clearly denied to the executive and judicial branches.

The decision in Jenkins versus Missouri also demonstrates the practical consequences of this unrestrained judicial taxing power. Seeking to improve the attractiveness of magnet schools, the judge decided the new taxes were needed to fund a plan calling for lavish facilities having little to do with educational necessity: numerous olympic-sized swimming pools; a 1,875-square-foot model United Nations, with language translation facilities; a 50-acre farm with an apartment for a live-in groundskeeper; a log cabin for out-of-doors experiences; greenhouses; and a planetarium.

In these days of hard-pressed State budgets, few State legislatures would ask the taxpayers to subsidize such extravagance. If they did, the voters would soon have the opportunity to register their objections. But the voters are completely disenfranchised from the process when Federal judges seize the power to authorize, appropriate, and levy the taxes to foot the bill. And that is just what the court did in the Jenkins case.

Mr. President, Congress must act to make it clear that Federal courts do not have the power to impose or increase taxes. If we do not do so, there is no shortage of activist Federal judges who will eagerly follow the example of the Jenkins decision.

I am therefore introducing the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act. The bill is simple, direct, and reasonable. It provides that no inferior court established by Congress shall have jurisdiction to issue orders requiring Federal, State, or local government to impose any new tax or increase existing taxes.

I doubt if any Member of this body is prepared to say that Federal courts should be able to impose taxes. And not so long ago the provisions of this bill would have seemed so self-evident that legislation would have been superfluous. But we now know that is not so. Legislation is necessary to preserve the principle that Federal judges do not have the power to tax.

This bill is narrowly drawn, and should not be confused with so-called court-stripping bills which remove court jurisdiction over particular classes of cases. It is a clearly constitutional exercise of congressional power to regulate the remedial authority of the lower Federal courts.

There is ample precedent for such legislation. A notable example is the Norris-Laguardia Act, which denies the Federal courts jurisdiction to issue injunctions in cases growing out of labor disputes. The constitutionality of the Norris-Laguardia Act and similar statutes is well-established. Far from raising any constitutional problems, this bill will correct the unconstitutional practice of judges imposing taxes.

I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this legislation to prevent the tyranny of unaccountable taxing power.

Finally, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD with these remarks, copies of the following articles concerning the case of Jenkins versus Missouri: An editorial from the Richmond Times Dispatch of January 18, 1988, entitled "Usurper"; an article from the Wall Street Journal of January 5, 1988, entitled "Kansas City Judge Needs Lesson in Federalism"; and a commentary by Senator DANFORTH from the Kansas City Star of December 1, 1987, entitled "Courts Don't Have the Authority to Tax."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 34

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) a variety of effective and appropriate judicial remedies are available for the full redress of legal and constitutional violations under existing law, and that the imposition or increase of taxes by courts is neither necessary nor appropriate for the full and effective exercise of Federal court jurisdiction;

(2) The imposition or increase of taxes by judicial order constitutes an unauthorized and inappropriate exercise of the judicial power under the Constitution of the United States and is incompatible with traditional principles of American law and government and the basic American principle that taxation without representation is tyranny;

(3) Federal courts exceed the proper boundaries of their limited jurisdiction and authority under the Constitution of the United States, and impermissibly intrude on the legislative function in a democratic system of government, when they issue orders requiring the imposition of new taxes or the increase of existing taxes; and

(4) the Congress retains the authority under article III, sections 1 and 2 of the Constitution of the United States to limit and regulate the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts which it has seen fit to establish, and such authority includes the power to limit the remedial authority of inferior Federal courts.

SEC. 3. (a) Chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new section between sections 1341 and 1342, the following:

"§ 1341A. Prohibition of judicial imposition or increase of taxes.

"(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no inferior court established by Congress shall have jurisdiction to issue any remedy, order, injunction, writ, judgment, or other judicial decree requiring the Federal Government or any State or local government to impose any new tax or to increase any existing tax or tax rate.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall prohibit inferior Federal courts from ordering duly authorized remedies, otherwise within their jurisdiction, which may require expenditures by Federal, State, or local government where such expenditures are necessary to effectuate such remedies.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term "tax" includes, but is not limited to, personal income taxes; real and personal property taxes; sales and transfer taxes; estate and gift taxes; excise taxes; user taxes; corporate and business income taxes; and licensing fees or taxes.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 85 is amended by inserting between the item relating to section 1341 and the item relating to section 142, the following new item:

"1341A. Prohibition of judicial imposition or increase of taxes.".

SEC. 4. This Act and the amendments made by this Act 10 shall take effect on the date of enactment.

USURPER

When a federal judge slapped big tax increases on people living and working in Kansas City, Mo., he claimed to be acting in the interest of a worthy cause: education. The taxes, said Judge Russell Clark, were needed to finance a court-ordered—naturally—desegregation plan intended to attract whites to largely black inner-city schools in the Kansas City school district. The state has appealed his ruling.

Four times in a little more than a year, city residents had voted down tax proposals to cover the costs of construction and improvements associated with Judge Clark's plan. Apparently weary of all this democracy, he himself finally ordered an increase in local property and state income taxes on the people for their own good—this despite the fact that the U.S. Constitution enshrines the principle, for which thousands of Americans died in the Revolutionary War, that taxation should be the exclusive function of elected legislators.

Additionally, his decision was a gross violation of the constitutional prohibition against federal usurpation of the rights of states. Federal intrusion in state and local matters is nothing new, to be sure, but Judge Clark's action was especially arrogant. Writing in The Wall Street Journal, an official for the U.S. Department of Education, Charles E. M. Kolb, calls the ruling "an almost unparalleled usurpation of state and local authority. Here, an unelected federal judge assumes the power to determine the allocation of scarce public money. Whether Kansas City's voters and elected lawmakes may have wanted to use the funds he has given to the schools for more police, a new prison or better sewers apparently is irrelevant to Judge Clark."

Judge Clark, a Carter appointee, may believe that such unsurpation is justified in the cause of education, but his view of what constitutes "education" would surprise many. If his ruling stands, Kansas City taxpayers will find themselves providing the school district with, among other things:

Numerous indoor Olympic-size swimming pools;

A log cabin, which is supposed to teach children about the out-of-doors;

A 50-acre farm on which 25 acres would be used for farming (along with animals, equipment repair facility and an apartment for the groundkeeper) and the remainder would be used to simulate wilderness;

Greenhouses, a planetarium, an amphitheater and track and soccer fields;

A 1,875-square-foot model United Nations chamber complete with language translation and an area for spectators.

Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft says Judge Clark's ruling forces taxpayers to pick up the tab for a "concoction of education frills." In view of the fact that the ruling—if it stands—would strip away constitutional safeguards against Big Government-types in the judiciary and the federal government, it would diminish citizens' liberty as well as their wallets.

COURTS DON'T HAVE THE AUTHORITY TO TAX

On the other hand . . . is a guest editorial on a subject chosen by the writer. John Danforth is a Republican U.S. senator from Missouri.

Permit me to respond to your criticism of my discussion of the court order to increase taxes in Kansas City to finance a desegregation plan ("Unbecoming Oratory," Oct. 28).

In my speech, I addressed what I regarded as the fundamental issue before the Senate in the debate on Judge Bork's nomination: What kind of Supreme Court do we want? Do we want an activist court that makes public policy on its own, and does so by finding novel and strained theories of the Constitution? Or do we want a court that practices judicial restraint, and does so by interpreting faithfully the Constitution and laws enacted by elected representatives of the people? I agreed with the philosophy of judicial restraint, as did Judge Bork and the president.

Your editorial found my discussion of the Kansas City tax increase order "gratuitous." To the contrary. Not only is the tax increase order not gratuitous, it is the heart of the matter. If the courts have the power to tax, then is there any legislative power that can be deemed beyond the reach of the judicial branch?

Surely, it can be granted that the American Revolution was an event of overriding significance to the people who wrote the Constitution. The revolution was fought to establish the independence of the United States and the principle that people may not be taxed without their consent, given by elected representatives. The people who won independence found "taxation without representation" to be a "catchy" phrase, indeed.

Thus, one would expect the Constitution of the new nation to address representative taxation, and it does so. The Constitution bars taxation without representation, and it does so with absolute clarity.

No power is more clearly legislative and popular in character than the power to tax. No power is more clearly denied to the executive and judicial branches.

Courts have the power to enter orders and see that they are obeyed. But they do not have the authority to usurp fundamental powers of the other branches of government. There are things courts cannot do. Courts cannot appropriate funds or impose taxes. They cannot coin money. They cannot define their own jurisdictions. They cannot declare that a state of war exists. They cannot make treaties. They cannot raise an army and provide for a navy. These and other powers rest with other branches of government. It cannot be otherwise, if we are to respect the separation of powers established by the Constitution.

The order of the court in Kansas City with respect to taxes has been entered, and must be obeyed. I do not believe the tax order is within the proper bounds of judicial power. I believe it would be a breathtaking expansion of judicial power, were the order to be upheld on appeal.

I believe we need a sense of restraint in the federal judiciary, and that we have had enough expansion of judicial power to last us for many years. I believe the duty of the courts is to interpret the law, and not to make basis public policy in the guise of interpreting the Constitution. I believe one of the last things we need is assumption by the courts of the power to tax. The Kansas City tax order is a lesson from real life in what the debate in the Senate on Judge Bork's nomination was all about.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Jan. 5, 1988]

KANSAS CITY JUDGE NEEDS LESSON IN FEDERALISM

(By Charles E.M. Kolb)

When it comes to federalism—the proper relationship between state and federal governments—the judiciary is charged under the Constitution's 10th Amendment with ensuring that the federal government doesn't preempt the functions of state and local governments. But what happens when it is a court itself that overreaches? That's what happened in September, when a Carter-appointed federal judge in Kansas City, Mo., ordered an increase in the city's property tax and the state's income tax to finance a court-ordered desegregation plan. Judge Russell Clark's ruling declared that the court itself would "provide" the necessary money to ensure full implementation of the plan.

The court didn't stop there, however. It began micromanaging everything from the district's long-range capital-improvements plan to the quality of furniture in the schools.

In his opinion, Judge Clark explains that the court approved with only modest modifications the plans submitted by the school district. That's true. But in ratifying virtually everything the district requested, Judge Clark is forcing the state and city to pay for the district's wish list without allowing them to evaluate it.

When it came to mundane details concerning the maintenance of facilities, for example, Judge Clark substituted his own aesthetic values for those of the state, rejecting the state's plan and instead ordering adoption of the plan submitted by the school district. In his opinion, he writes: The " 'patch and repair' approach proposed by the State would not achieve suburban comparability or the visual attractiveness sought by the Court as it would result in floor coverings with unsightly sections of mismatched carpeting and title, and individual walls possessing different shades of paint."

Other items requested by the school district and adopted as part of the court's order are:

Numerous indoor Olympic-sized swimming pools;

A log cabin, supposedly to help teach about the out-of-doors;

A 50-acre farm on which 25 acres are to be farmed (complete with animals, barn, equipment-repair facility, and an apartment for the groundskeeper) while the other 25 acres are to remain fallow to simulate wilderness;

Greenhouses, a 2,000-square-foot planetarium (the existing one in Kansas City was apparently inadequate), track and soccer fields;

An amphitheater large enough for 104 children; and

A 1,875-square-foot model United Nations lab, complete with spectator area and wiring for language translation.

All this adds up to a procurement document, not a judicial opinion.

To pay for these items, the court ordered an increase in the state income tax through a 1.5% surcharge on residents and nonresidents of the school district, "including business associations, partnerships and corporations who earn salaries, wages, commissions and all other compensation and income subject to the Missouri State Income Tax for work done, services rendered and business or other activities conducted within the (school district)." The court justified the sweep of its ruling by citing its broad equity powers and noting that some former residents had left the district precisely to avoid the effects of school desegregation. Since they still worked in the surrounding area, the court concluded, it is only fair that they help defray the expenses of the plan.

Judge Clark's ruling constitutes an almost unparalleled usurpation of state and local authority. Here, an unelected federal judge assumes the power to determine the allocation of scarce public money. Whether Kansas City's voters and elected lawmakers may have wanted to use the funds he has given to the schools for more police, a new prison or better sewers apparently is irrelevant to Judge Clark.

Other federal courts in recent years have substituted their views for prevailing community standards and values, and this preemptive trend is a disturbing one. One federal court directed which of two football coaches should be hired at a local high school; another required a high school to permit a boy's homosexual lover to join him in attending the senior prom.

John Stuart Mill recognized man's disposition to impose his own opinions on others. But when federal judges behave in this fashion—in contradiction of the limits placed on their powers by the Constitution—the nation suffers.

The Constitution establishes boundaries that are sometimes overridden by activist judges eager to legislate their own public policy. Principled judicial decision making should not be a function of accident, of who is chosen to sit on a federal court.

Judge Clark's ruling only underscores the need for a reinvigorated sense of federalism and self-restraint in our judiciary.●

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, 165 years ago, Chief Justice John Marshall—the father of judicial review—wrote for the Court that "judicial power, as contradistinguished from the power of the laws, has no existence. Courts are the mere instruments of the law, and can will nothing". Osborne v. Bank of United States (1824).

This would surely be news to the people of Kansas City, MO.

You see, in 1987, a Carter-appointed Federal judge, Russell Clark, ordered an increase in the city's property tax and the State's income tax to finance a court-ordered desegregation plan. Those who thought, as the doctrines of separation of powers and federalism require, that the power to tax is clearly limited to the legislature, would be amazed to read Judge Clark's opinion in Jenkins versus Missouri.

In this case, Judge Clark ordered an increase in the State income tax through a 1.5-percent surcharge on residents and nonresidents of the Kansas City school district. Worse, the judge decided for himself how scarce public resources would be spent: on numerous indoor Olympic-size swimming pools; on a log cabin (presumably to teach about the out-of-doors); on a 50-acre farm, complete with farm animals and equipment; on greenhouses, a planetarium, track and soccer fields; and on a 1,875-square-foot model United Nations, complete with translation equipment.

This has little to do with enforcing a desegregation order or quality education and more to do with the exercise of raw judicial activism.

The Judicial Tax Prohibition Act would end such judicial micromanaging into the domain of the people. It would end this arrogant abuse of power by the Federal judiciary. It would restore the taxing authority to the people through their elected representatives—as our Constitution commands.

It provides simply that Federal courts may not exercise their jurisdiction to impose new taxes or increase existing taxes. It restores some sense of restraint to the ever-growing usurpation of power by the Federal courts. Of course, it would be preferable if judges understood they have no license to act as a kind of "Platonic Guardian," dispensing law from a throne without any sensed limits of power except what was seen—in their eyes only—to be the good of society. This proposal will advance the understanding of the proper role of the courts in a democratic society.

There is no doubt that Congress has the constitutional power to limit the authority of the Federal courts to propose such an extreme judicial remedy as a tax increase on the people. Indeed, article III, section 2 of the Constitution permits the Congress to radically limit the court's power. An unbroken line of Supreme Court authority from the 19th century tell us so. As the Court said in Cary v. Curtis, 44 U.S. 236 (1845), "the judicial power of the U.S. * * * is dependent for its distribution * * * entirely upon the action of Congress, who possess the sole power * * * of investing [the inferior courts] with jurisdiction from them in the exact degree and character which to Congress may seem proper for the public good."

But this bill introduced today is no radical limitation on the power of the judiciary. Rather, it is a carefully measured response to the excessive power grab represented by the Jenkins case. I commend Senator HUMPHREY for authoring it, and I look forward to the Judiciary Committee's prompt consideration of it.●

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. BOND, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. PRESSLER, and Mr. COCHRAN):

S. 35. A bill to provide for the establishment of rural enterprise zones, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senators PRYOR, BOND, DASCHLE, DURENBERGER, BOSCHWITZ, BURDICK, DOMENICI, GRASSLEY, PRESSLER, and COCHRAN, I am today introducing the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1989. Our bill would authorize the establishment of Federal enterprise zones in America's neediest rural communities, giving a much-needed boost to State and local development efforts.

Rural America today is experiencing an upheaval as severe as any since the Great Depression. Families are losing farms they have worked for generations. Those, who can still manage to keep their farms, are often forced to do so at extreme financial risk. Since 1980, about one-half of all farmers' income has come from sources other than the farm itself. This stunning statistic demonstrates that fewer and fewer farmers can make a living in their trade alone.

Many small rural towns can no longer hold out for better times. As tax revenues diminish, schools, libraries, and roads suffer, making economic decline even more difficult to reverse. Rural America's brightest young people are leaving their homes because they see no hope for the future. With businesses closing, there are fewer jobs available, yet more and more rural families need to find work to keep their farms and homes. Unless Congress acts to help rural communities help themselves, it may be too late to reverse the situation.

Too often, congressional efforts to aid rural America have been limited to the health of a particular industry, ignoring the fact that no single occupation drives the rural economy. In my State, for example, agriculture is the dominant rural industry. Still, over 90 percent of all rural Missourians rely on off-farm income. Clearly, the majority of rural residents need more than effective farm management policies to revive their districts. It is the time for us to create opportunities on many more fronts, including new job creation, capital investment, improved local services, and transportation. The Rural Enterprise Zone Act addresses these needs.

Drawing on legislation which I introduced in the 99th and 100th Congresses, and on the Enterprise Zone Program which has twice been approved by the Senate, our bill would authorize the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to designate up to 45 depressed rural areas as Federal enterprise zones. Only severely distressed areas—as measured by urban development action grant criteria as well as unemployment and poverty levels—would qualify for Federal incentives under this program.

Rural enterprise zones would receive priority for Federal assistance, while businesses that locate or expand within the designated zones would be eligible for Federal tax and regulatory benefits, in addition to substantial commitments made by State and local governments. Taken as a whole, this assistance would give community leaders a powerful tool in their efforts to attract and keep jobs. Our bill is not a panacea, but it would help rural towns take a first step toward recovery, while testing enterprise zones on the national level. Obviously, this proposal is not set in concrete, and I look forward to working with my colleagues and the administration to explore any modifications which might be appropriate.

Thirty-seven States have initiated enterprise zone programs, and the concept is already an integral part of economic development in many areas. Missouri's Enterprise Zone Program has created over 4,000 new jobs since 1983. The program has also generated $200 million in new investment to Missouri's 33 zones. Nationally, State enterprise zone initiatives are credited with creating over 113,000 new jobs and preserving more than 67,000 existing ones while simultaneously attracting nearly $9 billion in new investment to depressed areas.

The Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1989 would build on this success in easing rural America's economic plight. The act would stress State and local initiatives and enhanced Federal assistance, allowing each community to pursue its own goals and development program. The enterprise zone concept is founded on the belief that local leaders and entrepreneurs—not Washington bureaucrats—hold the key to economic recovery. The success of State zone programs support this belief. Our bill would doubly promote recovery by fostering grass-roots economic development without introducing stifling new regulations.

Mr. President, Missouri sociologist Daryl Hobbs defines rural as "Where a dedicated person can make a great difference in a short time." I know from my own experience that rural America is home to many dedicated people, and I believe that our bill will give them the tools that they need to make a great difference.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill and a summary of its provisions be printed in the RECORD. I ask that testimony from Dr. Richard McHugh, University of Missouri-Columbia, and Mr. Dennis Roedemeier, Cuba, MO, appearing before the Finance Committee on November 13, 1987, on enterprise zone development, also be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1989".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act is to provide for the establishment of Rural Enterprise Zones (REZs) to stimulate the creation of new jobs, to promote revitalization of economically distressed rural areas, and to provide increased economic opportunity for residents thereof, primarily by providing or encouraging—

(1) tax relief at the Federal, State, and local levels,

(2) increased Federal and State assistance,

(3) regulatory relief at the Federal, State, and local levels, and

(4) improved local services, particularly through the increased involvement of private, local, and community organizations.

TITLE I—DESIGNATION OF RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONES

SEC. 101. DESIGNATION OF ZONES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Chapter 80 (relating to general rules) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter D—Designation of Rural Enterprise Zones

"Sec. 7891. Designation.

"SEC. 7891. DESIGNATION.

"(a) DESIGNATION OF ZONES.—

"(1) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this title, the term 'rural enterprise zone' means any area—

"(A) which is nominated by 1 or more local governments and the State or States in which it is located for designation as a rural enterprise zone (hereinafter in this section referred to as a 'nominated area'), and

"(B) which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after consultation with—

"(i) the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, and the Treasury; the Director of the Office of Management and Budget; and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, and

"(ii) in the case of an area on an Indian reservation, the Secretary of the Interior, designates as a rural enterprise zone.

"(2) LIMITATIONS ON DESIGNATIONS.—

"(A) PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS.—Before designating any area as a rural enterprise zone and not later than 4 months following the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall prescribe by regulation, after consultation with the officials described in paragraph (1)(B)—

"(i) the procedures for nominating an area under paragraph (1)(A),

"(ii) the parameters relating to the size and population characteristics of a rural enterprise zone, and

"(iii) the manner in which nominated areas will be compared based on the criteria specified in subsection (d) and the other factors specified in subsection (f).

"(B) TIME LIMITATIONS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall designate nominated areas as rural enterprise zones only during the 36-month period beginning on the later of—

"(i) the first day of the first month following the month in which the effective date of the regulations described in subparagraph (A) occurs, or

"(ii) January 1, 1990.

"(C) NUMBER OF DESIGNATIONS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may not designate—

"(i) more than 45 nominated areas as rural enterprise zones under this section, and

"(ii) more than 18 nominated areas as rural enterprise zones during the first 12-month period beginning on the date determined under subparagraph (B) and each subsequent 12-month period.

"(D) PROCEDURAL RULES.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall not make any designation of an area as a rural enterprise zone under paragraph (1) unless—

"(i) the local government and the State in which the nominated area is located have the authority—

"(I) to nominate such area for designation as a rural enterprise zone,

"(II) to make the State and local commitments under subsection (d), and

"(III) to provide assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that such commitments will be fulfilled,

"(ii) a nomination therefor is submitted in such a manner and in such form, and contains such information, as the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall by regulation prescribe,

"(iii) the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines that any information furnished is reasonably accurate, and

"(iv) the State and local governments certify that no portion of such area is already included in a rural enterprise zone or in an area otherwise nominated to be a rural enterprise zone.

"(3) NOMINATION PROCESS FOR INDIAN RESERVATIONS.—In the case of a nominated area on an Indian reservation, the reservation governing body (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior) shall be deemed to be both the State and local governments with respect to such area.

"(b) PERIOD FOR WHICH DESIGNATION IS IN EFFECT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any designation of an area as a rural enterprise zone shall remain in effect during the period beginning on the date of the designation and ending on the earliest of—

"(A) December 31 of the 12th calendar year following the calendar year in which such date occurs,

"(B) the termination date designated by the State and local governments as provided in the nomination submitted under subsection (a)(2)(D)(ii), or

"(C) the date the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development revokes such designation under paragraph (2).

"(2) REVOCATION OF DESIGNATION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after consultation with the officials described in subsection (a)(1)(B), may revoke the designation of an area if the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines that the local government or the State in which it is located is not complying substantially with the State and local commitments under subsection (d).

"(3) DESIGNATION SHALL NOT TAKE EFFECT UNLESS INVENTORY OF HISTORIC PROPERTIES.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)—

"(A) within 60 days after the date of the designation of an area as a rural enterprise zone (determined without regard to this paragraph), the State or local government of such area shall submit to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development an inventory of historic properties within such area, and

"(B) the date of such designation shall not be earlier than the date on which such inventory is submitted.

"(c) AREA AND ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make a designation of any nominated area under subsection (a)(1) only if it meets the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) AREA REQUIREMENTS.—A nominated area meets the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(A) the area is—

"(i) within a local government jurisdiction or jurisdictions which are not central cities of a metropolitan statistical area (within the meaning of section 143(k)(2)(B)) and which have a population of less than 50,000 (as determined by the most recent census data available),

"(ii) outside of a metropolitan statistical area (within the meaning of section 143(k)(2)(B)), or

"(iii) determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, to be a rural area,

"(B) the boundary of the area is continuous, and

"(C) the area—

"(i) has a population, as determined by the most recent census data available, of at least 1,000, or

"(ii) is entirely within an Indian reservation (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior).

"(3) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a nominated area meets the requirements of this paragraph if the State and local governments in which it is located certify and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after such review of supporting data as he deems appropriate, accepts such certification, that—

"(A) the area is one of pervasive poverty, unemployment, or distress, having met 1 of the following criteria:

"(i) the unemployment rate, as determined by the appropriate available data, was at least 1½ times the national unemployment rate for that period,

"(ii) the poverty rate (as determined by the most recent census data available) for each populous census tract (or where not tracted, the entire rural enterprise zone) within the area was at least 20 percent for the period to which such data relates, or

"(iii) at least 70 percent of the households living in the area have incomes below 80 percent of the median income of households within the jurisdiction of the local government (determined in the same manner as under section 119(b)(2) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974), and

"(B) the area is located wholly within the jurisdiction of a local government which is eligible for Federal assistance under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section.

"(d) REQUIRED STATE AND LOCAL COMMITMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No nominated area shall be designated as a rural enterprise zone unless the local government and the State in which it is located agree in writing that, during any period during which the area is a rural enterprise zone, such governments will follow a specified course of action designed to reduce the various burdens borne by employers or employees in such area.

"(2) COURSE OF ACTION.—The course of action under paragraph (1) may be implemented by both such governments and private nongovernmental entities, may be funded from proceeds of any Federal program, and may include, but is not limited to—

"(A) a reduction of tax rates or fees applying within the rural enterprise zone,

"(B) an increase in the level or efficiency of local services within the rural enterprise zone,

"(C) actions to reduce, remove, simplify, or streamline governmental requirements applying within the rural enterprise zone,

"(D) involvement in the program by private entities, organizations, neighborhood associations, and community groups, particularly those within the nominated area, including a commitment from such private entities to provide jobs and job training for, and technical, financial or other assistance to, employers, employees, and residents of the nominated area, and

"(E) mechanisms to increase the equity ownership of residents and employees within the rural enterprise zone.

"(3) SUBSEQUENT MODIFICATION OF COURSE OF ACTION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may by regulation prescribe procedures for modifying a course of action within a rural enterprise zone under paragraph (1) following designation of such zone.

"(e) PRIORITY OF DESIGNATION.—In choosing nominated areas for designation, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall give special preference to the areas with respect to which the strongest and highest quality contributions described in subsection (d)(2) have been promised as part of the course of action, taking into consideration the fiscal ability of the nominating State and local governments to provide tax relief. The Secretary shall also give preference to—

"(1) the nominated areas with respect to which the nominating State and local governments have provided the most effective and enforceable guarantees that the proposed course of action under subsection (d) will actually be carried out during the period of the rural enterprise zone designation,

"(2) the nominated areas with high levels of poverty, unemployment, and general distress, particularly the areas—

"(A) which are near areas with concentrations of disadvantaged workers or long-term unemployed individuals, and

"(B) with respect to which there is a strong likelihood that residents of the area described in subparagraph (A) will receive jobs if the area is designated as a rural enterprise zone,

"(3) the nominated areas the size and location of which—

"(A) will primarily stimulate new economic activity, and

"(B) minimize unnecessary tax losses to the Federal Government,

"(4) the nominated areas with respect to which private entities have made the most substantial commitments in additional resources and contributions, including the creation of new or expanded business activities, and

"(5) the nominated areas which best exhibit such other factors determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development as are—

"(A) consistent with the intent of the rural enterprise zone program, and

"(B) important to minimizing the unnecessary loss of tax revenues to the Federal Government.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this title—

"(1) GOVERNMENTS.—If more than 1 government seeks to nominate an area as a rural enterprise zone, any reference to, or requirement of, this section shall apply to all such governments.

"(2) STATE.—The term 'State' shall also include the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of Palau; and any other possession of the United States.

"(3) LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—The term 'local government' means—

"(A) any county, city, town, township, parish, village, or other general purpose political subdivision of a State, and

"(B) any combination of political subdivisions described in subparagraph (A) recognized by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of subchapters for chapter 80 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"SUBCHAPTER D. Designation of rural enterprise zones.".

SEC. 102. EVALUATION AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

Not later than the close of the third calendar year after the calendar year in which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development first designates areas as rural enterprise zones under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and at the close of each third calendar year thereafter, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall prepare and submit to the Congress a report on the effects of such designation in accomplishing the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 103. INTERACTION WITH OTHER FEDERAL PROGRAMS.

(a) TAX REDUCTIONS.—Any reduction of taxes under any required program of State and local commitment under section 7891(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be disregarded in determining the eligibility of a State or local government for, or the amount or extent of, any assistance or benefits under any law of the United States.

(b) COORDINATION WITH RELOCATION ASSISTANCE.—The designation of a rural enterprise zone under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall not—

(1) constitute approval of a Federal or federally assisted program or project (within the meaning of the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4601 et seq.)), or

(2) entitle any person displaced from real property located in such zone to any rights or any benefits under such Act.

(c) COORDINATION WITH ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY.—Designation of a rural enterprise zone under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall not constitute a Federal action for purposes of applying the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) or other provisions of Federal law relating to the protection of the environment.

TITLE II—FEDERAL INCOME TAX INCENTIVES

Subtitle A—Credits for Employers

SEC. 201. CREDIT FOR RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYERS.

(a) CREDIT FOR INCREASED RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 43. CREDIT FOR RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 38, the amount of the rural enterprise zone credit determined under this section for any taxable year shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the qualified increased employment expenditures of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(b) QUALIFIED INCREASED EMPLOYMENT EXPENDITURES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified increased employment expenditures' means the excess of—

"(A) the qualified wages paid or incurred by the employer during the taxable year to qualified employees with respect to all rural enterprise zones, over

"(B) the base period wages of the employer with respect to all such zones.

"(2) DOLLAR AMOUNT LIMITATION AS TO QUALIFIED WAGES TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—The amount of any qualified wages taken into account under paragraph (1) for any taxable year with respect to any qualified employee may not exceed an amount which is equal to the lower living standard for a family of 4 as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for the calendar year with or within which such taxable year ends.

"(3) BASE PERIOD WAGES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'base period wages' means, with respect to any rural enterprise zone, the amount of wages paid to employees during the 12-month period preceding the earlier of—

"(i) the date on which the rural enterprise zone was designated as such under section 7891, or

"(ii) the date on which the rural enterprise zone was designated as such under any State law enacted after January 1, 1981, which would have been qualified wages paid to qualified employees if such designation had been in effect for such period.

"(B) RULES OF SPECIAL APPLICATION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) subsection (d)(1) shall be applied by substituting '12-month period' for 'taxable year' each place it appears, and

"(ii) the dollar limitation taken into account under paragraph (2) in computing qualified wages shall be the amount in effect for the calendar year with or within which the taxable year for which the amount of the credit under subsection (a) is being computed ends.

"(C) ADJUSTMENTS FOR INFLATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any 12-month period beginning on the date which is 12 months (or any multiple of 12 months) after a period described in subparagraph (A) with respect to a rural enterprise zone, the base period wages for such zone shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(I) such base period wages, multiplied by

"(II) the living standard adjustment for the calendar year in which such 12-month period begins.

"(ii) LIVING STANDARD ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of clause (i), the living standard adjustment for any calendar year is the percentage (if any) by which—

"(I) the living standard for the preceding calendar year, exceeds

"(II) the living standard for the calendar year in which the period described in subparagraph (A) begins.

"(iii) LIVING STANDARD FOR ANY CALENDAR YEAR.—For purposes of clause (ii), the living standard for any calendar year is the lower living standard for a family of 4 as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for such calendar year.

"(c) QUALIFIED WAGES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the term 'qualified wages' has the meaning given to the term 'wages' by subsection (b) of section 3306 (determined without regard to any dollar limitation contained in such section).

"(2) REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN FEDERALLY FUNDED PAYMENTS.—For purposes of this section, the wages paid or incurred by an employer for any period shall not include the amount of any federally funded payments the employer receives or is entitled to receive for on-the-job training of such individual for such period.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR AGRICULTURAL AND RAILWAY LABOR.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of section 51(h) shall apply with respect to services described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 51(h)(1).

"(d) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE DEFINED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified employee' means an individual—

"(A) at least 90 percent of whose services for the employer during the taxable year are directly related to the conduct of the employer's trade or business located in a rural enterprise zone, and

"(B) who performs at least 50 percent of his services for the employer during the taxable year in a rural enterprise zone.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR INDIVIDUALS PREVIOUSLY EMPLOYED BY THE TAXPAYER OR RELATED TAXPAYERS.—The term 'qualified employee' shall not include an employee of the taxpayer in a rural enterprise zone who has previously been employed by the taxpayer (or by a related taxpayer as defined in section 267(b)) after the beginning of the 12-month period described in subsection (b)(3) at a location other than a rural enterprise zone unless the Secretary determines that the taxpayer's primary purpose for employing such an employee in the rural enterprise zone is not the evasion or avoidance of Federal income tax.

"(e) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICATION TO CERTAIN ENTITIES, ETC.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of subsections (f) and (i) of section 51, section 52, and section 41(f)(3) shall apply.

"(2) PERIODS OF LESS THAN A YEAR.—If designation of an area as a rural enterprise zone under section 7891 occurs, expires, or is revoked on a date other than the first or last day of the taxable year of the taxpayer, or in the case of a taxable year of less than 12 months—

"(A) the limitation specified in subsection (b)(2), and the base period wages determined under subsection (b)(3), shall be adjusted on a pro rata basis (based upon the number of days), and

"(B) the reduction specified in subsection (c)(2) and the 90 percent and 50 percent tests set forth in subsection (d)(1) shall be determined by reference to the portion of the taxable year during which the designation of the area as a rural enterprise zone is in effect.".

(b) RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT CREDIT TREATED AS OTHER BUSINESS CREDITS.—Section 38(b) (defining current year business credit) is amended by striking out "plus" at the end of paragraph (4), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof ", plus", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) the rural enterprise zone credit determined under section 43(a).".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 43. Credit for rural enterprise zone employment.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

Subtitle B—Deferrals of Gain or Loss With Respect to Investment in Tangible Property in Rural Enterprise Zones

SEC. 202. NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN ON THE SALE OF RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY WHERE REINVESTMENT IN SUCH PROPERTY OCCURS WITHIN 1 YEAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter O of chapter 1 (relating to common nontaxable exchanges) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1043. NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN ON THE SALE OF RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY WHERE REINVESTMENT IN SUCH PROPERTY OCCURS WITHIN 1 YEAR.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—No gain shall be recognized on the sale or exchange of rural enterprise zone property of the taxpayer if the proceeds realized from such sale or exchange are used by the taxpayer to acquire rural enterprise zone property within the qualified period.

"(b) RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'rural enterprise zone property' means—

"(A) any tangible personal property which is acquired and placed in service by the taxpayer in a rural enterprise zone during the period the designation as a zone is in effect under section 7891 and which is used predominantly by the taxpayer in the active conduct of a trade or business within such zone, and

"(B) any real property located in a rural enterprise zone which is acquired by the taxpayer during the period the designation as a zone is in effect under section 7891 and which is used predominantly by the taxpayer in the active conduct of a trade or business.

"(2) RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE BUSINESS.—The term 'rural enterprise zone business' means any person—

"(A) which is actively engaged in the conduct of a trade or business during the taxable year,

"(B) with respect to which at least 80 percent of such person's gross receipts for such taxable year are attributable to the active conduct of a trade or business which produces goods or provides services within a rural enterprise zone, and

"(C) with respect to which substantially all the tangible assets of such person are located within a rural enterprise zone.

"(3) PROPERTY REMAINS QUALIFIED AFTER RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE DESIGNATION CEASES TO APPLY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The treatment of property as rural enterprise zone property under paragraph (1) shall not terminate when the designation of the rural enterprise zone in which the property is located or used expires or is revoked.

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply after the first sale or exchange of property occurring after the designation expires or is revoked.

"(c) QUALIFIED PERIOD.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified period' means the period which ends 12 months after the date of the sale or exchange of rural enterprise zone property.

"(d) BASIS OF ACQUIRED RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—If the acquisition of rural enterprise zone property by a taxpayer results in nonrecognition of any gain or loss on the sale or exchange of other rural enterprise zone property of such taxpayer under subsection (a), the basis of such taxpayer in the acquired rural enterprise zone property shall be the cost of such property—

"(1) decreased by the amount of gain which was not so recognized, or

"(2) increased by the amount of loss which was not so recognized.

If such acquired rural enterprise zone property consists of more than 1 item of property, the basis determined under the preceding sentence shall be allocated among such items in proportion to their respective costs.

"(e) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If the taxpayer during a taxable year sells or exchanges rural enterprise zone property at a gain, then—

"(1) the statutory period for the assessment of any deficiency attributable to any part of such gain shall not expire before the expiration of 3 years from the date the Secretary is notified by the taxpayer (in such manner as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe) of—

"(A) the taxpayer's intention not to acquire any rural enterprise zone property within the qualified period, or

"(B) a failure to make such purchase within the qualified period, and

"(2) such deficiency may be assessed before the expiration of such 3-year period notwithstanding the provisions of any other law or rule of law which would otherwise prevent such assessment.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (c) of section 381 (relating to carryovers in certain corporate acquisitions) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(27) RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—The acquiring corporation shall be treated as the distributor or transferor corporation after the date of distribution or transfer for purposes of applying section 1043.".

(2) Subsection (a) of section 1016 (relating to adjustments to basis) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (23), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (24) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(25) to the extent provided in section 1043(d) in the case of the property the acquisition of which resulted in nonrecognition of gain or loss in other property under section 1043(a).".

(3) Section 1223 (relating to holding period of property) is amended by redesignating paragraph (14) as paragraph (15) and inserting after paragraph (13) the following new paragraph:

"(14) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held property, the acquisition of which resulted under section 1043 in nonrecognition of the gain or loss on the sale or exchange of any other property, there shall be included the period during which such other property was held by such taxpayer prior to such sale or exchange.".

(4) Paragraph (4) of section 1245(b) (relating to limitations on gain from disposition of certain depreciable assets) is amended by striking out "or 1033" and inserting in lieu thereof ", 1033, or 1043".

(5) Paragraph (4) of section 1250(d) (relating to limitations on gain from disposition of certain depreciable realty) is amended—

(A) by striking out "or 1033" in subparagraphs (A) and (E) and inserting in lieu thereof ", 1033, or 1043", and

(B) by inserting "or 1043(a)" after "section 1033(a)(2)" in subparagraph (C)(ii).

(6) Paragraph (2) of section 6212(c) (relating to further deficiency letters restricted) is amended by inserting after subparagraph (E) the following new subparagraph:

"(F) Deficiency attributable to gain on sale of property, see section 1043(e).".

(7) Section 6504 (relating to cross references) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) Gain on the sale or exchange of property, see section 1043(e).".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter C of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1042 the following new item:

"Sec. 1043. Nonrecognition of gain or loss on the sale of rural enterprise zone property where reinvestment in such property occurs within 1 year.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to sales or exchanges after December 31, 1988.

Subtitle C—Rules Relating to Private Activity Bonds

SEC. 203. PRIVATE ACTIVITY BOND RULES.

(a) LIMITATION ON ACCELERATED COST RECOVERY DEDUCTION NOT TO APPLY TO RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—Subparagraph (C) of section 168(g)(5) (defining tax-exempt bond financed property) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or any rural enterprise zone property (within the meaning of section 1043(b))" after "section 142(a)(7))", and

(2) by striking out "QUALIFIED RESIDENTIAL RENTAL PROJECTS" in the heading and inserting in lieu thereof "CERTAIN PROJECTS".

(b) TERMINATION OF SMALL ISSUE EXEMPTION NOT TO APPLY.—Paragraph (12) of section 144(a) (relating to termination of small issue exemption after December 31, 1986) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—This paragraph shall not apply to any bond issued as part of an issue 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of which are used to finance facilities within a rural enterprise zone if such facilities are placed in service while the designation as such a zone is in effect under section 7891 (without regard to the subsequent revocation of such designation under section 7891(b)(2)).".

(c) CERTAIN SMALL ISSUE VOLUME CAPS MODIFIED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 144(a) (relating to qualified small issues) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) DOLLAR LIMITATIONS NOT TO APPLY FOR RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—The dollar limitations described in paragraphs (1) and (4) shall not apply to any bond issued as part of an issue 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of which are used to finance facilities within a rural enterprise zone if such facilities are placed in service while the designation as such a zone is in effect under section 7891 (without regard to the subsequent revocation of such designation under section 7891(b)(2)).".

(2) AGGREGATE LIMIT PER TAXPAYER WITH RESPECT TO RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—Paragraph (10) of section 144(a) (relating to aggregate limit per taxpayer for qualified small issue bonds) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—For purposes of this paragraph, with respect to any issue used to finance facilities within a rural enterprise zone, subparagraph (B) shall be applied by inserting 'used for facilities within a rural enterprise zone' after 'tax-exempt bonds referred to in clause (ii)'.".

(d) PORTION OF STATE CEILING SET ASIDE FOR RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—Subsection (d) of section 146 (relating to State ceiling) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) STATE CEILING SET-ASIDE FOR RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—For any calendar year, 5 percent of the State ceiling applicable to any State with one or more rural enterprise zones shall be set aside for use only in such rural enterprise zones in such State.".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to obligations issued after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after such date.

Subtitle D—Sense of the Congress With Respect to Tax Simplification

SEC. 204. TAX SIMPLIFICATION.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of the Treasury and his delegates should in every way possible simplify the administration and enforcement of any provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 added to, or amended by, this Act.

TITLE III—REGULATORY FLEXIBILITY

SEC. 301. DEFINITION OF SMALL ENTITIES IN RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONES FOR PURPOSES OF ANALYSIS OF REGULATORY FUNCTIONS.

Section 601 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (5); and

(2) by striking out paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(6) the term 'small entity' means—

"(A) a small business, small organization, or small governmental jurisdiction within the meaning of paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of this section, respectively; and

"(B) any qualified rural enterprise zone business; any governments which designated and approved an area which has been designated as a rural enterprise zone (within the meaning of section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) to the extent any rule pertains to the carrying out of projects, activities, or undertakings within such zone; and any not-for-profit enterprise carrying out a significant portion of its activities within such a zone; and

"(7) the term 'qualified rural enterprise zone business' means any person, corporation, or other entity—

"(A) which is engaged in the active conduct of a trade or business within a rural enterprise zone (within the meaning of section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986); and

"(B) for whom at least 50 percent of its employees are qualified employees (within the meaning of section 43(d) of such Code).".

SEC. 302. WAIVER OR MODIFICATION OF AGENCY RULES IN RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONES.

(a) Chapter 6 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by redesignating sections 611 and 612 as sections 612 and 613, respectively, and inserting the following new section immediately after section 610:

"§ 611. Waiver or modification of agency rules in rural enterprise zones

"(a) Upon the written request of the governments which designated and approved an area which has been designated as a rural enterprise zone under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, an agency is authorized, in order to further the job creation, community development, or economic revitalization objectives of the zone, to waive or modify all or part of any rule which it has authority to promulgate, as such rule pertains to the carrying out of projects, activities or undertakings within the zone.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall authorize an agency to waive or modify any rule adopted to carry out a statute or Executive order which prohibits, or the purpose of which is to protect persons against, discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, age, or handicap.

"(c) A request under subsection (a) shall specify the rule or rules to be waived or modified and the change proposed, and shall briefly describe why the change would promote the achievement of the job creation, community development, or economic revitalization objectives of the rural enterprise zone. If a request is made to an agency other than the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the requesting governments shall send a copy of the request to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development at the time the request is made.

"(d) In considering a request, the agency shall weigh the extent to which the proposed change is likely to further job creation, community development, or economic revitalization within the rural enterprise zone against the effect the change is likely to have on the underlying purposes of applicable statutes in the geographic area which would be affected by the change. The agency shall approve the request whenever it finds, in its discretion, that the public interest which the proposed change would serve in furthering such job creation, community development, or economic revitalization outweighs the public interest which continuation of the rule unchanged would serve in furthering such underlying purposes. The agency shall not approve any request to waive or modify a rule if that waiver or modification would—

"(1) directly violate a statutory requirement (including any requirement of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1060; 29 U.S.C. 201 et seq.)); or

"(2) be likely to present a significant risk to the public health, including environmental health or safety, such as a rule with respect to occupational safety or health, or environmental pollution.

"(e) If a request is disapproved, the agency shall inform the requesting governments in writing of the reasons therefor and shall, to the maximum extent possible, work with such governments to develop an alternative, consistent with the standards contained in subsection (d).

"(f) Agencies shall discharge their responsibilities under this section in an expeditious manner, and shall make a determination on requests not later than 90 days after their receipt.

"(g) A waiver or modification of a rule under subsection (a) shall not be considered to be a rule, rulemaking, or regulation under chapter 5 of this title. To facilitate reaching its decision on any requested waiver or modification, the agency may seek the views of interested parties and, if the views are to be sought, determine how they should be obtained and to what extent, if any, they should be taken into account in considering the request. The agency shall publish a notice in the Federal Register stating any waiver or modification of a rule under this section.

"(h) In the event that an agency proposes to amend a rule for which a waiver or modification under this section is in effect, the agency shall not change the waiver or modification to impose additional requirements unless it determines, consistent with standards contained in subsection (d), that such action is necessary.

"(i) No waiver or modification of a rule under this section shall remain in effect for a longer period than the period for which the rural enterprise zone designation remains in effect for the area in which the waiver or modification applies.

"(j) For purposes of this section, the term 'rule' means (1) any rule as defined in section 551(4) of this title or (2) any rulemaking conducted on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing pursuant to sections 556 and 557 of this title.".

(b) The table of sections for such chapter is amended by redesignating the items relating to sections 611 and 612 as sections 612 and 613, respectively, and inserting the following new item immediately after the item relating to section 610:

"611. Waiver or modification of agency rules in rural enterprise zones.".

(c) Section 601(2) of such title is amended by inserting "(except for purposes of section 611)" immediately before "means.".

(d) Section 613 of such title, as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(except section 611)" immediately after "chapter" in subsection (a); and

(2) inserting "as defined in section 601(2)" immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence of subsection (b).

SEC. 303. COORDINATION OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS IN ENTERPRISE ZONES.

Section 3 of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act (42 U.S.C. 3532) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall—

"(1) promote the coordination of all programs under his jurisdiction which are carried on within a rural enterprise zone designated pursuant to section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

"(2) expedite, to the greatest extent possible, the consideration of applications for programs referred to in paragraph (1) through the consolidation or forms or otherwise; and

"(3) provide, whenever possible, for the consolidation of periodic reports required under programs referred to in paragraph (1) into one summary report submitted at such intervals as may be designated by the Secretary.".

TITLE IV—ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES IN RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONES

SEC. 401. FOREIGN-TRADE ZONE PREFERENCES.

(a) PREFERENCE IN ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES IN REVITALIZATION AREAS.—In processing applications for the establishment of foreign-trade zones pursuant to an Act entitled "To provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes", approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 998), the Foreign-Trade Zone Board shall consider on a priority basis and expedite, to the maximum extent possible, the processing of any application involving the establishment of a foreign-trade zone within a rural enterprise zone designated pursuant to section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(b) APPLICATION PROCEDURE.—In processing applications for the establishment of ports of entry pursuant to an Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and fifteen, and for other purposes", approved August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. 609), the Secretary of the Treasury shall consider on a priority basis and expedite, to the maximum extent possible, the processing of any application involving the establishment of a port of entry which is necessary to permit the establishment of a foreign-trade zone within a rural enterprise zone (as so designated).

(c) APPLICATION EVALUATION.—In evaluating applications for the establishment of foreign-trade zones and ports of entry in connection with rural enterprise zones (as so designated), the Foreign-Trade Zone Board and the Secretary of Treasury shall approve the applications to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with their respective statutory responsibilities.

TITLE V—RESPONSIBILITIES OF FEDERAL AGENCIES IN RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONES

SEC. 501. RESPONSIBILITIES OF FEDERAL AGENCIES IN RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To the extent permitted by law and consistent with its primary mission, each Federal agency (as defined in section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code) shall seek to provide special assistance to rural enterprise zones designated pursuant to section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. Such assistance may include, but is not limited to—

(1) expedited processing,

(2) priority funding,

(3) program set-asides, and

(4) provision of technical assistance in furtherance of the purposes set forth in section 2 of this Act.

(b) REGULATIONS.—The head of each Federal agency, after consultation with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

STATEMENT BY DR. RICHARD MCHUGH, DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF RESEARCH, REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT, UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI, COLUMBIA, MO

Dr. MCHUGH. First of all, thanks for the opportunity to testify here, and also thanks for the opportunity to get out in a hurry.

I will, naturally, be very quick. first of all, I do want to say that I would urge you to give serious consideration to the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1987. I don't think I need to amplify any more on the problems experienced in the rural areas. The question is not, is there a problem, but what if anything to do about it? This bill proposes a number of tax and financial incentives. The question is, will these tax and financial incentives work?

Earlier today we heard Senator Bond talk about the experience of Missouri when he was in office, and you will hear other evidence here about what has happened in Cuba and Macon, Missouri, and places like that. So there is plenty of anecdotal evidence. The problem is, as an economist, we are taught not to make decisions purely on anecdotal evidence and to look more carefully at the totality of the evidence.

The sort of inherited conventional wisdom in the last 10 or 15 years has been these types of incentives, if they do work, have been weak.

The principal thing I wanted to say today was that there has been a lot of work done recently in the economics literature on the effects of these economic incentives, and all of the work recently shows that these incentives had worked in the past and are working very well right now, as the anecdotal evidence seems to indicate, and that the strength of these policy initiatives is growing over time.

Now, the question is: Is this increased sensitivity just another statistical fluke—again, the result of some shoddy statistical work by economists? Or is there really some reason to think that all of a sudden these incentives would be more important than they had been in the past?

I would like to say I think there is plenty of evidence to think that now, in the mid-1980s as opposed to the sixties and the seventies, these incentives would be very important. On the one hand, in 1982 we had a very deep recession. The incredible competition from foreign manufacturers really put the squeeze on manufacturers and made them look for evey cost advantage that they cold possibly get. So, on the "demand side," as we like to say, there was an increase in the degree to which manufacturers would look at tax, financial, and cost advantages as were offered by State and local governments.

On the "supply side," again, as we would say, we had State and local governments which suffered financially and economically from the recession of 1982 and from the cutbacks in grants-in-aid that made these governments offer increased incentives. So we had sort of a meeting of the demanders for these financial incentives and the suppliers of the financial incentives. The result was a matching of the needs of the financial incentives. The result was a matching of the needs of the businesses and the desires of the governments to provide these incentives. It is now a standard part of the location decision. Businesses need to be given those. They expect and they want to be given the incentives to locate in areas. If not offered those incentives, they are very likely to look negatively at an area.

So, there is reason to expect that there would be an increased incentive to locate. And, as I said, the evidence is increasingly showing that these incentives are necessary.

I think a bill such as the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1987 would put the more depressed, hard-up areas on a more equal footing in the bidding for these industries. As it now stands, their resource base is disappearing, and they need everything that they can do in order to attract industries.

There is plenty more in the testimony that I have submitted, but will just stop right now in the interest of time.

[The prepared statement of Dr. McHugh appears in the appendix.]

Senator BAUCUS. Thank you, Dr. McHugh.

Do any others of you have planes to catch?

[No response.]

Senator BAUCUS. Okay. Let us go down the list.

Senator DANFORTH. Dr. McHugh, I know you are on your way to the airport, but could I just ask one question?

Senator BAUCUS. He is your Senator; you had better stay.

Senator DANFORTH. No, no—quite the contrary.

You say that the evidence is that rural enterprise zones work. The evidence pertains only to the State enterprise zones, and you extrapolate from the experience with State enterprise zones that Federal enterprise zones would be an added incentive, or an equal incentive, or that it would have a multiplier effect?

Dr. MCHUGH. The evidence that I cited is more general. Incentives of any kind, in any area, now appear to be worthwhile. They do have an effect.

The evidence that I cite is not simply rural, State-run enterprise zones but any kind of tax incentives at all to influence the location of economic activity. It is shown to have a very strong effect.

Senator DANFORTH. And you have no doubt that if this legislation were passed it would be of very real assistance to those communities that became enterprise zones?

Dr. MCHUGH. There would definitely be some benefit, within a 95-percent confident interval, as we say—a strong probability that it would help.

Senator DANFORTH. One final question. Say there is a rural enterprise zone in say Cuba, Missouri. Does that mean that a community, that is not an enterprise zone is disadvantaged? In other words, say that there is a close-by community, say Union, Missouri. Would that be disadvantaged by Cuba having an enterprise zone?

Dr. MCHUGH. Well, you necessarily must pick one area over another. But I think this whole story of robbing Peter to pay Paul can be exaggerated; it is too simplistic a view of what goes on.

A lot of times—in fact, most of the time—growth in one area relative to the other isn't because of the decision of a plant to pick up and move to another area. I know instances in Missouri in which one particular company faced the decision to close one plant or another plant and chose to keep the plant open in the enterprise zone. So, it is not simply a matter of taking from one to give to another.

Senator DANFORTH. Well, it is also possible that businesses in other countries could locate in a Missouri community.

Dr. MCHUGH. That is certainly true.

Senator DANFORTH. Senator Bond just returned from Korea. A few years ago I was in Korea talking to businesses about the possibility of locating in smaller communities in our State. When we have a global economy, it makes it more likely that businesses that otherwise might be located in some other part of the world would locate in our country.

Dr. MCHUGH. Some foreign manufacturers would come into the country looking for a place to locate. And the rural enterprise zone designation is a flag right away that this is an area in which there is going to be a lot of attention paid and really wants to grow. So, if nothing else, it is a signal that this is a community where these places should look.

STATEMENT OF DENNIS D. ROEDEMEIER, PRESIDENT, CUBA INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY, CUBA, MO

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Thank you.

I am from Cuba, Missouri. As a reference point, Cuba is a town of 2,100 people in Crawford County. Cuba's claim to fame, I guess, came in September of 1984 when three plants in Cuba shut their doors and put more than 100 unemployed people on the street. By November the unemployment rate in our city was 13 percent, and worse than that it was climbing. Two out of three that you would pass on our street every day were under the Missouri poverty level.

By Christmas day, if one more company would have closed their doors, our largest employer would have been the welfare agency at our county seat. We would have had more people supporting our unemployment than supporting our industry. And unfortunately, in a situation like that, one-half of the people who were injured from this unemployment weren't old enough to work.

In the story of Cuba, it had tremendous emotional impact, of course, on our people, but it is not unlike or too similar to all the stories that you hear across America every day. You have heard from people in this room that they have witnessed these same phenomena, and I guess the existence of economic distress is not new. But I think what disturbs all of us in the recurrence of it and that it is occurring in places that we never expected it to happen before.

When Cuba lost its small shoe industry of 60 people, I am sure that that was just a blip on the screen of an economic indicator somewhere. But yet, when St. Louis announced that General Motors was going to have a cutback of 2,500 people, that shook the very foundation of our State. And if you think about it, what is the difference between a small rural town—what is the difference in that foundation?

Unfortunately, 11 million Americans have found out since 1981 that there no longer is the manufacturing base. And these are 11 million people like you and I who have kids to feed and families to raise.

As we view these situations and these hardships on the evening news, or as we read about them in the periodicals, we feel like many of the government people have said, that we are victims, that the farmer or the small businessman in rural America is eventually, from the roll of the dice or fate, going to receive his fair shake of despair. We read about it, we talk about it, and we think about it, and I know everyone worries about that. Television perpetuates the idea of the economic victim.

Distressed communities are shown throughout the nation as this despair.

So, the question is: What do you do? The answer, "There is nothing we can do; there is no answer. We are only one. We are so small. What can be done?"

How does a community fight back? And what is the answer for this economic destitution that we have seen?

The existence of the programs to stimulate economic development are not new. The problem is that these programs often confront or deal with the symptoms of economic distress, and we have heard a lot about symptoms today. The major hurdle for a community to overcome is that excessive welfare programs, poor housing, these vacant storefronts you heard about with the boards on the front of them, poverty, and economic destitution these are only symptoms of a disease. They are not the disease.

The disease and the cancer that is ravaging so many of our communities is the lack of jobs. And if you take that, and if you believe that, then how can we accept the many budget situations where we see that 30 percent of State dollars are spent on welfare and social services, and 1 percent or less than 1 percent is spent on economic development? That one decision would get you fired in every board room across America. That one factor, the creation of jobs, is often the difference in the survival or extinction of many of our communities across America.

If we accept this basic premise, and if we choose to focus on job creation, then how do we create the jobs? The Enterprise Zone Program.

This is what brought Cuba back. It was the catapult that shot us forward, and it was the weapon that we used to fight the demise of Cuba.

I am going to go through a few items that we have found worked and a few items that didn't work, with the hope that maybe this might clarify our theory.

The enterprise zone, number one, must be a marriage of State effort, county effort, and city effort, and we have heard that discussed already. There should be a specific number of zones established, which I see you set forth in your bill.

Enterprise zones should be awarded to eligible areas on the basis of severe competition. In order for an eligible zone to win a designation, they must present a written business plan. This is very important for a community's survival, their ability to write a plan.

There should be a limited number of zones. The enterprise zone benefits should be extended to companies which basically manufacture, process, distribute, or assemble. It may be best to avoid extending benefits to the retail or commercial enterprises in a zone area. That can be a hot issue, but it is true.

Each zone should have a transfer-of-technology center that places it with a local university.

Finally, one of the hottest issues that is talked about is the give-away programs, and what are the States and counties and cities and the Federal Government willing to do to create jobs?

I want to explain just what the City of Cuba did. We gave away the land in the industrial park. We abated the taxes for 10 years. We gave a 30-percent rebate on utilities the first year, 20 percent the second year, 10 percent the third year, 5 percent the fourth and fifth. County abatement of taxes. Free utilities. We even gave away the gravel in the county for the roads and the parking lots.

When that plan originally was directed, it received a severe amount of criticism. But let me give you the results as of today from the Enterprise Zone Program in our county:

Food stamps in our county have been reduced from $85,000 a month to $55,000 a month, a savings of $360,000 per year to the taxpayers.

Unemployment has dropped from 14 percent to 5 percent. Hardcore unemployment in our county has been cut in half.

Sales tax revenues—we talked about the revenue stream—are up 33 percent. City revenues are up over 50 percent.

Fifteen industries have located in this Enterprise Zone in the last two and a half years. They have created 850 jobs, with an infusion of $12 million into our city. And the storefronts which at one time were empty. Today, they are all filled.

A Midwest Governor one time said that it is a very strange phenomenon, it seems that they put to work the philosophy that the more they give the more they receive. How strange that a Christian philosophy such as this works so well in current economic theory.

Thank you.

Senator BAUCUS. Thank you very much, Mr. Roedemeier.

Gentlemen, I very much appreciate what you are doing here. In my State of Montana, which is probably not too dissimilar from a lot of States, particularly Western States, we have a lot of rural economic depression. It is severe. And as Senator Danforth pointed out and as other witnesses have testified, including Senator Bond, most income in rural America is not farm income. That is, the folks who live either on the farms or in the smaller communities have to supplement their income to survive. And not only must we try to maintain a very strong agricultural base, we must also find ways to encourage and stimulate businesses in smaller communities so that that supplemental income will be there.

This is a subject that a lot of people have wrestled with for some time, and I frankly think that rural enterprise zones are a good idea—that is, they are a part of the solution. They are not the total solution, by any stretch of the imagination; but like almost everything else, there is no panacea, there is no quick fix, there is no meted cure-all. Rather, the solution depends on a continued, dedicated series of step-by-step, incremental improvements over what we now have. That, in my judgment, is the only way we are going to develop. This is one way among many which will probably help rural America.

I strongly believe that, unless we as a country spend more time figuring out how to develop our country nationally, which includes all Americans, and that means rural America, we are going to find ourselves as a country, in the next 15 or 20 years in pretty poor shape. This is a national problem.

I can't say precisely how quickly these bills will become law, but I can say that I think they are a good idea. And I very much appreciate the contribution that you have all made.

Senator Danforth.

Senator DANFORTH. Let me first address the question of the budget.

We have heard testimony that 62 percent of the income of farm families comes from nonfarm sources. That is farm families.

Now, Mr. Roedemeier in Cuba, Missouri, where I would imagine there are a lot of people who are not farm families but who live in Cuba who would not be counted even in that figure. Isn't that right?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. That is correct.

Senator DANFORTH. So, an overwhelming amount of the total income source that is available to smaller communities is from nonfarm sources. Isn't that right?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Yes.

Senator DANFORTH. We are spending $26 billion a year on farm subsidies, and we have heard testimony from the Treasury Department that the cost over three years of a much more expanded enterprise zone concept was $1.5 billion spread over three years, and that was for 75 enterprise zones. Some of them were urban. We are talking here about a much cheaper program than a half-billion dollars a year, as compared to $26 billion a year in farm programs, when the overwhelming percentage of the income sources for people who live in rural parts of our country are from nonfarm sources.

So I would say to those who have expressed concern about the budget—and I, too, am concerned about the budget—that I don't understand why Rural Enterprize Zones are not a priority, when the largest source of farm income is not from the sale of agricultural commodities but from nonfarm job opportunities within a rural community.

Let me also ask this to our experts. And Mr. Wolf, you haven't had your inning yet, but you might want to address this, too: My observation is that people who live in rural areas are very productive can-do people. They are people who are used to work, they know the work ethic, they know what it is to get up in the morning and get going, they know how to make equipment work. Am I correct in thinking that if we are concerned about productivity in this country, one way to increase our productivity is to increase the amount of manufacturing that goes on in rural areas? Is that a reasonable statement, or is that just my own observation.

Mr. WOLF. It certainly seems to be a fair statement. And the experience in Cuba is not necessarily atypical; there are other rural areas throughout the country that have used State and local enterprise zone types of incentives to generate increased employment and capital investment, places such as Kentucky, Mississippi, Minnesota, several other States.

Indeed, we would be foolish to label the program "urban enterprise zones," as it was originally. There are now urban, rural, and suburban zones, and the newest States that have passed enterprise zones, in the past year or two—Vermont, West Virginia, Colorado, Maine, Oregon, Hawaii, Arizona, even New York—have a heavy nonurban component to their zone program.

Senator DANFORTH. And it works, doesn't it?

Mr. WOLF. Yes.

Senator DANFORTH. It clearly works?

Mr. WOLF. Yes, Yes, it works, because it is the tool that brings together the public and private sectors, and also brings together State and local governments; and certainly, all appearances are that if there were Federal incentives it would do even more to stimulate that State and local public/private partnership.

Senator DANFORTH. What is the alternative? Is the alternative just to pull the plug on rural America? Is that the alternative, just to say, "Well, the dislocation that is now going on in rural America will continue to go on for an indefinite period of time," while we fiddle around with this budget?

Mr. WOLF. Well, the alternative is for those people who live in rural areas to commute to urban areas that are perhaps a hundred miles away, which is what happens in Missouri, for example.

Senator DANFORTH. That is absolutely correct, they travel tremendous distances. People go from Cuba into St. Louis, don't they, Mr. Roedemeier?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Yes, they do.

Senator ROEDEMEIER. That is right. And if you could imagine the hours they spend in their families, look at the impact that has on the family unit. These people would prefer to live and work at home with their families. I think we should give them that right.

Senator DANFORTH. Just to refresh my memory as to your testimony, when you were talking about the decline of Cuba, the dark days of Cuba, that was in 1984?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Yes.

Senator DANFORTH. In 1984 the unemployment rate was what?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. The Economics Department of the University of Missouri just came out with a report that said it had reached 20 percent when were were at our low ebb.

Senator DANFORTH. And would you tell us how enterprise zones entered into this? What did you do? You were the person. One of the things we could do is clone you and spread you around the country. [Laughter.]

But what did you do with enterprise zones? How did you use enterprise zones, and what was the effect of it?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Well, my background is business, and we approached it simply as a business problem. We saw the enterprise zone as the best marketing tool available to create new industries.

A lot of people have the misconception that you run around and grab other industries and bring them in. Well, that is not the case, at all. What you do is, you create an environment where new industries will grow and where the small businessman can take advantage of it. You will find small business people grab the concept quicker on enterprise zones than major corporations, because major corporations are more docile, they are larger structured, and they are not as quick to grab an advantage as a small business, which is great because small businesses are the guys who create the jobs. It doesn't take them long to put together the list of advantages, and that is what they all do. They lay the list of advantages—be it Federal advantages for taxes, county advantages, banking advantages, which is another key to the program—and then they lay that across on their income statement.

One of the shoe companies which was about to close in Steelville, Missouri, decided not to close because we were able to get the enterprise zone package—not in to the president or the general manager, we got it into the tax department. And they made the recommendation that we should not close this plant. In fact, they made the recommendation that we should increase it by 80 jobs. That is what an enterprise zone can do for a small community, and that is basically how we did it.

Senator DANFORTH. Thank you.

Senator CHAFEE. Mr. Roedemeier, one question. It seems to me that your success in Cuba was based upon far more than just the enterprise zones. In other words, you did lots of other things. Now, who owned the land?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. The city owned the land.

Senator CHAFEE. The city owned the land?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Yes.

Senator CHAFEE. You gave them gravel, you said?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Yes.

Senator CHAFEE. You put in the roads; you did all kinds of things. What kind of companies did you get out of it? I know there is a tremendous spinoff effect—if you get the companies, then J.C. Penney's store will stay, and all of that. But what were some of the companies? Were they major ones?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. No, they weren't. The companies that we have in there are very diversified, and you know that was one track we wanted to never get into again, and I guess all municipalities in rural America do not want to get trapped to the single industry again, to get laid in with mining or with shoes.

We went into the four areas that we felt we were best at: we are good at automotive, we were good at wood products, we were good at chemicals, because of the University of Missouri Chemistry Department, and we were also, I think, very good at food processing, but I have been unable to accomplish that. So, those were the areas.

Now, the other thing, the marketing program that we put down was for companies of 25 to 35 people; that was our market niche, we felt. We have been able to secure a larger company than that recently. We were talking about international—we brought in a company from Toronto, Canada. They were moving to Mexico because of the labor rate. You know, we fight that. But they were not willing to give up the technology that was available.

And you asked another key as to what it was for this enterprise zone, it was the involvement of new technologies which we transferred to startup businesses and existing businesses. It is one thing to create the jobs, but you also have to have a competitive company.

Senator CHAFEE. Where did you get your money from to do these things, to pay for roads and so forth? Was it EDA grants?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. Most of them were through block grants, where we actually had the customer or the business which was moving in, and we said, "We need this road." We used what is called a MODAG, which is Missouri's answer to UDAG.

Senator CHAFEE. State money?

Mr. ROEDEMEIER. State money, but I think it is interesting to know we also used a Federal program which is called a "revolving loan fund program." And I know the standard that we talk about so much is the creation of a job for $10,000, but the jobs that we have created we have created for under $1,000 per job. And it is only common sense. If it costs us $20,000 in this nation to keep a man out of work for two years, why shouldn't we put him to work for $2,000? It makes sense to me.

Senator CHAFEE. Well, if you can put him to work for $2,000, we ought to get you down here in Washington, but maybe that might kill you off.

Senator DANFORTH. No, let us leave him where he is. [Laughter.]

Senator CHAFEE. All right.

Any other questions?

[No response.]

Senator CHAFEE. Fine.

Mr. Stokvis, I appreciate the mention you made about the work that I have done on this in the past years. We gave it a full shot, and I am very interested in it, still. Thank you.

Thank you very much, gentlemen, for coming.

Our next witness will be Dr. Tom Lovejoy, Executive Vice President, and Ms. Katheryn Fuller, Vice President and General Counsel, the World Wildlife Fund. Would you please come forth? And Terrill Hyde, is she present with you?

Ms. HYDE. Yes.

Senator CHAFEE. Okay, Dr. Lovejoy, why don't you proceed. We have your statement, so you may proceed as you wish.●

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to again join the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Senator DANFORTH] and the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Senator PRYOR] in introducing the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1989. I hope that enactment of this legislation will be a top priority this year and I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Senate Finance Committee to finally make this legislation a reality.

Mr. President, while America's coastal States have been enjoying vigorous economic prosperity in the 1980's, the heartland of rural America has endured a prolonged and devastating economic decline. In 1986, the Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations, which I chaired, prepared a report cataloging the devastating economic plight of rural America.

The report found that net farm incomes had declined by 64 percent between 1979 and 1983 and farm land values had fallen by more than 30 percent since 1981. And as we all know, when farm incomes decline, Main Street spending falls, jobs in the local commercial sector disappear, and incomes in that sector decline as well.

That has been the reality of rural America in the 1980's, and it was only made worse by the drought of 1988. And that is why the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1987 is so important.

This legislation would establish 45 rural enterprise zones over a period of 3 years. These zones would cover areas of less than 50,000 people and would have to be areas with high unemployment. To attract businesses to locate in rural enterprise zones, the Federal Government would provide employers with a 10-percent tax credit for increased enterprise zone employment expenditures. In addition, gain on the sale or exchange of qualified zone property would be deferred as long as the proceeds are reinvested in a rural enterprise zone.

Commercial activities could be underwritten with small-issue industrial development bonds, and current law accelerated depreciated benefits would be allowed for activities financed by such bonds. Moreover, States would have to set aside 5 percent of their industrial development bond volume cap for rural enterprise zone issues.

Mr. President, the States will have to share some of the responsibility for making Federal rural enterprise zones a reality. This legislation requires that State and local governments make increased commitments, in the form of reduced taxes for zone businesses, increased services, and reduced regulations in these areas, in order for an area to qualify for designation as a Federal enterprise zone.

I am conviced that the State will do their part. Indeed, the States have led the way in developing the concept of enterprise zones. Already, there are 37 States that have initiated State enterprise zone programs. Now it is up to the Congress to do its part to help rebuild a vital and vibrant rural America.●

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, it is with pleasure that I join my colleague, Senator DANFORTH, in introducing legislation that will promote economic development in rural areas.

Rural economic development is a subject that is near and dear to me. For several years, I have worked extensively with industry and government representatives in the United States and abroad in an effort to attract new business to my State of South Dakota. While I have experienced a fair measure of success, I have learned the hard way how difficult it is to convince understandably wary businessmen that their investment in my State will be rewarded.

Rural areas experience a catch-22 where economic development is concerned. They find it difficult to attract businesses because they frequently lack the infrastructure, such as good roads and housing, that businesses depend upon for the stable production and transportation of goods. On the other hand, rural towns lack the revenues to improve their infrastructure because they cannot attract businesses that will generate revenues through economic activity.

Rural towns also face an uphill battle when competing for Federal funds. Programs benefiting rural areas have been cut by nearly 60 percent in the 1980's. This has had a severe impact on predominantly rural States. In South Dakota, well over two-thirds of the population is located in rural areas. We have only two areas in our State that qualify as standard metropolitan statistical areas.

At the same time, there is strong evidence that the need for economic development initiatives is as great, if not greater, in rural areas as it is in urban areas. For example, in the 1980's, we have seen 4 percent rural job growth, as compared to 13 percent job growth in metropolitan areas. An August 1988 issue of Newsweek reported that poverty in the countryside now exceeds that in the Nation's large cities. While I do not begrudge those who live in urban areas the assistance they now receive, I do think it is extremely important that we not forget about the vast numbers who live in economically depressed rural areas.

The budget deficit, and the targets we have set for reducing it, are going to make it very difficult to increase direct Federal funding of rural community development programs. The bill we are introducing today represents a more fiscally responsible means of approaching the problem. It says to people in rural areas, let's work as a team. If an area qualifies for designation as a rural enterprise zone, the Federal Government will provide incentives, in both the tax and regulatory areas, that will enable communities to help themselves.

Indian reservations will be able to qualify for rural enterprise zone designation under our bill, as well. Unofficial estimates show that unemployment on Indian reservations is well over 60 percent. Obviously, these areas cannot be ignored.

In the weeks and months ahead, I will be working with Senator DANFORTH to pass this important legislation. I welcome the support and input of my colleagues in this endeavor.●

S. 38. A bill to make long-term care insurance available to civilian Federal employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill, The Federal Employees Long-Term Care Insurance Act of 1989. This bill will allow this new 101st Congress to take a first and very important step toward making affordable, high-quality long-term health care coverage available to all Americans.

This bill allows the Office of Personnel Management to offer optional nursing home and home health care coverage to Federal employees who want it. Under this proposal, Federal employees, regardless of their health status, who have reached the age of 50 and participated in the life insurance program [FEGLI] for 10 years, can convert their life insurance to long-term care insurance at no additional expense to the Federal Government.

Since long-term care insurance costs more than life insurance, the employee would have to pay a small additional premium—about $11.00 per pay period. But, the Federal Government would redirect the contribution it normally makes toward the employee's life insurance, to insurance for long-term care. These two sources plus the reserves in the employees life insurance fund would pay for the new benefit and keep premium costs down. OPM would also make coverage available to spouses, although the employee would have to pay the full costs of the premium. By allowing for this type of convertible benefit, life insurance to long-term care insurance, this amendment lets Federal employees change the type of insurance they need as their lives change.

In the last Congress, this bill won wide bi-partisan support, 31 Senators had signed on as cosponsors. This session, 31 Senators introduce this bill with me as original cosponsors. I am proud to have as original cosponsors of S. 38, Senators MITCHELL, INOUYE, GRAHAM, SANFORD, DODD, MOYNIHAN, BRADLEY, and MATSUNAGA, along with last session's original cosposnsors, Senators DOLE and DURENBERGER. I am also proud to have the support of the ranking members of the committee and subcommittee with jurisdiction over this bill, Senators ROTH and STEVENS and other distinguished members of committees specifically concerned with the issue of long-term care—the Finance Committee, the Special Committee on Aging, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and the Appropriations Committee. The insurance companies—Metropolitan, Aetna, and the American Council of Life Insurance—have expressed their support for this bill in letters of endorsement. I am also delighted to join as a member of the committee with jurisdiction over this bill, the Governmental Affairs Committee and I look forward to working with the distinguished members of that committee to move this bill through as quickly as possible.

Last Congress, over 90 long-term health care bills waited for congressional attention. Very few received serious consideration and even fewer show promise of winning any type of bipartisan support. Defeat of the Pepper bill confirmed that Congress still has grave reservations about committing substantial Federal funds to finance a further expansion of medicare. I believe that many Members remain uncommitted to these proposals and undecided about the best way to solve the problem of access to long-term health care protection because some fundamental questions remain unanswered. As Congress tries to define the appropriate role for the Federal Government to play in ensuring Americans access to long-term health care, we still need to know how far the private sector can go to fill this need for affordable and high-quality long-term care coverage. We must have reliable data on the types and prices of private individual and group policies, and the willingness of employers to offer a long-term care benefit, before we will know how many Americans will be able to count on the private sector to meet their long-term health care needs.

I believe that this bill, won broad, bipartisan support last Congress because Senators saw it as a way to use the Federal Government as a catalyst to challenge the private insurance companies to compete in the long-term care marketplace. This bill allows Congress to use the Office of Personnel Management to conduct a long-term care demonstration project.

A pool of 3.1 million active Federal workers offers a tempting incentive for insurance carriers to develop a competitive long-term care insurance program. To date, Americans have purchased only 5-700,000 private long-term care insurance policies. Currently, private long-term care insurance does not play a bigger role because most individuals and employers cannot afford the high cost of the premiums.

Ninety percent of Federal employees participate in OPM's life insurance program and 655,000 of those employees plus their spouses, immediately would gain eligibility for long-term care coverage if this amendment becomes law. This proposal alone could double the number of people in this country who currently hold long-term care insurance.

And, just as importantly, by taking the lead to create a market in this area, the Federal Government can create a long-term care domino effect. More insurance carriers will enter the market in order to compete for the OPM contract. In order to win this competition, insurers will have to offer greatly improved insurance packages, both in terms of price and quality. I believe that as the prices come down and the quality goes up, State and local governments and large employers like the University of California, General Motors, and AT&T will gain an incentive to provide a new or convertible long-term care benefit, similar to OPM's to their employees. And, as more large employers begin to supply this kind of coverage, the prices should drop once again, eventually letting smaller employers and individuals enjoy the benefits of this long-term care competition. Through this amendment Congress can begin the process of making long-term care insurance available to the middle class and taking it out of the realm of a benefit only available to the wealthy.

Of course, this approach will not reach everyone in need of long-term care coverage. However, while Congress labors over how to help those individuals suffering right now because they did not have the opportunity to plan ahead for their long-term care needs, we, with OPM as a demonstration project and a catalyst, can do a great deal to make sure today's workers and perhaps even today's retirees do not find themselves in that same awful situation as they grow older.

The bill which I am introducing now differs only slightly from the one I introduced in the last session. I have made a few technical corrections to the original bill, making the legal language more clear and specific. I have also included two changes which were important in the process of gaining labor union support for the bill. Last Congress, Congressmen SLAUGHTER, RINALDO, and BURTON, introduced a similar bill in the House, H.R. 5167. They will reintroduce that bill again in the 101st Congress.

Their bill differs from mine in that they had a chance to incorporate language requested by the Federal employees' unions. So, in this new draft, I have simply added the more comprehensive National Association of Insurance Commissioners definition of long-term care and a reinsurance requirement for carriers in order to guarantee protection to the Federal employees.

I think every Senator knows the urgency of finding ways to make affordable, quality long-term care coverage available to the many Americans who need it. Medicare pays only 2 percent of nursing home expenses and private insurance covers only 1 percent. That means that Medicaid and uninsured individuals now must struggle to cover the majority of the financial burden that long-term care makes necessary.

Every time I go home to California, I hear the stories of anxiety and fear. Working individuals worry that without affordable long-term care insurance they must save enough money to try to protect themselves against the eventual enormous costs of long-term care. Retired elderly who still live independent lives agonize that they will lose everything they have worked for because they cannot afford the high rates of private insurance. And many elderly now in nursing homes, live in anxiety and fear as they spend down their savings and risk becoming impoverished.

Both the public and private sector must accelerate their efforts to make this critical long-term care coverage available. I believe that by approving this amendment, the 101st Congress can do a great deal to make long-term care available to the significant number of currently uninsured individuals.

OPM has a very sound, simple, noncontroversial, and straightforward idea which will unquestionably help many Americans. I was proud to turn that idea into legislation. It's rare when Congress can give something to many people without having to take something away from others and without endangering future legislative options. This bill will provide a very important benefit to Federal employees, it will facilitate development of the private sector by creating a new market, and it will help Congress collect valuable data as we consider more comprehensive long-term care proposals to help those not served by this approach.

I hope Members will join me in a bipartisan effort to take a very important first step toward ensuring that all Americans have access to affordable and high quality long-term health care coverage.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of this bill.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 38

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Employees Long-term Care Insurance Act of 1989".

SECTION 1. LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE.

Chapter 87 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 8701 by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) For the purpose of this chapter, 'long-term care insurance' means any policy purchased by the Office of Personnel Management under authority of section 8709 of this title for the purpose of providing coverage for not less than 12 consecutive months for each covered person on an expense incurred, indemnity, or prepaid basis for necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, rehabilitative, maintenance, or personal care services to maintain activities of daily living or functional capacity, provided in a setting other than an acute care unit of a hospital. Such coverage may include not only institutional services but in-home and community-based services as well. The coverage under long-term care insurance is not intended to provide basic Medicare supplemental coverage, basic hospital expense coverage, basic medical-surgical expense coverage, hospital confinement indemnity coverage, major medical expense coverage, disability income protection coverage, accident-only coverage, specified disease or specified accident coverage, or limited benefit health coverage.";

(2) in section 8704 by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Office shall provide optional group long-term insurance coverage for civilian employees in accordance with the following terms and conditions:

"(A) Consistent with the conditions, directives, and terms specified in section 8701(e), 8709, and 8712 of this title, the Office shall arrange for each qualified employee, as defined in paragraph (4) of this subsection, to have an opportunity to irrevocably convert a portion of the employee's basic insurance amount and associated accrued projected claims reserve funds, as determined by the Office of Personnel Management, for purposes of group life insurance and accidental death and dismemberment insurance under this section to group long-term care insurance.

"(B) The long-term care insurance shall, as the Office determines appropriate, offer employees more than one reimbursement plan from more than one insurer.

"(C) The Office shall determine appropriate employee contributions which shall be payable for all periods during which long-term care insurance continues and shall be withheld from any salary, compensation, or retirement annuity due an insured individual. Each employee's contribution rate under this subsection shall be determined by the employee's age at the time an election is made for purposes of this subsection, relative to such age and rate categories as the Office determines will, with adjustments provided for under paragraph (3) of this subsection, fully cover estimated long-term care insurance policy costs in excess of the actuarial value of the life insurance conversion amount.

"(D) The Office shall establish appropriate age and rate categories for qualified employees who wish to avoid the basic insurance conversion requirement and pay the full cost of group long-term care coverage.

"(E) The Office shall also arrange for qualified employees who elect group long-term care insurance on themselves under this subsection to have, simultaneous with their election or upon subsequent marriage, the option of purchasing supplementary long-term care insurance coverage on a spouse, without evidence of such spouse's insurability and at appropriate group rates added to the affected employee's individual contribution rate.

"(F) An active or retired employee may cease contributions under this subsection at any time, in which case the long-term care insurance shall terminate, with no restoration of converted group life insurance coverage.

"(2) Any employee who elects to convert basic life insurance to long-term care insurance as provided by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall retain a residual amount of the group life insurance and accidental death and dismemberment insurance authorized under this section which shall equal the greater of—

"(A) $2,000, or

"(B) an amount representing the basic insurance amount generally available based on the employee's current annual rate of basic pay decreased by the life insurance conversion requirement established pursuant to paragraph (3) of this subsection on the date the employee elected long-term care insurance.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the Office shall specify the initial dollar amounts for the life insurance conversion requirement and, in consultation with insurers, determine the reimbursement rates for benefits under each long-term care insurance plan (including reasonable waiting periods for benefit commencement) and periodic employee contributions for self and for spouse coverage based on age categories of qualified employees as the Office considers appropriate. All amounts determined in accordance with this paragraph shall be subsequently adjusted on the effective date, and in accordance with the average percent, of any change in pay rates for the General Schedule authorized under section 5305 of this title. Other adjustments of amounts under this paragraph may be made at such other times and in such amounts as the Office determines necessary and prescribes by regulation. The Office may, through negotiations with insurers, provide options that, by using other indexes, allow increases that exceed those of the General Schedule.

"(4) A qualified employee for purposes of this subsection is any employee who is subject to this chapter and who—

"(A) is in active service;

"(B) attains an age specified by regulations of the Office, which shall be no less than 50 years of age;

"(C) is insured under this chapter and has been insured for a total of 10 years, or elects to make contributions for long-term care insurance without the benefit of the basic insurance conversion authorized by paragraph (1) of this subsection; and

"(D) has not transferred ownership of life insurance to another person under subsection 8706(e) of this chapter.

"(5) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (4)(B), after the 5-year period beginning on the effective date of this subsection, an employee may be less than 50 years of age and qualify under the provisions of paragraph (4) if determined to be eligible under regulations promulgated by the Director of the Office of Personnel Management.

"(6) Unless otherwise provided by regulations of the Office, all elections involving employee insurance under this subsection shall be made within a period which the Office shall specify that begins when each employee first becomes a qualified employee as described in paragraph (4) of this subsection.";

(3) in section 8706(a)—

(A) by inserting "life insurance" immediately before "policy purchase"; and

(B) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "An election of long-term care insurance under subsection 8704(e) shall be disregarded for purposes of determining an employee's basic insurance amount under this subsection. A long-term care insurance policy under this chapter may provide for conversion to an individual or group policy upon separation from service.";

(4) by amending section 8707(c) to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Except as otherwise provided by this subsection, the amount withheld from the pay, annuity, or compensation of each employee subject to insurance deductions under this section shall be at the rate, adjusted to the nearest half-cent, of 66⅔ percent of the level cost as determined by the Office for each $1,000 of the employee's basic insurance amount.

"(2) No employee withholding is required under this subsection, however, for any part of the basic insurance amount that is converted to long-term care insurance under subsection 8704(e) of this title.";

(5) by amending section 8708(a) to read as follows:

"(a) Except as otherwise provided by this section, for each period in which an employee is insured under a policy of insurance purchased by the Office of Personnel Management under section 8709 of this title and is subject to withholding under section 8707 of this title, a sum equal to one-half of the general employee withholding specified under section 8707(c)(1) of this title shall be contributed from the appropriation or fund used to pay the employee. Contributions under this section shall be apportioned between basic life insurance and long-term care insurance accounts in the Employees' Life Insurance Fund if an employee has elected the basic insurance conversion permitted under section 8704(e) of this title.";

(6) in section 8708 by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The sum required by subsection (a) of this section in the case of each employee who retires on immediate annuity or commences receiving compensation under subchapter I of chapter 81 of this title after December 31, 1989, and who elects to retain insurance under section 8706(b)(3)(A) of this chapter, shall be paid by the Office from annual appropriations which are hereby authorized to be made for that purpose and which may be made available until expended.";

(7) by amending section 8709(a) to read as follows:

"(a) The Office of Personnel Management may, in its sole discretion and without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5) purchase from one or more duly licensed insurers a policy to provide benefits specified by this chapter, including group life insurance, accidental death and dismemberment insurance, and long-term care insurance. For long-term care insurance, purchase will be through a competitive process among insurers who agree to accept liability for the benefits offered. To be eligible for consideration as an insurer under this chapter, an entity shall meet the following requirements:

"(1) For purposes of group life and accidental death and dismemberment insurance, such insurer shall—

"(A) be licensed to transact such insurance in all the States; and

"(B) have in effect, on the most recent December 31 for which information is available to the Office, an amount of employee group life insurance equal to at least 1 percent of the total amount of employee group life insurance in the United States in all life insurance companies.

"(2) For purposes of group long-term care insurance, such insurer shall—

"(A) be licensed to transact group life or health insurance in each State in which the company proposes to offer long-term care benefits provided by this chapter; and

"(B) have, in the judgment of the Office, long-term care expertise, substantial experience with insuring very large groups, and financial soundness."; and

(8) in section 8710—

(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) by inserting "life and accidental death and dismemberment" immediately after "total amount of"; and

(ii) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This section shall not apply to long-term care insurance authorized under subsection 8704(e) of this chapter (except as provided in subsection (g) of this section).";

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) The Office shall arrange with a company issuing a policy for long-term care insurance for the reinsurance, under conditions approved by the Office, of portions of the total liability to be assumed with other insurance companies which elect to participate in the reinsurance,";

(9) in section 8712 in the fourth sentence by striking out "life"; and

(10) in section 8714(a) in the first sentence by inserting "8704(e) or" before "8707".

SEC. 502. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect on January 1 of the first year which begins at least 120 days after the date of enactment.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, today I join my colleague from California, Senator WILSON, in offering the Federal Employees Long-term Care Insurance Act of 1989, legislation to make long-term care insurance available to Federal employees.

Mr. President, sooner or later, virtually every family in America will be confronted with a catastrophic illness. Whether it's a grandparent with Alzheimer's disease, a spouse hit by a stroke, a worker in the prime of life disabled by an accident, a relative stricken with cancer, or a child born with cerebral palsy—the expense for needed care could result in destroying, if not severely taxing, a family's financial security. Catastrophic illness seems to impact most dramatically on three groups: older Americans who face hospital bills which exceed their medicare coverage; those who need expensive, long-term care services; and working Americans who lack adequate health insurance. Such an illness can require treatment or care so costly that many families can only pay by impoverishing themselves.

Last year, this body adopted legislation addressing the first group—older Americans who face hospital bills which exceed their medicare coverage. The Medicare Catastrophic Illness Coverage Act of 1988—which has now been signed into law. The legislation will provide for a cap in the out-of-pocket costs that a Medicare beneficiary can incur during a year for hospital and physician charges, and it provides coverage of out-of-pocket prescription drugs for the first time in Medicare's history. In addition, it allows elderly couples—faced with huge nursing home bills—to hang on to more of their resources before Medicaid kicks in, thus avoiding being reduced to poverty as a result of the magnitude of the expenses.

As I communicated with seniors in Arizona about the Medicare Catastrophic Illness Coverage Act I found that, by a 3-to-1 majority, seniors in my State felt that though some of the benefits in the bill would be nice, most of the benefits are not truly catastrophic related. What's more, most of the benefits are available through the private sector. In doing so, this legislation will significantly increase the premiums that many seniors are responsible for under the Medicare Program.

The resounding sentiment of Arizona's seniors seemed to be that they would have preferred that Congress address what they saw as the true catastrophic health need seniors face—protection from the financial ravages of long-term care expenses. They are willing to pay for the cost of a new program, but only if it provides coverage of those services which they feel they need. Needless to say, many seniors in my State are upset. They are deeply concerned that the Government has just established a new public program—which, for the most part, duplicates benefits that are currently available through the private sector. What they expected is that the Government would work to make sure that they were able to protect themselves from what is their true catastrophic concern—and not widely available through the private sector—protection from the enormous cost of long-term care services.

Due to a lack of affordable long-term care protection available in the private sector, most are unable to insure themselves and at the point that they need nursing-home services they have to pay for the services out of their pockets. That is, until they have exhausted their resources—at which time they become eligible for Medicaid benefits (or in Arizona's case, the counties—and soon to be AHCCCS). The result is that many end up impoverishing themselves and their spouses, prior to being eligible for public assistance. Included in the Medicare Catastrophic Illness Protection Act was a provision providing spouses with some measure of protection. This is, indeed, a true catastrophic benefit—and will be helpful to many Americans.

The numbers are alarming, and perhaps best tell the story.

Americans spend about $38 billion a year on nursing home care. Seventy percent of all single people admitted to a nursing home go broke within 3 months; close to 90 percent of single older Americans will be impoverished within a year; and 50 percent of all couples are impoverished within 6 months after one spouse is admitted.

Over 60 percent of American families have already had direct experience with the need for protection from long-term care expenses. Millions of Americans suffer from chronic conditions that limit their ability to function on their own. Some need help preparing meals. Others need assistance in feeding themselves, bathing, getting dressed, or just getting around. Most of the help they need is nonmedical—referred to as custodial care. It is little wonder that the need for protection from the cost of such care is such a concern—with the cost of a year's nursing home stay ranging from $20 to $35,000. Many of the needed services can also be provided at home. Delivery of such services at home is often the less costly, and is better for the family and individual in need of care. But, like services provided in the nursing home, there really is not much protection available from the cost of these services—unless the individual is eligible for Medicaid, or AHCCC as in Arizona's case.

It is my belief that Congress must work hard to tackle, this session, the need to provide older Americans with protection from the expenses of long-term care services. But, this task is not going to be easy.

Given the need to exercise fiscal restraint—in light of the Federal budget deficits, and the increased financial burden that will be placed on Medicare beneficiaries as a result of the Medicare Catastrophic Illness Coverage Age—I believe the most responsible approach would be the development of a public/private partnership. Addressing the long-term care coverage issue requires the involvement of all segments of our society. We must develop a partnership—if you will—among individuals, families, private organizations and all levels of government.

Based on my discussions with Arizonans, I believe a responsible public/private partnership approach to dealing with the need for enhanced long-term care coverage is what's needed. Certainly, any approach with regard to providing long-term care coverage must include both services provided in nursing homes and those provided at home.

While we probably will not get there overnight, I believe that forging a private/public partnership approach to meeting the long-term care coverage needs of older Americans will assure greatest success.

This legislation, which I am offering today with Senator WILSON, is one step in that direction. It would permit Federal employees, who have reached the age of 50 and particated in the life insurance program [FEGLI] for 10 years, to convert their life insurance to long-term care insurance. Eligibility for participation would not be affected at all by the health status of the individual. The process of determining which company would actually offer the policy would be handled through a competitive bidding process. And, because there is a cost difference between life insurance and long-term care insurance, employees would have to pay nominal premiums in addition to what they already pay for their life insurance benefit. This change will not result in new cost to the Federal Government, it will merely expand the insurance options available to Federal employees.

I believe this legislation, which was first offered at the end of last session, represents a responsible approach to providing access to long-term care protection for one group—Federal employees. For that, Senator WILSON and those at the Office of Personnel Management are to be commended.

But, Mr. President, we must not stop here. Building a comprehensive, responsible, approach to long-term care is like piecing together a puzzle. With a puzzle, each piece is an integral component—and without all the pieces, a puzzle is not complete. This legislation is one of the pieces to that puzzle.

Last year, I offered legislation designed to make it possible for workers to transfer their pension benefits from employer to employer as they change jobs. One of the important components of this legislation, S. 1349, the Pension Portability Act—and relevant to the attempt to develop a comprehensive long-term care policy—is a provision making it possible for individuals in the private sector to tap their pension benefits to help meet long-term care expenses. Mr. President, I believe this, too, is a piece to the puzzle, and I will be offering it again this session.

Providing our Nation's citizens with protection from the financial ravages of a long-term care needs in a responsible way will only be accomplished as a result of a lot of individuals working together to creatively craft the various pieces to the puzzle. While there are obstacles, such as our Nation's budget deficits, I believe we can be successful.

This legislation, which we are offering today, is evidence of the fact that we can be successful. If enacted, this legislation will assist Federal employees in obtaining long-term care coverage. And, due to the large pool of individuals that will be participating, the cost to the individual will be lower under this approach than if they were to purchase the plan on the open market. The cost to the Federal Government will be negligible, because the Federal Government's role is not the funding of a new government program. It's role will merely be that of coordinating, and overseeing, a new program. In my opinion, this proposal is a responsible piece to the puzzle, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from California in offering this legislation.

I hope that my colleagues will take a hard look at this proposal. And, I look forward to timely consideration of this measure during the 101st Congress.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of legislation to make long-term care insurance available to civilian Federal employees. This bill, introduced by my colleague, Senator WILSON, is similar to S. 1738, which enjoyed strong bipartisan support in the 100th Congress. I hope that we can pass this legislation in the 101st Congress, and in so doing, take an important first step toward addressing the long-term health needs of all Americans.

According to the Department of Health and Human Services, there are currently more than 6 million Americans over age 65 requiring long-term care. We can expect the demand for long-term care to increase dramatically as our population ages. Between 1989 and 2025, the number of Americans age 85 and over—and at greatest risk of spending time in a nursing home—will escalate from 6 to 26 million.

For those older Americans who do spend time in a nursing home, the costs are often astronomical. The cost of spending 1 year in a nursing home currently ranges between $20,000 and $50,000 per year. As a consequence, the income and assets of more than half of all elderly couples are depleted within 1 year of a nursing home admission.

At present, 41.5 percent of all long-term care expenses are financed through Medicaid, while only 2 percent are covered under Medicare. More than 51 percent of these expenses are paid for out of pocket by older persons and their families. While a number of companies currently offer private long-term health care policies, the premiums—which can exceed $4,000 per year—are beyond the reach of most older Americans.

Clearly, the present situation places too many older Americans in the untenable position of choosing between unmanageable premiums on one hand, and vulnerability to the devastating costs of long-term care on the other.

The bill we are introducing today begins to address this dilemma in a significant way. Based on a proposal developed by the Office of Personnel Management, this bill will allow Federal employees to convert equity from their group life insurance plan to long-term care insurance—at no cost to the Federal Government. Under this plan, coverage for either nursing home care or home health visits will be available immediately to more than 655,000 Federal employees and their spouses.

Equally important, this legislation will create a strong new incentive for private insurance carriers to develop competitive long-term care policies. It is expected that, as more carriers enter the market to compare for the OPM contract, the quality of these policies will improve as prices come down, inducing private companies to offer new long-term benefits to their employees. Thus, through a domino-effect, the benefit of this legislation can extend well beyond the sphere of those employed by the Federal Government.

While this bill does not address every facet of the long-term care crisis, I do believe that it represents a realistic approach that will provide immediate benefits to thousands of older Americans, while keeping the door open for future legislative actions. I am pleased to support Senator WILSON in this endeavor and I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join me in cosponsoring this legislation.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Federal Employees Long-Term Care Insurance Act of 1989 being introduced today. I believe with this proposal we are taking an important step in the direction of developing a national policy on long-term care.

This legislation was developed out of a proposal initially put together by the Federal Office of Personnel Management. Under this legislation Federal employees who have reached the age of 50 and participated in the Federal employees' life insurance program for 10 years, would be allowed to convert a portion of their life insurance to long-term care insurance. This long-term care insurance would offer optional nursing home and home health coverage to Federal employees who want it. My advocacy of in-home and community-based care options dates back to my first years in the Senate. These would be covered under this proposal for long-term care insurance. My own State of Oregon has been a pioneer in providing senior citizens alternatives to institution-based care and is one of the few States that has been allowed to use Medicaid money for low-income senior citizens to provide services outside of nursing homes. This program has been a great success.

Many people in this country today are concerned about the cost of long-term care for the elderly. However, despite considerable discussion about ways to solve the problem, this country seems unable to agree on a financing strategy that is both fair and affordable. While the debate rages, the cost of long-term care continues to rise. Many senior citizens do not have the financial resources to pay for long-term care and most individuals do not buy long-term care insurance until they are elderly and in high risk of going into a nursing home.

I believe that Government and the private sector must share the responsibility of paying for long-term care. Public spending on long-term care would be reduced if the private market is promoted. The bill being introduced today can serve as an incentive to private sector employers to provide their employees such coverage and will, additionally, provide useful data to help the private sector market determine the long-term care needs of the public.

Mr. President, in closing, I would like to emphasize the importance of continuing the dialog on long-term care. We cannot afford to stand idly by while millions of Americans become destitute under our present system of health care.

By Mr. ROTH (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. SIMON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 39. A bill entitled the "Arctic Wildlife Refuge Administration Act"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

ARCTIC WILDLIFE REFUGE ADMINISTRATION ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, as this distinguished body addresses the issues and challenges of good government, we often find that the process is a challenge in and of itself. It's a challenge because often the lines of distinction between what is good, better, and best for the American people are blurred by deep convictions and strong emotions from all parties concerned.

Today I rise with Senators BRADLEY, CHAFEE, DURENBERGER, MOYNIHAN, LIEBERMAN, SIMON, HARKIN, METZENBAUM, KERRY, and LEAHY, to introduce legislation that abounds with such diverse convictions and emotions. It's a proposal to preserve and protect the Coastal Plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge for our children and the future generations—a proposal that is as sound as it is important and valid as it is persuasive. It's a proposal that will force us to look back over our history and ask what we have done with our continent and realize that we cannot afford to ignore what happens.

The arguments for this bill will test the Congress and each Member in it. It will test our willingness to pay a small price to leave an invaluable, unique, and irreplaceable part of our natural heritage for the enjoyment of ourselves and for our children.

29-059 O-90-20 (Pt. 1)

Mr. President, there are few things of value that we can leave our posterity with the confidence that they will endure beyond our lifetime. Undisturbed land is one of these.

However, as time passes, we also receive greater pressure from those who feel we need to develop the precious resources on that land. Frightened by the energy crunch, or motivated by economic gain, either way their collective voices demand development.

Those advancing a position for the development of the area firmly believe that it is in the best interest of the American people to explore and to drill and to develop. Their argument is punctuated with the exclamation point of the past energy crises and those to come. They maintain that short-term energy resources are more important than long-term natural resources, and that development will not harm the Coastal Plain.

Frankly, Mr. President, I don't buy their argument. In a recently released Fish and Wildlife Service report, scientists concluded that fish and wildlife habitat losses resulting from construction and operation of the pipeline and Prudhoe Bay oilfield were greatly underestimated, and that the long-term and cumulative impacts have yet to be assessed.

Instead, I believed the vision of our Nation has to exceed our grasp. We have to look to the future well-being of our fragile environs. We have to understand that our responsibility to protect the environment for the health and well-being of generations to come—greatly outweighs the need for convenient short-term solutions to energy needs. We have to understand that the short-term gains are overshadowed by long-term consequences.

To illustrate how short-term these gains are, the mean recoverable estimates—if oil is found—would provide an average of 2 percent of the Nation's annual oil consumption over the life of the field. Would we want to dam the spectacular geological phenomenon of the Grand Canyon for electricity or drill Yellowstone for geothermal energy? The answer is "No." We want to save these natural resources and protect them for enjoyment by future generations. There is no difference with these decisions and the ones we have to make concerning the Coastal Plain, an area of such beauty and wildlife that it should remain pristine wilderness.

Mr. President, the abundance and diversity of wildlife on the Coastal Plain is among the richest in the world. It is the productive concentrated biology that makes it so important and unique.

As one of the world's most extraordinary natural frontiers we must take pride that the Coastal Plain is ours. If we take this duty seriously, we will in no way be able to justify the stripping and mining and drilling that have been proposed for a temporary supply of oil.

Mr. President, we can see the difficult decision faced by Congress. But we're expected to find the answer, and I believe we can. I believe that the 1-to-5 odds of finding oil at $40 per barrel does not outweigh the price future generations will pay because of irreparable damage to the wilderness area. I believe it is clear that we must leave the beauty and the natural resources of the frontier to the wildlife and to future generations. What price are we willing to pay for extracting the oil up there? If the refuge is lost now it is lost forever and the Nation as a whole will be shortchanged.

To meet our Nation's energy requirements, we must continue to proceed on two fronts. We must continue to reduce the demand for energy through conservation. As a matter of fact, 2 years ago the Department of Energy reported that conservation had done more than any other source to improve the U.S. energy situation. If the Congress mandates an increase in the corporate average fuel economy standards to 30 miles per gallon starting in the year 1994, we would save 11 billion barrels of oil by the year 2030. Thus, Mr. President, by simply raising the standard we could save three times more oil over the life of an oilfield in the Coastal Plain than the Interior Department predicts will be found there.

Second, we must increase domestic supplies of energy through alternate sources that will result in long-term solutions. But to opening a conservation area to oil development sends the wrong message. We are buying rain forests to stem the tide of deforestation, we are spending millions of dollars to restore swamps and protect wetlands and wildlife, and we now have a chance to save the only entire Arctic ecosystem that is left and that has not been exploited in one way or another. It is an opportunity of a lifetime that we must not let slip away.

Mr. President, this pristine untouched ecosystem spreads out over both the United States and Canada. It is one of the last unspoiled remnants of Arctic beauty and wealth that remains, and it provides us with a magnificent opportunity to work with the Canadians in legislatively designating this area as an international wilderness area. The Canadians have done much to protect their northern resources that are shared with the United States. This action will significantly strengthen the recognition of the international importance of these shared lands.

My message is clear. Congress must act responsibly as we consider the future of the Coastal Plain—we must reaffirm our decision to save this area and declare it a wilderness and I urge my colleagues to join us in sponsoring this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that statements by my colleagues be placed in the RECORD at the appropriate time and as if read, and I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 39

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding any provisions of the National Wildlife Refuge Administration Act, a portion of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska comprising approximately 1,556,793 acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled, "Arctic Coastal Plain Wilderness—Proposed", dated June, 1986, and available for inspection in the offices of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby designated as a component of the National Wilderness Preservation System.●

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I join Senators ROTH, Bradley, CHAFEE, MOYNIHAN, LIEBERMAN, KERRY, LEAHY, METZENBAUM, HARKIN, and SIMON as a cosponsor of S. 39, a bill to designate the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge [ANWR] a wilderness area. Whether to open the coastal plain for oil development or preserve its pristine characteristics is the most controversial public land use question facing this Congress. And by cosponsoring this bill I state my position and send a message that the last pristine arctic ecosystem of North America should not be destroyed unless the United States does everything possible to promote alternative energies and energy conservation.

Let me briefly outline the history of this controversy. Alaska became a State on July 7, 1959. Two and a half years later, on December 8, 1960, the Arctic National Wildlife Range was created by Public Law Order 2214. The range consisted of 8.9 million acres of land in northeastern Alaska. Nearly 20 years later, in December 1980, the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act [ANILCA] added 17.9 million acres of land to the 8.9 million acres of the range creating the 26.8 million acre Arctic National Wildlife Refuge [ANWR] (Public Law 96-487). In total, ANILCA preserved 104.3 million acres of Alaskan lands. I voted for its passage.

Like now, the lure of oil made management of the 1.5 million-acre coastal plain controversial. A compromise was worked out delaying a final decision. It called for a comprehensive study to be done by the Department of the Interior to determine the area's oil and gas potential and possible impact of development on fish and wildlife. Although drilling was not allowed, limited exploration was permitted. The Interior Department presented the study, a Legislative Environmental Impact Statement [LEIS], to Congress in April, 1987.

The study recommended that the entire coastal plain be open for development concluding that there is a 19-percent probability that economically recoverable oil would be found. It found that there was a 95-percent chance of finding 600,000 million barrels of oil and a 5-percent chance of finding 9.2 billion barrels. Such a find is comparable to the Prudhoe Bay's 9.6 billion barrels—Prudhoe Bay produces nearly one-fifth of the U.S. total oil production. In sum, the study concluded that under the most likely economic case of $33 [1984 dollars] per barrel of oil in the year 2000 and 6 percent inflation, a 19-percent chance exists that there is economically recoverable oil somewhere in ANWR's coastal plain.

Although the study acknowledged that the area's pristine characteristics would be destroyed and fish and wildlife would be impacted upon, it concluded that the adverse impacts could be mitigated.

Mr. President, as one would expect proponents of oil development applauds the report's conclusion, while opponents argue they are flawed because the Interior Department failed to consider vital aspects of the issue.

Proponents argue that oil development of the coastal plain is essential to national security. They argue, and in many respects I agree, that the Nation is too dependent on imported oil. Currently, the country imports 43 percent of its annual oil use. By comparison, when the 1973 and 1978 OPEC embargoes occurred the United States imported 35 percent of its oil use. Compounding the current problem is the recent trend of increased domestic oil consumption, while domestic production declines. In addition, the long-term outlook for domestic production is not favorable. Prudhoe Bay, the source of one-fifth of the Nation's domestic oil production, is about to begin a long-term decline. Thus, proponents argue that exploration and subsequent development of the coastal plain is vital to fuel the country's thriving economy and protect it from foreign embargoes.

Those that support opening the coastal plain believe that development will not adversely affect the environment and even if it does, whatever adverse affects occur can be mitigated. They cite Prudhoe Bay as a model of environmental protection, while simultaneously arguing that they had learned from the mistakes made at Prudhoe Bay and therefore will not make them again. In addition, it is argued that oil development is inevitable and so it is sound environmental policy to begin development now when it can be done wisely, rather than waiting for another oil crisis to propel development that ignores environmental safeguards. A key argument is that developing the oil at the coastal plain makes sound economic sense since the expensive transportation infrastructure, the TransAlaska pipeline, is already in place. Finally, many proponents argue that the revenues from oil production from the coastal plain can be used for fish and wildlife enhancement efforts, therefore off-setting any damage done to the plain.

Naturally, Mr. President, the opponents, of which I am one, disagree. We see the coastal plain as land essentially the way God created it, and seek to keep it that way. The arctic tundra is so fragile that any step toward oil development will do irreversible, long lasting damage wrecking the area's pristine qualities. Not only would opening the area to oil exploration ruin its cherished wilderness qualities, but it would ruin the most biologically productive part of the Arctic refuge for wildlife. Such action has been compared to putting a dam below the Grand Canyon, effectively turning it into a reservoir.

While I have a deep desire to preserve the area's wilderness qualities, I have very strong policy objections to opening the coastal plain to oil development. There seems to be a presumption that where there is oil we should unthinkingly develop with the burden placed on those of us who seek a sound long-term energy policy. Geographically, this burden is placed not only on the coastal plain of Alaska, but also on the off-shore areas of California, Florida, and Massachusetts. Yet, as the Nation drifts without an energy policy and pristine lands shrink, the burden should be placed on the proponents of development. In my mind, when balancing the damage to coastal plain the proponents of development do not meet their burden.

I cannot support Interior's recommendation because it runs counter to the Nation's long-term energy needs. Already, we can see the demise of oil as a viable long-term energy source. Thus, the wise public policy is to develop alternative energy sources, as well as strong energy conservation programs. Ironically, just the opposite has occurred. Funding to R&D programs for alternative energy sources has been slashed. In constant dollars [1982], the total budget fell from $1.21 billion in fiscal year 1979 to $301 million in fiscal year 1988, a 75-percent drop. If this trend continues the Congressional Research Service predicts the programs will go extinct in 2 to 5 years. Clear evidence of the affect of this decline can be found in the corresponding decline in the U.S. position in the international market for alternative energy systems. Three years ago the United States dominated the international marketing of wind, photovoltaics, and solar thermal systems. Now, it accounts for less than a third. In fact, the United States is not a net importer of wind and solar systems.

According to the Government Accounting Office the cuts in Federal funding has eroded American leadership in photovoltaics technology. A constituent whose company makes photovoltaic systems told me the Japanese have taken up the slack and are now his primary competitor. In addition, the loss of the 40 percent Federal tax credit for residential solar installations caused the solar space and water heating market to decline sharply, domestic sales fell from $900 million in 1985 to $300 million in 1986.

While I know these alternative energy sources cannot replace oil now—nonrenewable energy supplies 8 percent of the national energy demand—but someday soon they have to. Yet the failure to support these alternative energy sources is not wise energy policy. Thus, I want to send a signal with my cosponsorship that we must look to alternative energies to meet the country's future energy needs. Currently, we are not doing this and until we do I will oppose opening up the coastal plain to oil development.

On a similar note, not only must we look for future energy sources to replace oil, we must do everything we can to conserve the oil that we have today. And the place to start is with automobiles. Transportation consumes nearly two-thirds of the Nation's oil, with highway vehicles accounting for 80 percent of that amount. In 1985, automobiles used 58 percent of the total fuel used by highway vehicles. Since the oil embargoes of the seventies, the United States has made great strides in energy efficiency. According to Worldwatch Institute, the U.S. energy economy has improved 24 percent since 1973, saving the United States 4 billion barrels in 1987 alone. This is much more than experts hope to find in the coastal plain.

Yet, Mr. President, much more can be done, particularly regarding the energy efficiency standards established by the Automobile Fuel Efficiency Act which created the corporate average fleet economy [CAFE] standards. The CAFE standard is the bulwark of the Nation's energy conservation measures. In 1974 the U.S. average fleet miles per gallon was 12.9 mile per gallons [mpg]. This average has increased significantly to 26.7 in 1987. But more can be done since the fleet average for imported automobiles is 31.0 mpg. And when U.S. fleet averages are compared to other countries' fleet averages, the United States does very poorly. Despite the success of the CAFE standard higher standards have not been set. When the target was supposed to be 27.5 mpg, the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration set the standards at 26.0 for 1987 and 1988, despite the fact that Chryslar Motor Corp. could meet the higher standard.

From a conservation perspective setting high CAFE standards and enforcing them is very important. Each gallon of improvement in the U.S. automobile fleet would save 130 million barrels of oil each year. Thus, if the fleet average were 27.5 mpg the Nation would save 4.6 billion barrels of oil over the life of those cars. Similarly, a fleet average of 30 mpg would save 11 billion barrels. Both averages can be reached relatively easily and they would save many more barrels of oil than the coastal plain could ever hope to produce over its 30-year projected lifetime.

In addition to this policy view, I have other concerns. First, I have very serious reservations concerning the conclusion that if exploration and subsequent oil development was permitted the adverse environmental consequences would not be that great. It is universally acknowledged that opening the coastal plain would irrevocably destroy the area's wilderness qualities. But I think the adverse and cumulative impact would be much more severe. In a suppressed December 1987, draft U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service report comparing the actual and predicted impacts of the Trans-Alaska pipeline and Prudhoe Bay concluded that damages to the region's fish and wildlife were much greater than expected. It concluded that bird, bear, and wolf populations declined significantly. In addition, there have been countless oil spills, hazardous dumps created, and toxic air releases at Prudhoe Bay. It is estimated that strewn along the TransAlaskan pipeline are 500 abandoned vehicles, 3,000 corroding batteries, 10,000 old tires, 20,000 tons of rusting construction materials.

Oil proponents argue that this will not be repeated on the coastal plain because strict environmental regulations can be written to prevent it. I doubt this for two reasons. First, some pollution is bound to happen causing permanent damage—it is the nature of the oil business—and no safeguards can prevent it. And second, the agencies and offices at both the State and Federal levels, which are responsible for enforcing environmental regulations are underfunded and understaffed making adequate enforcement impossible.

A second concern I have deals with the numerical assumptions made by Interior that deal with the probability of finding oil. The report concludes that there is a 1-in-5 chance of finding economically recoverable oil. To be economical, they assume that a barrel of oil will be at least $33 per barrel in the year 2000—that is 12 years away. Current crude oil prices are hovering between $13 and $18 and according to the Cambridge Energy Research Associates there prices will persist into the next decade making Interior's $33 per barrel assumption unlikely. In addition, if Interior's assumptions do come true, it means that current prices for crude oil would have to more than double or triple. Such an increase, even if phased in, would result in significant stress to the U.S. economy, comparable to the stress created during the OPEC embargoes.

Using more realistic assumptions based on current data, I have been shown that the likelihood of discovering economically viable oil on the coastal plain is slight more than a 1-in-10 chance—12 percent. Thus, when I balance a 1-in-10 chance of success against the near certain destruction of North America's last untouched arctic ecosystem, I am compelled to oppose opining the coastal plain, at least until all other energy sources have been pursued to the utmost.

A third concern is the warming of the global climate, the greenhouse affect. It is commonly accepted that the increased carbon dioxide has led to a trapping of the sun's heat leading to a warming of the world's climate. The impact of such warming can be cataclysmic. Carbon dioxide is produced when fossil fuels like oil and coal are burned. U.S. fossil energy currently produces about one-fourth of the world's carbon dioxide emissions. According to energy use projections in Energy Information Agency's 1987 Annual Energy Outlook, the Nation's carbon dioxide emissions will grow from 1.4-million tons per year in 1986 to about 1.7-million tons per year in the year 2000. Oil use accounted for 48 percent of the total 1986 carbon dioxide emissions. When one looks at the greenhouse affect and its potential to destroy the world as we know it and look at its causes, one must step back and take a very close look at any expansion of current fossil fuels production before supporting the expansion. I have done so in this case and conclude that I cannot support opening the coastal plain. It is conceivable that if the coastal plain was opened and a large oil pool found that its use could warm the world's temperature enough to melt the polar ice caps.

To conclude, I am a cosponsor of this bill, a bill that will designate the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge a wilderness area, for two reasons. First, I believe that the last pristine arctic ecosystem in North America should be preserved for future generations to enjoy and learn from. All other areas already have suffered the heavy and often destructive hand of man. My other reason is policy-oriented. It is essential to the Nation's long-term economic well-being that we begin to actively develop alternative energy sources as well as a strong program to conserve what oil we have. This is not occurring and until it does I will oppose the opening of the coastal plain.

By Mr. BOREN (for himself and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 40. A bill to modify the wheat provision of the Agricultural Act of 1949 by eliminating the Secretary of Agriculture's authority to restrict haying and grazing on idled wheat acreage; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

ELIMINATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON HAYING AND GRAZING ON IDLED WHEAT ACREAGE

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BENTSEN and myself, I rise today to introduce legislation which would correct a technical error made in the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

Specifically, this bill will remove a clause inadvertantly added to the haying and grazing provisions of the Wheat Program. The error strengthens the Secretary of Agriculture's discretion to allow haying and grazing on idled acres, the exact opposite of the intent of the agreement reached in the conference committee on reconciliation.

During consideration of the 1985 farm bill, a compromise was worked out on grazing. Under the 1985 farm bill, each year farmers are permitted to graze acreage idled as part of the Wheat Program for that year. However, haying was not completely resolved at that time and each year the Secretary was required to decide whether to allow haying of idled acreage. Because of the Secretary's discretion with respect to haying, farmers could not properly plan their crops since the Secretary's decision was usually made late in the crop year. This has resulted in an unnecessary hardship for our agricultural producers. In 1987 a compromise was reached that would remove the need for a secretarial decision each year.

This compromise was incorporated into the Senate's version of the omnibus reconciliation bill in the fall of 1987. Under the Senate's provision, haying and grazing would be permitted during a specified period, provided the producer was haying or grazing the crop for which the producer had a program base. This compromise eliminated secretarial discretion with regard to haying and eliminated the uncertainty of program provisions due to such discretion.

The conference committee also agreed to inclusion of the Senate's version in the conference report on reconciliation. Unfortunately, however, the specific statutory language included in the conference report did not remotely reflect the compromise that was reached. In fact, the language took us a step backwards from where we were prior to the 1987 Reconciliation Act. As a result of the erroneous provisions in the 1987 Reconciliation Act, the Secretary now has the authority to prohibit grazing as well as haying each year.

Mr. President, Senator BENTSEN and I introduced this same legislation last year and it was reported out of the Senate Agriculture Committee. Unfortunately, differences with other commodity interests could not be worked out before adjournment. Consequently, wheat producers in my home State of Oklahoma were once again forced to make their planting decisions without knowing whether they would be allowed to graze or hay idled acreage. The secretarial decision was not made until weeks after Oklahoma producers planted their wheat crop.

The legislation we are introducing today will remove the Secretary's discretion to disallow haying and grazing of acreage idled under the Wheat Program. I urge my colleagues to continue working with us so that prompt consideration of this bill will be ensured.●

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to sponsor once again this legislation to preserve the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as a wilderness. Last Congress, the Energy Committee discussed at length the issue of oil development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. We had many witnesses testify before committee hearings. And, even though the committee endorsed legislation to allow oil development throughout the coastal region, I could not and cannot conclude that ANWR's future is best served by replicating the industrialization of Prudhoe Bay. ANWR should be preserved intact, as wilderness.

The Arctic Refuge is a unique area. The Interior Department report on the region describes the Arctic Refuge as "the only conservation system unit that protects, in an undisturbed condition, a complete spectrum of the various arctic ecosystems in North America." Its remote situation and forbidding climate have made it all but inaccessible to human visitors. This is appropriate, as ANWR exists foremost for its own inhabitants.

This refuge is of fantastic ecological importance; much more is at stake than the well-publicized porcupine caribou herd. The coastal plain is also vital to polar bears, grizzly bears, wolverines, and muskoxen, the survivors of the Ice Age. Millions of swans, snow geese, northern pintail, and other waterfowl spend their summers on this stretch of the Arctic coast.

Last Congress, the Energy Committee was told repeatedly that oil development and wildlife are compatible. The thriving caribou population at Prudhoe is an often-noted example of this compatibility. However, wilderness is a quality that transcends the particular habitat and statistics of any species of flora or fauna. Wilderness is the essence of ANWR and wilderness is incompatible with oilfield development. Here's what the Department of the Interior feels full development would bring to this roughly 100-mile-by-25-mile area: 100 miles of main pipeline and numerous collector lines; 380 miles of roads; seven large production facilities and four smaller ones; four airfields; two ports with salt water treatment facilities; 40 to 50 million cubic yards of gravel to be dug up and moved; reserve pits for toxic drilling muds, disposal wells, et cetera.

A single exploratory well would demand 15 million gallons of water—in an area properly described as desert. The question of land reclamation has yet to be addressed at the developed sites at Prudhoe Bay. Whether or not the land even can be reclaimed will probably be open to debate for the rest of our lifetime.

Much has been said about the vastness of the Arctic Refuge. Is this relevant? I think not: development will fundamentally and irreversibly alter the character of this unique region.

To what end do we pursue a goal of oil development in a now pristine environment? Advocates of development cite the need for development of the coastal plain to guarantee our energy security. But real energy security cannot be achieved by promoting good U.S. oil and rejecting bad foreign oil. Oil markets are worldwide. When we abandoned price controls on oil, we committed this Nation to function in that world market. Developing ANWR will only give us a 1-in-5 chance of producing enough oil to satisfy 200 days of our current U.S. oil consumption. That is neither the only way nor even best way to promote our national energy security.

Mr. President, ANWR is remote. It is unknown to most of us. Yet it is home to thousands of varieties of wildlife, as well as a native American population which depends on this wildlife for its subsistence. This area deserves to be treated with respect and protected.

Last Congress, the Energy Committee endorsed legislation to develop ANR. This legislation was replete with conditions and stipulations on future development. The committee tried to assure that only the best development efforts are made. But even with best efforts, we can't guarantee that there won't be a major reduction in wildlife in the area. We can't guarantee that there won't be toxic spills or surface degradation. We do know that with development, this wilderness area will no longer be the pristine host to so many of God's plants and creatures, big and small.

I urge my colleagues to consider carefully this legislation and join in our efforts. We all have a responsibility to protect and enhance our environment for ourselves and future generations. To destroy permanently a wild frontier for a temporary and improbable supply of oil is simply to shortchange our children and their children.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join as a cosponsor of S. 39, the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge bill.

Last December, National Geographic magazine described the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, and that description is worth repeating here today:

> Somewhere north of Dawson and Fairbanks, east of Prudhoe Bay and west of the Mackenzie River, you will find neither an Alaska nor a Yukon Territory, no Canada or United States. Instead you enter a land of mountains and broad, lake-filled plains, where caribou have worn trails in rock and geese have traced paths in the sky over millennia of rhythmic wondering; where ice holds the sea and frost the land until a brief, glorious burst of flowering summer; and where men have hunted creatures hoofed and finned and feathered for longer than science can tell. It is a roadless land, a part of the North little touched by the 20th century, or the 19th, or the first. But it is a place where, as sure as a daybreak, the South is about to arrive.

The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge bill will assure that the south does not arrive on these coastal plains in the form of lasting devastation that could well be the result of new oil drilling on the Alaskan coastline.

This wildlife refuge is unlike any on this planet, and certainly has no equal within our borders—a refuge which is home to the porcupine caribou, the polar bear, the snow goose, and the muskox, to name a few. It is the future of this area and the future of its inhabitants that are at risk here. While I recognize our critical responsibility to provide sufficient energy resources at affordable prices, we have at least an equal responsibility to protect for the future one of our few remaining connections to the undisturbed past.

I followed the early debate that led to the Alaska National Interest Lands Act of 1980. Section 1002 of that legislation called for a 5-year study of the region's energy potential—a study intended to provide us with the necessary information to make an informed and rational decision on its fate. Now in the 101st Congress, with the results of that study from the Secretary of the Interior in hand, along with reports from other agencies representing both sides of the argument, I find it impossible to support new drilling in Alaska's wilderness.

The available data demonstrates great uncertainty. Predictions shows that the drilling of ANWR is, at best, a gamble, and not a good one. There is a 12- to 19-percent chance, depending upon the current market prices, of finding commercially producible oil in the refuge, and only a 1-percent chance of finding a reserve matching that of Prudhoe Bay. At best, there is, according to most forecasters, a 6-month supply of oil at ANWR, but it is a resource that would come at a high ecological price: the permanent scaring of this great wilderness refuge and uncalculated damage to its wildlife.

The Prudhoe Bay oil fields and the Trans Alaska Pipeline have already altered the habitat and the ecosystem in much of the area opened for development. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in its December 1987 draft report, stated, "fish and wildlife habitat losses resulting from construction and operation of the pipeline and Prudhoe Bay oil fields were greatly underestimated." The damage includes inevitable oil spills, hazardous waste sites, unclean air, and polluted water.

At this time, even with the "1002" report, we are seriously uninformed about the potential environmental impact of ANWR drilling. In just one study, the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation examined one lease tract on the North Slope and discovered that more than 14,000 55-gallon drums were disposed of improperly during a 10-month period alone. Another serious concern is the bioaccumulation of toxins found in reserve pits. The permeable nature of these pits allows contaminants to flow freely during the spring. Metals found in Prudhoe Bay reserve pits include: lead, copper, zinc, nickel, barium, chromium, and aluminum.

The coastal plain of ANWR provides a home for over 108 avian species, 12 species of fish, and several mammal species, including the 180,000 caribou that inhabit the region. All of these will be seriously endangered by the by-products of oil drilling.

Our Government will be struggling far into the future to pay for the cleanup of toxic waste sites, fouled air, and polluted water all over our Nation, yet we are still considering legislation that will produce more of the same in an area that is still virtually untouched. And for what? For the hopes of getting lucky and hitting a 1-in-100 chance of finding substantial reserves.

As lawmakers, we have a duty to make sound decisions based on real facts. The drilling of the Alaska coastline represents the opposite approach—a gamble against the odds for a few short months of oil while permanently scaring this area of global prominence.

Mr. President, people from Connecticut want to be able to visit a piece of this Earth which is as unspoiled today as the day God created it. Global warming and holes in the ozone show us that what happens in one portion of the Earth, necessarily effects people on all continents. This preservation is part of a mindest that also seeks to conserve lakes, parks, forests, beaches, and streams in Connecticut and all over America from short-term, shortsighted development.

Senator ROTH has today introduced S. 39, a bill which will make some 1,556,793 acres in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge a permanent component of the National Wilderness Preservation System, thus protecting the area for generations to come, from development and destruction.

Mr. President, I am proud to cosponsor S. 39.

By Mr. DOLE (for Mr. NICKLES):

S. 41. A bill to promote the energy security of the United States by amending the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to encourage the continued exploration for and production of domestic oil and natural gas resources; to the Committee on Finance.

DOMESTIC PETROLEUM SECURITY ACT OF 1989

● Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am introducing today the Energy Security Tax Act of 1989. This bill is similar to a measure that I introduced early in the 100th Congress in response to the Department of Energy's March 1987 Energy Security Report. That report recommended a number of changes to the Internal Revenue Code that would focus incentives on domestic oil and gas exploration and production. The Department of Energy had concluded that the OPEC decision to flood the world markets with oil in early 1986 had increased oil imports and raised "serious concerns" about our national security.

It has now been 3 years since OPEC engineered that precipitous decline in world oil prices. In the past 3 years, domestic oil prices have average only about $13.60, compared to the $27.29 average for the 5 previous years. As a consequence, the lower 48 States are producing 1.1 million barrels per day less oil than during 1985—a 15-percent drop in production in just 3 years.

This drop in production is due not only to low prices, but also to the volatility of those prices. For example, the contract prices paid for the bulk of our west Texas intermediate crude oil has dropped from last Tuesday's 2-year high of $17.75 to $16.75 by Monday. By contrast, the contract price during late October and early November last fall was only $12.75. Back in July and August 1986, the average price of U.S. crude was below $10. This instability in oil prices, and the real possibility that they may again drop to very low levels, has scared away investors that independent producers need to continue to explore and develop new oil reserves.

Just yesterday, the Daily Oklahoman ran an article describing the continuing catastrophic drop in drilling rig activity resulting from low and uncertain oil prices. The article discusses data presented by the International Association of Drilling Contractors which indicate that drilling dropped to 789 rigs last Friday—compared to an average of over 1,054 last year at this time. The article raises the real specter that drilling activity in the United States could drop to a post-World War II low this year. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed at the conclusion of my statement.

What many people do not realize is that even higher, stable prices cannot turn on the industry like a faucet—most of the 3,974 rigs that were in operation in 1981 are no longer in existence—they have been scrapped or need multimillion-dollar overhauls. We must keep our exploration and production industry healthy or we will face even more perilous degrees of import dependency in the near future.

The combined effects of this dramatic decrease in domestic oil production, and an increase in consumption, have required the United States to import about 45 percent more petroleum in 1988 than during 1985. This increase in dependency on foreign oil not only increases our trade deficit, it also jeopardizes our national security.

The DOE's March 1987 recommendations are more necessary than ever. The measure I introduce today, as did the bill I introduced 2 years ago, contains that Energy Security Report's recommendations that Congress repeal the transfer rule with respect to the percentage depletion deduction; reduce the net-income limitation on percentage depletion use by independents; provide percentage depletion of 27.5 percent for all new production; and provide for expensing of geological and geophysical costs.

In addition to these recommendations, this bill contains the other measures in my bill last year which will eliminate the alternative mimimum tax preference for intangible drilling costs; provide a 27.5-percent depletion rate for stripper production, and reduce the taxpayer income limitation on percentage depletion used by independents. Passage of these changes will lead to increased oil and gas production, and result in not only greater energy security, but also additional taxable income to offset the costs to the Treasury of these changes.

One of the biggest problems that independent producers have faced during the past 3 years comes from the combined effects of low income and the Internal Revenue Code's treatment of exploration and production expenses as preference items, so that they have faced large alternative minimum tax liabilities. Thus, the changes in this bill to the alternative minimum tax are especially important for independents, many of whom have not earned sufficient income over the last 3 years to take advantage of the changes to the individual income tax provisions that are included in this bill.

Another provision that was in my tax bill last year is a provision dealing with the need for clarification of the statute of limitations for windfall profit tax payments. With the repeal of the windfall profit tax by the Congress last summer, I have revised this provision to provide a statute of limitations safe harbor rule with respect to good faith underpayments of the windfall profit tax.

During the existence of the windfall profit tax, most small independent producers and royalty owners did not actually withhold and remit windfall profit tax to the Treasury. Rather, they relied on the first purchaser of the crude oil, or "qualified disburser," to withhold and remit the tax. If a withholding error was made by the first purchaser or "qualified disburser," then such withholding agent was required to advise the producer of the error on form 6248. It was then the responsibility of the producer to either remit additional tax by filing form 720 or claim a refund on the appropriate return.

The IRS has ruled in its Revenue Ruling 85-37 that if a responsible withholding agent has overwithheld windfall profit tax and additionally fails to inform the producer of the error, then the producer is limited to a 3-year period to file a refund claim—even if the producer has no knowledge of the overwithholding. However, if the responsible withholding agent under withheld windfall profit tax and did not inform the producer of that fact on form 6248, there is no statute of limitations protection available to the producer. Hence, the producer or royalty owner who in good faith believed that his windfall profit tax liability was satisfied by withholding and consequently did not file form 720, to remit additional tax, is nevertheless subject to potentially perpetual liability for inadvertent errors made by the first purchaser or "qualified disburser."

My colleagues should note this inequitable absence of statute of limitations protection in view of the fact that the tens of thousands of independent producers and royalty owners do not have the capability to audit the accounts of the first purchaser or "qualified disburser." Accordingly, the provision I have included in this bill will simply create a new subparagraph to section 6501, dealing with limitations on assessment and collection. The new provision establishes a "safe harbor" for taxpayers who in good faith determined that no special windfall profit tax return was required. In such a case, the IRS would have to assess any deficiency within 3 years from the date the return was otherwise originally due.

Finally, the measure I introduce today would establish a crude oil and natural gas exploration and development credit to provide a meaningful incentive for exploration and production activities that also would apply against alternative minimum tax liability. President Bush advocated this type of credit during the Presidential campaign to stimulate domestic oil and gas production, and I believe it will be a significant incentive to bringing new reserves into production.

Fortunately, the measure I introduce today need not contain a provision to repeal the windfall profit tax, as the Congress finally eliminated that inequity last summer. However, that onerous tax would not be collecting any revenues even if last week's $19 plus spot prices were pervasive in the industry. If the Congress wants to increase oil production over the near term, it must take additional steps such as enacting the tax changes included in this bill.

The current spot prices are not stable—and are already back down to the $17 range—and there are no guarantees that prices will not again drop below $14 by summer. The tax changes contained in the Energy Security Tax Act of 1989 would provide specific incentives that could counter the reluctance to invest in domestic oil and gas production because of the generally low nature of oil prices the past 3 years, compounded by price instability.

I urge the Finance Committee to take prompt action on this bill to get to the serious business of trying to help the oil and gas industry rebuild itself.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 41

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Energy Security Tax Act of 1989."

(b) Table of Contents.—

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Exclude intangible drilling costs from the alternative minimum tax.
Sec. 3. Intangible drilling costs include geological and geophysical costs.
Sec. 4. Percentage depletion for new, enhanced and stripper oil and gas production.
Sec. 5. Net income limitation on percentage depletion increased for oil and gas wells.
Sec. 6. Taxable income limitation on percentage depletion increased for oil and gas wells.
Sec. 7. Repeal of certain restrictions on tax benefits after transfer of property.
Sec. 8. Establish statute of limitations safe harbor rule with respect to underpayments of windfall profit tax.
Sec. 9. Establish crude oil and natural gas exploration and development credit.

SEC. 2. EXCLUDE INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS FROM THE ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 57 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items of tax preference) is amended by repealing paragarph 57(a)(2) and subsection 57(b).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to all intangible drilling costs paid or incurred after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS INCLUDE GEOLOGICAL AND GEOPHYSICAL COSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 263 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to intangible drilling and development costs in the case of oil and gas wells and geothermal wells) is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following new sentence: "In the case of oil and gas wells, the tax treatment which applies to the taxpayer's intangible drilling and development costs shall also apply to geological and geophysical costs for the purpose of ascertaining the existence, location, extent, or quality of any deposit of oil or gas within the United States (within the meaning of section 638(1)) or a possession of the United States (within the meaning of section 638(2)).".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to costs paid or incurred after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 4. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION FOR NEW, ENHANCED AND STRIPPER OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The following new subsection is added at the end of section 613A:

"(e) EXEMPTION FOR NEW, ENHANCED AND STRIPPER PRODUCTION.—

"(1) GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (f), the allowance for depletion under section 611 shall be computed in accordance with section 613 with respect to all of the taxpayers' new, enhanced or stripper production and 27.5 percent shall be deemed to be specified in subsection (b) of section 613 for purposes of subsection (a) of that section.

"(2) NEW, ENHANCED OR STRIPPER PRODUCTION DEFINED.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the taxpayer's new, enhanced or stripper production shall be domestic oil and natural gas that is—"(A) 'NEW'.—The taxpayer's production from any 'property' (as that term is used in Section 614) that commences production after March 31, 1987,

"(B) 'ENHANCED'.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, 'enhanced' production is—

"(I) the taxpayer's average daily production as that term is used in subparagraph (c)(2)(A) for a property (as defined in section 614) which is in excess of,

"(II) the taxpayer's average daily production from that property during the applicable base period,

"(III) for purposes of this subparagraph, the applicable base period shall be the period January 1, 1987 through March 31, 1987, or

"(ii) INCREMENTAL TERTIARY OIL.—As that term is used in subsection 4993(a); or

"(C) 'STRIPPER'.—The taxpayer's production from any 'stripper well property' within the meaning of the June 1979 energy regulations.

"(3) NOT LIMITED BY EXEMPTION FOR INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS AND ROYALTY OWNERS.—The deduction for the taxable year attributable to the application of this subsection may be taken without regard to the limitation imposed by subsection (c).

"(f) LIMITATION ON APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION (e).—

"(1) LIMITATION BASED ON TAXABLE INCOME.—The deduction for the taxable year attributable to the application of subsection (e) shall be determined according to the provisions of subsection (d)(1) except that for purposes of this paragraph subsection (d)(1) shall be deemed to be referring to subsection (e) wherever it refers to subsection (c).

"(2) PERCENTAGE DEPLETION NOT ALLOWED FOR LEASE BONUSES, ETC.—In the case of any oil or gas property to which subsection (e) applies, for purposes of section 613, the term 'gross income from the property' shall not include any lease bonus, advance royalty, or other amount payable without regard to production from property.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to production from the property during the taxpayer's first full taxable quarter following the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. NET INCOME LIMITATION ON PERCENTAGE DEPLETION INCREASED FOR OIL AND GAS WELLS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The second sentence of subsection (a) of section 613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to percentage depletion) is amended by adding ", except that in the case of an oil or gas well the allowance shall not exceed 100 percent," after the words "50 percent".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (c)(7)(C) of section 613A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitations on percentage depletion) is amended by adding "or 100 percent in the case of an oil or gas well" after the words "50 percent".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6. TAXABLE INCOME LIMITATION ON PERCENTAGE DEPLETION INCREASED FOR OIL AND GAS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph 613A(d)(1) is amended by deleting "65 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "100 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to the taxable years beginning after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 7. REPEAL OF CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS ON TAX BENEFITS AFTER TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

(a) PERCENTAGE DEPLETION PERMITTED AFTER TRANSFER OF PROVEN PROPERTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 613A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitations on percentage depletion in case of oil and gas wells) is amended by striking out paragraphs (9) and (10) and by redesignating paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) as paragraphs (9), (10), and (11), respectively.

(2) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (11) of section 613A(c) of such Code, as redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by striking out subparagraphs (C) and (D).

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to transfers after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

(b) EXEMPTION OF STRIPPER WELL OIL FROM WINDFALL PROFIT TAX TO APPLY AFTER TRANSFER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (f) of section 4994 of such Code (defining exempt stripper well oil) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) EXEMPT STRIPPER WELL OIL.—For purposes of this chapter, the term 'exempt stripper well oil' means any oil—

"(1) the producer of which is an independent producer (within the meaning of section 4992(b)(1)),

"(2) which is from a stripper well property within the meaning of the June 1979 energy regulations, and

"(3) which is attributable to the independent producer's working interest in the stripper well property.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to production after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 8. ESTABLISHMENT OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SAFE HARBOR RULE WITH RESPECT TO UNDERPAYMENTS OF WINDFALL PROFIT TAX.

(a) Section 6501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating section 6501(p)(1)(B) as section 6501(p)(1)(C), and adding a new section 6501(b)(1)(B) as follows:

"(B) SAFE HARBOR RULE IN GOOD FAITH SITUATIONS.—If a taxpayer in good faith determined that no return for a removal year (as defined in section 6501(p)(1)(C)) was required, but it is subsequently determined that, in fact, a return was required, the period for assessing any deficiency for such removal year shall expire 3 years from the date the return was otherwise originally due."

SEC. 9. CRUDE OIL AND NATURAL GAS EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 38(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking "plus" at the end of paragraph (4),

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof ", plus", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) the crude oil and natural gas epxloration and development credit determined under section 43(a).".

(b) CRUDE OIL AND NATURAL GAS EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CREDIT.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 43. CRUDE OIL AND NATURAL GAS EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of section 38, the crude oil and natural gas exploration and development credit determined under this section for any taxable year shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) 10 percent of so much of the taxpayer's qualified investment for the taxable year as does not exceed $10,000,000, plus

"(2) 5 percent of so much of such qualified investment for the taxable year as exceeds $10,000,000.

"(b) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified investment' means amounts paid or incurred—

"(1) for the purpose of ascertaining the existence, location, extent, or quality of any crude oil or natural gas deposit, including core testing and drilling test wells, or

"(2) for the purpose of developing a property on which there is a reservoir capable of commercial production and such amounts are paid or incurred in connection with activities which are intended to result in the recovery of crude oil or natural gas on such property.

"(c) TERMINATION OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), no credit shall be allowed under this section with respect to expenditures made in any taxable year beginning after the date which is 3 years after the date of the enactment of the Energy Security Incentive Act of 1988.

"(2) BINDING COMMITMENTS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to any qualified investment made pursuant to a binding contract entered into before the date determined under paragraph (1)."

(c) EXPLORATION CREDIT MAY OFFSET MINIMUM TAX.—Section 38(c) of such Code is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5), and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) EXPLORATION CREDIT MAY OFFSET MINIMUM TAX.—To the extent the credit under subsection (a) is attributable to the application of section 43, the limitation of paragraph (1) shall be the greater of—

"(A) the limitation as determined under paragraph (1), or

"(B) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax for the taxable year.".

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 43. Crude oil and natural gas exploration and development credit.".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to expenditures paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

[From the American Petroleum Institute Monthly Statistical Report, December 1988]

SUMMARY

With the past year's developments, a pattern is becoming increasingly evident as, for the third year in a row, U.S. production fell and consumption and imports continued to rise:

Domestic production continued to decline in an environment of crude oil prices which had trended downward for much of the year. As a result of substantially lower drilling rates and reduced servicing of existing wells during the past three years, 1988's production by year-end had fallen to a level more than 1 million B/D lower than only three years ago.

Partly because of the unexpected strength in the economy, petroleum deliveries rose more than most analysts had predicted, reaching the highest level since 1979. Nevertheless, according to preliminary estimates, petroleum's share of total energy consumption declined slightly for the second year in a row. Total energy consumption is estimated to have risen to the highest level ever—though it would have been roughly 25 percent higher without the conservation and efficiency gains of the past ten years.

Rising usage and decreasing domestic supplies resulted in another increase in imports, also to the highest level since 1979. At 7.2 million B/D, 1988's imports have risen by more than 2 million B/D, or 45 percent, over the past three years.

All major products contributed to the year's 3.2 percent increase in deliveries, which exceeded many analysts' forecasts in part because of economic growth substantially stronger than the 2 to 3 percent originally anticipated for the year. Even though the year's deliveries reached a new recent-year high, fuel switching, particularly away from residentual fuel oil, has significantly reduced overall petroleum consumption over the last ten years. Total deliveries in 1988 would have matched 1978's historical peak of 18.9 million B/D without the 1.7 million B/D decline in residual fuel oil consumption since that year.

By product category, gasoline's increase for the past year, at 1.6 percent, was the smallest, continuing the trend of declining rates of growth for gasoline that has been evident over the past three years. In fact, only a third of the increase in total deliveries over the past three years and about one fifth of 1988's increase is attributable to gasoline, though this product accounts for about 43 percent of domestic deliveries. Winter weather colder than in 1987 helped to boost distillate deliveries' increase to nearly 4 percent, compared with rates of about 2 percent or less in recent previous years; residual fuel oil recovered from 1987's decline with a 5.2 percent increase.

Kerosine jet fuel's 5.2 percent growth, though continuing to slow from the 10 percent increase of two years ago, was still one of the largest increases among the major products. Deliveries of "other oils" continued to grow as well, though less rapidly than in the previous year.

The level of crude oil prices, which before the OPEC production agreement late in the year had fallen by about one third since mid-1987, continued to discourage drilling and other upstream activity. As a result, a 60 thousand B/D increase in Alaskan crude oil production was more than offset by an annual average decline of nearly 300 thousand B/D for the rest of the U.S. The decline trend in lower 48 production accelerated in 1988, and is now estimated to be running at about 400 thousand B/D per year, compared with a decline trend of approximately 240 thousand B/D per year in 1987.

In response to the year's increased deliveries, refineries operated at some of the highest levels since the 1970s, averaging 84.3 percent of operable capacity. If only capacity in actual operation is counted, the utilization rate for the year would have been nearly 90 percent, only slightly less than the high, 92 percent level set in 1977. After the inventory buildup earlier in the year and the destocking pattern during much of the second half, total stocks ended the year only slightly down from the prior December.

By Mr. DOLE (for Mr. NICKLES):

S. 42. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to impose a fee on the importation of crude oil and refined petroleum products; to the Committee on Finance.

ENERGY SECURITY TAX ACT

● Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Domestic Petroleum Security Act of 1989. This bill essentially establishes a price floor on imported crude of $18 per barrel in order to sheild the U.S. oil-producing industry from the predatory pricing policies of the OPEC oil cartel.

I know many of my colleagues oppose an oil import fee, especially those Senators who represent States heavily dependent on imported oil. However, the measure I introduce today is not a simple oil import fee. Rather, it would establish an $18 floor price on oil imports to encourage investment in oil exploration and production by removing the risk of another OPEC manipulated free fall of world oil prices.

It has now been 3 years since OPEC began to flood the world oil market in an intentional effort to lower world prices, increase consumption, decrease marginal production, and eventually regain OPEC's role as the world's oil price arbiters. OPEC's predatory actions have been devastating to the energy security of the United States.

Last year, our dependence on imported oil and petroleum products increased to about 42 percent of our petroleum consumption, while during 1985 it was a still serious 32 percent. In volumetric terms, this represents a 45-percent increase in the quantity of petroleum imported during 1988 as compared to 1985. This level of imports is the highest since 1979. It should concern us all that most of this increased dependency is on new imports coming from the Middle East.

In the past 3 years, domestic oil prices have averaged only about $13.60, compared to the $27.29 average for the 5 previous years. The average domestic prices for the months of July and August 1986 were driven into the $9 range. As a consequence, the lower 48 States are producing 1.1 million barrels per day less oil than during 1985—a 15-percent drop in production in just 3 years.

Perhaps my colleagues heard the news reports last week that covered the American Petroleum Institute's Monthly Statistical Report for December 1988. According to this report, U.S. crude oil production fell to "a range not experienced in a dozen years." That takes us back to the depths of the price-control era when the Federal Government was subsidizing oil imports by keeping price ceilings on domestic oil. In its report, API predicts that "if the December, 1988 level of 7,909,000 barrels-per-day [b/d] is maintained throughout this year, 1989 production will be the lowest in a quarter century."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the summary of the API Monthly Statistical Report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

This drop in domestic production since 1985 is now adding another $7.5 billion to our annual trade deficit for additional imported oil. In addition, the oil-producing States such as Oklahoma have suffered severe economic downturns during this 3-year period, especially in their petroleum and finance sectors.

This almost limitless potential for OPEC governments to drive our domestic oil prices down is catastrophic for investment in exploration for additional oil and for investment required to maintain marginally economic production. During the last 3 years, drilling rig activity—the indicator of the industry's ability to replace reserves now being produced—has generally stayed at below half the level of 1985, and less than a quarter of the level in 1981, the first year following the removal of price controls.

Some of my colleagues might comment that spot oil prices have recently been in the $19 range, and what good would this floor price bill be to the industry? To begin with, spot prices recently have been highly volatile, jumping between $17 and $19.75 in just this past week. It is this volatility—and the prospects that prices could again drop for a few months to the low teens—that has made investors reluctant to put steel in the ground to find and produce additional oil for this country. Even if oil prices rise to above $19 during this year and the bill I introduce today does not add a penny to the price of imported crude oil, it's passage would provide an enormous incentive to domestic exploration and production activities by providing a floor price that producers can take to the banks and other investors.

This bill will not eliminate the enormous geophysical risks associated with finding additional oil deposits in the United States, nor will it guarantee that the price of oil will not drop back to present levels should world prices climb to the midtwenties. What this bill will do is prevent the governments in OPEC from again driving our domestic prices below $18. If they try, they will simply be putting money into the U.S. Treasury, while the many private citizens and institutions investing in the U.S. oil industry will be able to rely on an $18 minimum price.

Specifically, this bill would impose a tariff on imported crude oil and products that is calculated by the Secretary of the Treasury to be the difference between $18 and the average international price of crude oil during the preceding 4 weeks. If the 4-week average international price of crude oil is $18 or more, then the tariff would be zero. The tariff would be adjusted each week to reflect changes in the average international price during the preceding 4 weeks.

For imported petroleum products, the bill adds an additional $3 per barrel to the tariff calculated by the Secretary. This surcharge to the crude oil tariff will ensure that the imposition of the tariff will not inadvertently encourage importation of petroleum products by making them proportionately less expensive than importing and refining crude oil. The bill also provides that the tariff would not apply to crude oil or refined products that are subsequently exported.

I first introduced this floor price tariff approach in September 1986. If the Congress had passed that measure we would have prevented much of the economic hardships and increases in petroleum imports that we have seen in the last 2 years. That first bill and the one I introduced at the beginning of the 100th Congress both set a floor price of $20 per barrel. However, I introduce today's measure with a floor price target of $18 per barrel to keep it below current spot prices, and thereby minimize its impact on the overall economy.

It has been 3 years since OPEC began this destruction of our exploration and production industry. We have been reluctant witnesses to the tragedies of people losing productive jobs, banks failing, expertise and capital equipment permanently disappearing, the trade deficit increasing, energy conservation decreasing, and marginal wells prematurely shut in and the remaining oil forever lost. I hope that now with spot prices above the floor price level in this bill, the Congress will have the courage to pass a measure that will contribute to the long-term vitality of our petroleum industry.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 42

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Domestic Petroleum Security Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FEE ON IMPORTED CRUDE OIL OR REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle E of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to alcohol, tobacco, and certain other excise taxes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 54—IMPORTED CRUDE OIL OR REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

"Sec. 5881. Imposition of Tax.
"Sec. 5882. Definitions.
"Sec. 5883. Registration.
"Sec. 5884. Procedures; returns; penalties.

"SEC. 5881. IMPOSITION OF TAX.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—In addition to any other tax imposed under this title, an excise tax is hereby imposed on—

"(1) the first sale within the United States of—
"(A) any crude oil, or
"(B) any refined petroleum product, that has been imported into the United States, and
"(2) the use within the United States of—
"(A) any crude oil, or
"(B) any refined petroleum product, that has been imported into the United States if no tax has been imposed with respect to such crude oil or refined petroleum product prior to such use.

"(b) RATE OF TAX.—

"(1) CRUDE OIL.—For purposes of paragraphs (1)(A) and (2)(A) of subsection (a) the rate of tax shall be the excess, if any, of—

"(i) $18, over

"(ii) the energy policy price per barrel of crude oil.

"(2) REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCT.—For purposes of paragraphs (1)(B) and (2)(B) of subsection (a), the rate of tax shall be equal to—

"(i) $3.00, plus

"(ii) the tax determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) FRACTIONAL PARTS OF BARRELS.—In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be he same fraction of the amount of such tax imposed on the whole barrel.

"(c) DETERMINATION OF ENERGY POLICY PRICE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the energy policy price with respect to any week during which the tax under subsection (a) is imposed shall be determined by the Secretary and published in the Federal Register on the first day of such week.

"(2) BASIS OF DETERMINATION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the energy policy price for any week is the weighed average international price of a barrel of crude oil for the preceding 4 weeks as determined by the Secretary, after consultation with the Administrator of the Energy Information Administration of the Department of Energy, pursuant to the formula for determining such international price as used in publishing the Weekly Petroleum Status Report and as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section.

"(d) LIABILITY FOR PAYMENT OF TAX.—

"(1) SALES.—The taxes imposed by subsection (a)(1) shall be paid by the first person who sells the crude oil or refined petroleum product within the United States.

"(2) USE.—The taxes imposed by subsection (a)(2) shall be paid by the person who uses the crude oil or refined petroleum product.

"(3) TAX-FREE EXPORTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Under regulations prescribed by the secretary, no tax shall be imposed under this chapter on the sale for export or for resale by the purchaser to a second purchaser for export.

"(B) PROOF OF EXPORT.—Where any crude oil or refined petroleum product has been sold free of tax under subparagraph (A), such subparagraph shall cease to apply with respect to the sale of such crude oil or refined petroleum product, unless, within the 6-month period which begins on the date of the sale, the seller receives proof that the crude oil or refined petroleum product, has been exported.

"SEC. 5882. DEFINITIONS.

"FOR PURPOSES OF THIS CHAPTER.—

"(1) CRUDE OIL.—The term 'crude oil' means crude oil other than domestic crude oil (within the meaning of chapter 45).

"(2) BARREL.—The term 'barrel' means 42 United States gallons.

"(3) REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCT.—The term 'refined petroleum product" shall have the same meaning given to such term by section 3(5) of the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 (15 U.S.C. 752(5)).

"(4) EXPORT.—The term 'export' includes shipment to a possession of the United States; and the term 'exported' includes shipment to a possession of the United States.

"SEC. 5883. REGISTRATION.

"Every person subject to tax under section 5881 shall, before incurring any liability for tax under such section, register with the Secretary.

"SEC. 5884. PROCEDURES; RETURNS; PENALTIES.

"For purposes of this title, any reference (other than in chapter 45 or section 6429) to the tax imposed by section 4986 shall be treated, except to the extent provided by the Secretary by regulation where such treatment would be inappropriate, as a reference to the tax imposed by section 5881.".

"(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for subtitle E is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Chapter 54. Imported crude oil or refined petroleum products.".

"(c) DEDUCTIBILITY OF IMPORTED OIL TAX.—The first sentence of section 164(a) (relating to deductions for taxes) is amended by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) The imported oil taxes imposed by section 5881.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to sales and use of imported crude oil or imported refined petroleum products on or after the date of enactment.

DRILLING ACTIVITY NEARS POST-WORLD WAR II LOW

(By Bob Vandewater)

Oil and gas drilling activity across the United States has dropped to its most depressed level since mid-1987 and may be headed toward a post-World War II low, petroleum industry analysts said Monday.

The number of petroleum industry rigs drilling nationwide last Friday was 789, down 51 from a week earlier and the lowest total since June 1987, the International Association of Drilling Contractors reported.

The IADC, using rig figures supplied by oil-field equipment maker Baker Hughes Inc., said the latest active rig count includes 118 rigs working in Oklahoma. That is 12 less than the week before and down 25 from early January.

Among major oil producing states, only two saw increases in rig activity last week—Ohio with five more rigs working and Pennsylvania with four.

The nation's active rig count has now dropped by 151 since Christmas, despite an Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' agreement cutting the cartel's oil production, effective Jan. 1, to bolster world crude oil prices.

Winter usually is a depressed time for new oil and gas drilling. But the recent decline in activity is more severe than was expected, John Spears, with the Tulsa petroleum consulting firm of Spears & Associates, said Monday.

"We thought early this year it (the U.S. active rig total) might go down to about 700.

But now it clearly looks like we might see the count fall to the 600 to 650 range, which would put it below the previous postwar low," he said.

"That may present a real test of survivability all over again" for oil and gas well service firms, said Spears. He will speak on that subject Wednesday evening at the Beacon Club in Oklahoma City at a meeting of the state chapter of the International Association of Energy Economists.

Baker Hughes' count of 663 active domestic rigs in mid July 1986 was the nation's lowest active rig total since the Great Depression. The drop to that level followed a roughly six-month period during which high OPEC oil production caused world crude prices to skid from about $27 a barrel to about $10.

Hughes Tool Co., which merged with Baker International Corp. a couple years ago to form Baker Hughes, had kept track of U.S. working rig totals since 1940 and never found the active rig count below 663.

The lowest number of working rigs nationwide during 1988 was 880 last May. The 1987 low was 744. Last year's Oklahoma low was 107 in October while the state's 1988 high was 152 last March. Oklahoma's lowest active rig total this decade was 97 at one point in June 1987. Fifteen years earlier, in June 1972, Oklahoma's count fell to 63 working rigs.

"I'd say more than half of the recent decline in drilling activity is probably seasonal," IADC spokesman Alvaro Franco said Monday. He attributed the rest of the decline partly to a lack of oil and gas industry confidence in OPEC's ability to stick to its new oil production cutback agreement over the long term.

But Spears said, "I doubt the drop in the rig count reflects any projections at all about the OPEC agreement." He instead blames the latest steep declines on drilling budget cutbacks ordered by companies during the fourth quarter of 1988, when Oklahoma crude oil prices dropped to $13 a barrel or lower and before OPEC's agreement took effect. Oklahoma oil prices have since recovered to about $17.75 a barrel.

Although the winter slowdown in drilling also is a factor, "rig counts much more reflect last quarter's oil prices than this quarter's," Spears said.

"A sharp increase in exploration drilling is vital," said June brooks, an Ardmore-based oil and gas producer.

The petroleum industry "needs to engage in a joint-venture with the consuming public to stop the rapid decline in our oil and gas reserves and increased jeopardy to national security."

Brooks called for restoration of tax incentives for new drilling and more cooperation between producers and consumers.

PETROLEUM BUYERS CUT POSTED PRICES $1

(By Bob Vandewater)

Major petroleum buyers cut their posted prices for Oklahoma crude oil by $1 a barrel Monday as oil prices in futures contracts traded on the New York Mercantile Exchange took even a steeper dive.

Monday's falling prices erased some of the petroleum industry optimism generated last week when prices offered or "posted" by major buyers for Oklahoma Sweet crude had risen 50 cents to $17.75 a barrel, the highest level since December 1987.

Posted price cuts of $1 a barrel for Oklahoma crude were reported Monday by such buyers as Conoco Inc., Texaco Inc., Phillips 66 Co., Citgo Petroleum, Sun Refining and Marketing Co. and Koch Industries Inc.—the latter two being the state's largest crude buyers.

That reduced their price of Oklahoma Sweet, the state's most plentiful crude, to $16.75 a barrel. Posted prices for Oklahoma Sour, a less popular oil with a higher sulfur content, also fell $1, keeping that crude cheaper than Oklahoma Sweet by 50 cents to more than $1 per barrel.

Falling oil futures on the New York Mercantile Exchange on Monday also led to a cascade of selling by speculators.

The March crude oil contract closed down $1.06 at $17.33 a barrel, a loss of nearly 6 percent of its value in just one day.

"The crude oil market was overbought last week and people were looking for chances to take profits and sell," said one New York trader.

Contributing to the decline was unseasonably warm weather in the Northeast, reducing demand for heating oil. The February heating oil contract was down a steep 2.24 cents at 50.36 cents gallon in active trading Monday.

A January upswing in the market that boosted crude oil prices to their highest level since November 1967 was reversed Friday when February crude oil futures contracts expired and prices sank below $19.

Prices for Oklahoma crude and other domestic oils had risen from about $13 per barrel since late November when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced a new agreement on output qutoas meant to reduce the world oil glut.

OPEC output has fallen from almost 23 million barrels daily in December to 19 million to 19.5 million now, industry sources say.

Talks this week between OPEC and non-OPEC producers on coordinated reductions in output are expected to lead to higher prices if agreements are reached.●

Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 44. A bill to provide assistance and coordination in the provision of child care services for children living in homes with working parents, and other services; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CHILD CARE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing the proposed Child Care Assistance Act of 1989. This is a measure which I first introduced in 1979 as S. 4. It has been designated as S. 4 each time it has been reintroduced prior to this Congress. I have continued to reintroduce this legislation at the beginning of a new Congress because I strongly believe that enactment of a major, comprehensive child care bill ought to be one of our highest priorities. In the decade that has passed since I first introduced this legislation, the need for adequate, affordable child care services in this country has grown enormously.

Today, I am also joining the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] and many others in introducing the proposed "Act for Better Child Care Services" [ABC]—a major comprehensive child care initiative which has been refined over the past year and has been endorsed by a broad array of organizations and individuals concerned with the need to address the child care crisis in this Nation. Many of the concepts first proposed in the legislation I introduced in 1979 have been incorporated into the ABC bill. I am proud to be a principal sponsor of that measure and to have contributed to its development. My remarks regarding the ABC bill upon its introduction will appear elsewhere in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am very hopeful that the ABC bill will be enacted during the 101st Congress. In the meantime, until a comprehensive child care measure has been signed into law, I am committed to reintroducing the 1979 comprehensive bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the proposed Child Care Assistance Act of 1989 be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 44

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Child Care Assistance Act of 1989".

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the number of children living in homes where both parents work or where children are living with a single parent who works has increased dramatically over the last decade;

(2) the number of licensed or regulated child-care openings is far short of the number required for children in need of child-care services;

(3) existing child-care programs are frequently filled to capacity and often have long waiting lists for admission;

(4) the lack of available child-care services results in many children being left—some all day—without adequate supervision;

(5) the rise in school vandalism, juvenile alcoholism, and serious juvenile crimes has been accompanied by an increase in the number of school-age children with working parents and without resources for after-school supervision;

(6) many parents are unable to afford adequate child-care services and do not receive any financial assistance for such services through any established program;

(7) the years from birth to age six are especially important in the development of a child and the care children receive during this period is critical to the developmental process;

(8) making adequate child-care services and alternatives available for working parents and parents seeking employment or to develop employment skills promotes and strengthens the well-being of families and the national economy; and

(9) there is a lack of coordination among existing child-care programs receiving Federal and State assistance and among such programs and other programs providing services to children and their families, and an absence of a coordinated administration of child-care programs and services at the Federal level.

(b) Recognizing that the parent is and must continue to be the primary influence in the life of the child and that the parent must have ultimate responsibility for decisions on how the child will be raised, it is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to provide assistance to States in improving the quality of and coordination among child-care programs and to provide additional resources for child-care services;

(2) to provide mechanisms for assessing the extent of the need for child-care services in the Nation;

(3) to promote coordination at all governmental levels of child-care programs and other services for children and their families;

(4) to promote the availability and diversity of quality child-care services for all children and families who need such services;

(5) to provide assistance to families whose financial resources are not sufficient for them to pay the full costs of necessary child-care services; and

(6) to strengthen the functioning of families by seeking to ensure that parents are not forced by lack of available programs or financial resources to place a child in an unsafe, unhealthy, or otherwise undesirable care facility or arrangement.

PROTECTION OF PARENTAL RIGHTS

SEC. 3. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize any public agency or private organization or any individual associated therewith to interfere with, or to intervene in, any child-rearing decision of parents.

STATE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 4. (a) Any State desiring to participate in a program authorized by this Act shall submit to the Secretary a plan, not less often than biennially, in such detail and form as the Secretary deems necessary. Each such plan shall—

(1) specify an appropriate State agency (with the capacity to administer the programs and services authorized under this Act and to coordinate with other State and local agencies involved in the provision of services to children) to be designated or created as the State agency to act either directly or through arrangements with other State or local public agencies, as the State agency responsible for the administration and oversight of the plan submitted under this subsection (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "State agency");

(2) provide that the specified State agency will—

(A) make an assessment of child-care needs in the State and an assessment of the effectiveness of programs and services funded under this Act and other provisions of law in meeting such needs;

(B) develop a plan designed to meet the need for child-care services within the State for preschool children and school-age children, with special attention to meeting the need for services of migrant children, disabled children, children with limited English-language proficiency, and other groups of children having special needs;

(C) coordinate, to the maximum extent feasible, the provision of services under this Act with other child-care programs and services funded under any State or other Federal law, and with other appropriate services, including social, health, mental health, and nutrition services, available to such children under other Federal and State programs; and

(D) prepare the reports required under subsection (d);

(3) provide that—

(A) funds under this Act will be distributed within the State in accordance with the plan submitted to the Secretary under this section and will be used for services provided only by child-care providers which—

(i) are licensed in the State or have applied for a renewal of such license and are determined by the State to be likely to be approved for renewal or, if not required to be licensed under applicable State law, have otherwise met the requirements of State law; and

(ii) meet the standards prescribed under section 5(c);

(B) funds will be distributed to eligible child-care providers by contract or grant either directly or, as provided in the State plan, through grants to or contracts with public or private nonprofit agencies for distribution to eligible child-care providers within a designated geographic area, or distributed through alternative payment demonstration projects under such terms as the Secretary prescribes for demonstration projects; and

(C) priority will be given to child-care providers in the State that provide assurances that—

(i) priority for services will be given to children on the basis of child and family need, taking into account such factors as family income, family size, and the special needs of children from households with a single parent, with particular emphasis on the provision of child-care services to families where lack of child care is or would be a barrier to the continuation or commencement of employment; and

(ii) each such child-care program will, to the maximum extent feasible, provide for an economic mix of children enrolled;

(4) provide that—

(A) funds will be distributed, to the maximum extent feasible, to a variety of child-care providers in each community, including but not limited to, child-care centers and family day-care providers; and

(B) priority will be given in the distribution of funds to community-based programs providing meaningful opportunities for parental involvement.

(5) provide for the establishment of sliding fee schedules based upon the services provided and family income adjusted for family size for children receiving services assisted under this Act;

(6) provide for the establishment of procedures for data collection and evaluation designed to show (in a manner not inconsistent with guidelines established by the Secretary)—

(A) how the child-care needs of the State are being met by programs funded under this Act including information as to the numbers of children being assisted, type of child care and child-care provider, numbers of programs and child-care providers, care givers, and support personnel utilized, and such other information as the Secretary considers necessary to explain how funds provided under this Act are being utilized;

(B) the degree to which child-care needs are not being met by programs funded under this Act or other programs;

(C) the extent to which the availability of child care has been increased, including but not limited to, numbers of licensed or regulated child-care openings, the extent to which existing child-care programs are filled, and the numbers and average time associated with waiting lists for admission to such programs; and

(D) how the purposes of the Act and the objectives of the State set forth in its State plan are being met;

(7) provide, by grants to or contracts with public or private nonprofit agencies, for the support or establishment of resource-and-referral services to assist in identifying existing child-care services, in providing information and referral to interested parents, and in providing information and technical assistance to existing and potential child-care providers and others concerned with the availability of child care;

(8) provide, by grant or contract, for the support of training programs for child-care personnel;

(9) establish procedures for the development and implementation of State licensing or regulating of child-care providers in accordance with the criteria prescribed pursuant to section 7(a);

(10) establish procedures for meaningful parental involvement in State and local planning, monitoring, and evaluation of child-care programs and services in the State;

(11) provide assurances that funds provided under this Act will be used to supplement, and not supplant, existing Federal funds used for the support of child-care services and related programs;

(12) provide, for each fiscal year, that the State will use for administration of the State plan for such fiscal year an amount not to exceed 10 percent of the funds distributed to such State, except that in the case of Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the State will use for administrative costs an amount not to exceed 5 percent of the funds distributed to such State;

(13) provide for the establishment of a State Advisory Panel in accordance with subsection (b) and specify the amount of funds to be allocated to such panel; and

(14) provide for the establishment of reasonable opportunities to be heard for any parent, child-care provider, or child-care program which has been adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the State agency or any program funded under this Act.

(b)(1) The State Advisory Panel on Child Care established by the State shall be composed of not less than fifteen members—

(A) of which not less than one-third shall be parents of children who are receiving or have recently received child-care services of the type funded under this Act; and

(B) of which not less than one-third shall be representatives of child-care providers and care givers within the State, including representatives of different types of child-care programs (such as public, private, private nonprofit, center-based, and family day-care programs) and individuals who are professionals in the field of child development.

(2) The State Advisory Panel shall—

(A) advise the State on the preparation, and policy matters arising in the administration, of the State plan submitted under subsection (a);

(B) review and submit comments to the State agency on the State plan; and

(C) review and evaluate child-care programs and services funded under this Act and other provisions of law in the State and the progress of such programs and services in meeting the objectives of the State plan and the purposes of this Act and make recommendations, as appropriate, on the development of State standards and policies relating to child-care programs and the provision of child-care services, and may prepare and, through the State agency, submit to the Secretary such recommendations and evaluations, together with such additional comments as that State agency considers appropriate.

(3) Each State Advisory Panel shall meet within thirty days after the beginning of each fiscal year and establish the time, place, and manner of its future meetings, except that such panel shall have not less than two public meetings each year at which the public is given an opportunity to express views concerning the administration and operation of the State plan.

(4) Each State Advisory Panel shall be authorized to obtain the services of such professional, technical, and clerical personnel and to contract for such other services as may be necessary to enable the panel to carry out its functions under this Act. Members of the State Advisory Panel, while serving on the business of the Panel, shall be reimbursed, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, for reasonable travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out their duties as members of the State Advisory Panel. The Secretary shall ensure that funds sufficient for the purpose of this paragraph are made available to each panel from funds available for the administration of the State plan.

(c) The Secretary shall approve any State plan, and any modification thereof, if (after approval of the first such plan) the State agency has complied with the provisions of subsection (d) and if such plan complies with the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), and the Secretary shall not disapprove any State plan except after reasonable notice, an opportunity to correct deficiencies in the plan, and notice of an opportunity for a hearing.

(d) For the purpose of providing information to the Secretary and the Congress to aid in their understanding of the implementation and effectiveness of programs under this Act, the State agency, not later than December 1 of each year, shall prepare and submit to the Secretary, a concise report describing activities, results, and performance in the State in meeting the objectives of the State plan and the purposes of this Act. The report submitted under this subsection shall contain the results of the data collection, reviews, and evaluations carried out pursuant to subsections (a)(6) and (b)(2(C).

NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 5. (a)(1) The Secretary shall designate an identifiable administrative unit and an individual in charge of such unit within the Department of Health and Human Services to carry out the provisions of this Act, to coordinate all activities of the Department relating to child care, and to seek to coordinate such activities with the pertinent activities of other Federal agencies.

(2) The Secretary shall make available to such unit such staff and resources as are necessary to enable it to carry out effectively its functions under this Act.

(b)(1) Within six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish within the Office of the Secretary a National Advisory Panel on Child Care Needs and Services which shall be composed of not less than fifteen members—

(A) of which not less than one-third shall be parents of children who are receiving or have recently received child-care services of the type funded under this Act, and

(B) of which not less than one-third shall be representatives of child-care providers, including representatives of different types of child-care programs (such as public, private, private nonprofit, center-based, and family day-care programs) and individuals who are professionals in the field of child development and related fields.

Not less than one-third of the members serving on the National Advisory Panel shall be individuals who are serving on, or have served on, a State Advisory Panel established by a State under section 4(b).

(2) The National Advisory Panel shall review Federal policies with respect to child-care services and make recommendations to and advise the Secretary with respect to the standards developed by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c) and may submit to the President and to the Congress such comments as it considers appropriate with respect to the reports of the Secretary submitted under section 12.

(3) The Secretary shall make available to the National Advisory Panel such personnel and technical assistance as are necessary to carry out effectively its functions under this section.

(4) Members of the National Advisory Panel who are not regular full-time employees of the United States shall, while attending meetings and conferences of the National Advisory Panel or otherwise engaged in the business of the Panel (including travel-time), be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service for GS-18 in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code; and, while so serving on the business of the Panel away from their homes or regular places of business, they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(c)(1) After consultation with the National Advisory Panel, and not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and develop proposed standards to be applied to programs funded under this Act and such other child-care programs funded by the Department of Health and Human Services as the Secretary may specify. The standards developed pursuant to this subsection shall cover factors having a demonstrated impact on the quality of child care including, but not limited to—

(A) group size and composition in terms of the number of teachers and the number and age of children;

(B) the qualifications of the child-care provider;

(C) the physical environment;

(D) parental involvement; and

(E) necessary support services including but not limited to health, nutrition, and social services.

(2) After distribution for comment to each State agency and State Advisory Panel established under section 4(a)(13) and 4(b), the Secretary shall publish the proposed standards in the Federal Register.

(3) After taking into consideration any comments received by the Secretary with respect to the regulations proposed under paragraph (1) of subsection (c), but in no event later than one hundred and twenty days after the Secretary publishes proposed standards under paragraph (2), the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register final standards to be applied to programs funded under this Act and such other child-care programs funded by the Department of Health and Human Services as the Secretary may specify.

(4) Until such time as the final standards have been adopted, programs funded under this Act shall comply with the requirements imposed upon child-care programs funded through payments made under title XX of the Social Security Act.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to and enter into contracts with public agencies and private organizations to support innovative child-care demonstration projects, including projects providing nighttime care or care for sick children, migrant children, children with limited English-language proficiency, disabled children, or other special needs populations. No grant may be made under this section unless adequate funds are included in such grant to evaluate and report to the Secretary on the effectiveness of the approach of the program in meeting the child-care needs of the families being served.

(b) No grant may be made under this section unless an application is made to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary. Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

LICENSING IMPROVEMENT GRANTS

SEC. 7. (a) Each State receiving funds under this Act shall prepare a report to be submitted to the Secretary outlining the current status of child-care licensing or regulation within the State, deficiencies, if any, in the existing licensing or regulating program (including an assessment of the adequacy of staff to carry out effectively the State program), the plan of the State for expanding its licensing program to cover all types of child-care providers (except where children are being cared for in their own homes, by a relative, or on a less than full-time basis in a noncommercial, neighborhood setting, such as a cooperative play group or occasional child-care arrangements), and the types and amounts of assistance the State requires to make improvements in such licensing or regulating program. Each such State shall submit its report under this subsection not later than twelve months after it first receives a payment under section 10. The report submitted under this subsection shall include, separately, information with respect to center-based programs and family day-care programs.

(b) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to States submitting a report under subsection (a) for the purpose of developing, improving, or implementing its child-care licensing or regulating program. No grant may be made under this section unless the State submits an application to the Secretary therefor at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary.

(c) After consultation with the National Advisory Panel on Child Care Needs and Services and with the cooperation of the National Conference of Uniform Commissioners of State Laws, the Secretary shall develop a Model State Licensing or Regulating of Child Care Providers Act to be used by the States as a guide to improving licensing or regulating of child-care providers. Not later than eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall publish such Model Act in the Federal Register.

TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 8. (a)(1) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to and enter into contracts with institutions of higher education, State and local public agencies, and private organizations to provide preservice and inservice training to teachers, other care givers, and administrative personnel involved in child-care programs, to recruit and train low-income parents for child-care positions, to provide specialized training in early childhood education for certified elementary school teachers who are unemployed, to train child-care resource and referral workers, to train persons in the provision of services to disabled children, migrant children, and children with limited English-language proficiency, and to develop and improve teacher certification criteria for child-care programs.

(2) The Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance to States in planning, developing, and coordinating child-care services, in developing, expanding, and implementing State licensing or regulating of child-care programs, and in developing and conducting teacher or child-care-provider training programs with special attention to the factors described in paragraph (1).

(b) No grant may be made under this section unless an application is made to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary.

ALLOTMENTS

SEC. 9. (a) From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 14(a) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot not more than one percent among Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands according to their respective needs.

(b) From the remainder of such sums, the Secretary shall allot—

(1) to each State the amount which bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the number of children living in homes in which—

(A) both parents of such child are employed or seeking employment, or

(B) the child resides with only one parent and that parent is employed or seeking employment, in such State bears to the number of such children in all States; and

(2) to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the number of children who reside in households having incomes which are equal to or less than one-half of the median income of the United States for families of the same size, as determined in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary, in such State bears to the number of such children in all States.

For the purpose of this subsection, the term "State" does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(c) The Secretary shall obtain from the appropriate departments and agencies of the United States the most recent satisfactory data available in order to determine the allocation provided for in subsection (b).

(d) That portion of any State's allotment under subsection (b) for a fiscal year that the Secretary determines will not be required for the period for which such allotment is available shall be available, from time to time on such date during such period as the Secretary may fix, for reallotment to other States in proportion to the original allotment of such States under subsection (b) for such year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates will be needed in such State and will be used for such period for carrying out State plans approved under this Act, and the total of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts are not so reduced. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed part of its allotment under subsection (b) for such year.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 10. (a) From the amounts allotted to each State under section 9, the Secretary shall make a grant to each State having a plan approved under section 4 in an amount equal to the total sums to be expended by the State under the plan for the fiscal year for which the grant is to be made.

(b) Payments under this Act may be made in installments, in advance, or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments.

WITHHOLDING OF GRANTS

SEC. 11. Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to a State, finds—

(1) that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the State plan of that State approved under section 4, or

(2) that in the operation of any program or project funded under this Act there is a failure to comply substantially with any applicable provision of this Act, the Secretary shall notify such State of the findings and that no further payments may be made to such State under this Act (or, in the case of noncompliance by a particular program or project, that further payments to the State will be limited to programs or projects under the State plan, or portions thereof, not affected by such noncompliance) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply, or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

REVIEW AND EVALUATION

SEC. 12. (a) The Secretary shall make reviews and evaluations of the programs and activities funded under this Act (to be conducted by persons not directly or indirectly involved in administration of the programs or activities to be reviewed or evaluated), and conduct studies of child-care needs for the purpose of providing information aimed at—

(1) enabling the Congress and the executive branch to seek to reach agreement upon specific, realistic objectives and expectations of achievement for programs and activities funded under this Act;

(2) determining whether the programs and activities established and carried out under this Act at the Federal, State, and local levels will be likely to achieve progress toward such objectives and expectations;

(3) ensuring that sufficient data necessary to ascertain such progress is collected and made available to the Congress and the executive branch; and

(4) improving the capability of the Congress and the executive branch to understand child-care needs in the Nation and how best to meet such needs in a cost-effective fashion.

(b) In carrying out reviews, evaluations, and studies under this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) ascertain the specific objectives and expectations for achievement regarding programs and activities carried out under this Act of appropriate managers and policymakers in the executive branch and of appropriate committees of the Congress;

(2) examine a representative sample of the actual operation and results of such programs and activities at the Federal, State, and local levels;

(3) compare the objectives and expectations for achievement with the actual operation and results of such programs and activities, including comparisons of the objectives of State plans with the actual operation and results under such plans and an assessment of the effects of increased availability of child care (including changes in the incidence of child abuse, school vandalism, and juvenile delinquency, and other relevant effects such as changes in health status, school attendance, and school performance);

(4) identify or develop programs and activities, or parts of programs and activities, that are able, or are likely to be able, to achieve in a cost-effective fashion progress toward such objectives and expectations; and

(5) determine how the results of such reviews, evaluations, and studies can best be disseminated and utilized to achieve the purposes described in subsection (a).

The Secretary shall prepare and transmit to the President and the Congress on or before March 1, 1992, and every two years thereafter a concise report containing—

(1) a statement of specific, realistic objectives and expected progress toward such objectives over the next two years for the programs and activities funded under this Act, and a statement relating such objectives and expected progress to the purposes of this Act;

(2) the results of all comparisons made under subsection (b)(3), including comparisons necessary for judging the effectiveness with which State plans, and the objectives of such plans, are carried out at the State and local levels;

(3) the results of efforts under subsection (b)(4), including options or recommendations (or both) with respect to any legislative action that the Secretary considers necessary or desirable for achieving the purposes set forth in subsection (a); and

(4) plans for reviews, evaluations, and studies under this section for the ensuing year, including a statement detailing the programs and activities (or parts thereof) funded under this Act to be the subject of such reviews, evaluations, and studies.

(d) The Secretary shall prepare and transmit to the President and the Congress not later than four years after the date of the enactment of this Act a report on child-care needs in the Nation. Such report shall include, but not be limited to, a summary of the results of data collection under sections 4(a)(6)(A), 4(a)(6)(B), and 4(b)(2)(C) and any studies of child-care needs conducted by the Secretary under this section, a summary of other relevant research on child-care needs, and an analysis of options for more fully meeting such needs, including options for legislative action.

(e) The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall, until the expiration of three years after the completion of a program, project, or activity authorized or assisted under this Act, have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of entities receiving grants or contracts under this Act that in the opinion of the Secretary or the Comptroller General may be related or pertinent to assistance provided under this Act.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 13. As used in this Act—

(1) "child" means any individual who has not attained the age of fifteen except that with respect to eligibility for services, the definition of "child" may include a disabled individual who has not yet attained the age of eighteen;

(2) "parent" includes any natural parent, foster parent, or legal guardian with whom the child resides;

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(4) "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, America Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 14. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the four succeeding fiscal years for carrying out the provisions of this Act. Of the sums so appropriated for any fiscal year, 75 percent shall be used for making grants under section 4, relating to grants for carrying out the State plan; 5 percent shall be used for making grants under section 6, relating to demonstration projects; 5 percent shall be used for making grants under section 7, relating to licensing assistance; 5 percent shall be used for making grants or contracts under section 8(a), relating to training programs; and 10 percent shall be used for carrying out the provisions of sections 5, 8(b), and 12, relating to national administration (including the reasonable expenses of the National Advisory Panel on Child Care Needs and Services) and training and technical assistance.

(b) No funds are authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year unless funds appropriated for the preceding fiscal year to carry out part A of title V of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, relating to Project Head Start, are at least equal to the funds appropriated for such part for fiscal year 1989.

By Mr. SYMMS:

S. 45. A bill to amend chapter 44, title 18, United States Code, to provide clarification of limitations on controls of firearms, and to prohibit the use of Federal funds to political subdivisions which implement certain gun control ordinances; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CLARIFICATION OF LIMITATIONS ON FIREARMS

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, my bill provides that municipalities which enact laws prohibiting or regulating the ownership or possession of firearms or ammunition shall, unless such laws have been enacted by Federal or State law, be ineligible to receive or use certain types of Federal law enforcement assistance.

The intent of my bill is to send a message of strong objection to those local governments which would make it illegal for their citizens to protect themselves from criminals, and which, at the same time, desire Federal funding for law enforcement activities.

I believe the Federal Government should not support law enforcement efforts in municipalities which disregard the Bill of Rights and strip their citizens of the best means of fighting crime and protecting themselves.

As always, criminals in these communities will be able to obtain firearms, regardless of antigun ownership laws. Today 60 million Americans own 200 million firearms, including approximately 60 million handguns. Yet, less than four-tenths of 1 percent of those handguns will be used to commit crimes. Over 99.6 percent of all the handguns in America are used legally, most of those for protection. Private handgun ownership, therefore, does not contribute significantly to crime.

The general uselessness of gun laws is perhaps best shown by the overall long-term trends. Violent crime in the United States has been falling during the decade of the eighties—particularly gun-related violent crime—even though handgun availability has been increasing over three times as fast as the population, and even though handguns constitute a greater and greater percentage of the firearms market. Not only is the violent crime rate falling, but so is the firearms accident rate and the overall suicide rate.

Despite these facts there are continued efforts in this Nation to thwart, or even nullify, the second amendment. I believe most of my colleagues know that the impetus behind this bill was the June 1981 action of the city council in Morton Grove, IL banning the civilian ownership of handguns. That action shook gun owners and civil libertarians across the Nation because of its blatant disregard for the second amendment to the Constitution in which the essential guarantee of liberty, the right to keep and bear arms, is incorporated.

Mr. President, in 1982 the Subcommittee on the Constitution, chaired by our distinguished colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, issued an excellent and scholarly study of the second amendment entitled, "The Right to Keep and Bear Arms." That committee report cites clear proof, based on historical and legal evidence, that the Framers of the Constitution thought of the right to keep and bear arms as an individual right belonging to all Americans and a bulwark of liberty. I ask unanimous consent that a chapter of the report entitled, "History: Second Amendment Right to 'Keep and Bear Arms'" be included in the RECORD at the end of my statement.

Mr. President, I could discuss at length the legal and constitutional arguments that the second amendment guarantees the fundamental individual right of American citizens to keep and bear arms, though many legal scholars have performed amazing feats of semantic gymnastics to prove otherwise. I have been astounded at how the 27 words of the second amendment have been so misunderstood—especially when we know the clear and concise intentions of the Framers of the Constitution.

That is why I have offered this bill. We, in Congress, should take a stand in support of the rights of gun owners and all people who cherish freedom. We should refuse to participate, financially or otherwise, in the legal and moral folly of local elected officials whose actions exhibit contempt for the Constitution. We should rebuke the council members of Morton Grove and other cities prohibiting the private ownership of firearms because their actions threaten individual liberty and undermine the Constitution we are sworn to defend.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Richard Cohen entitled "A Rude Awakening" be reprinted in the RECORD and that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 45

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 927 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "No provision"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any political subdivision of a State which enacts a law, regulation, or ordinance which prohibits the ownership or possession of firearms or ammunition or any specific type of firearm or ammunition, unless such law, regulation, or ordinance is specifically enacted by Federal law or the law of the State in which the political subdivision is located, shall be ineligible to—

"(1) use Federal detention facilities;

"(2) receive training from or enter into contracts with the Federal Bureau of Investigation;

"(3) receive assistance from or participate in programs of the Office of Justice Programs; or

"(4) have access to the Department of Treasury records or training programs.".

HISTORY: SECOND AMENDMENT RIGHT TO "KEEP AND BEAR ARMS"

The right to keep and bear arms as a part of English and American law antedates not only the Constitution, but also the discovery of firearms. Under the laws of Alfred the Great, whose reign began in 872 A.D., all English citizens from the nobility to the peasants were obliged to privately purchase weapons and be available for military duty.[1] This was in sharp contrast to the feudal system as it evolved in Europe, under which armament and military duties were concentrated in the nobility. The body of armed citizens were known as the "fyrd".

While a great many of the Saxon rights were bridged following the Norman conquest, the right and duty of arms possession was retained. Under the Assize of Arms of 1181, "the whole community of freemen" between the ages of 15 and 40 were required by law to possess certain arms, which were arranged in proportion to their possessions.[2] They were required twice a year to demonstrate to Royal officials that they were appropriately armed. In 1253, another Assize of Arms expanded the duty of armament to include not only freemen, but also villeins, who were the English equivalent of serfs. Now all "citizens, burgesses, free tenants, villeins and others from 15 to 60 years of age" were obliged to be armed.[3] While on the Continent the villeins were regarded as little more than animals hungering for rebellion, the English legal system not only permitted, but affirmatively required them, to be armed.

The thirteenth century saw further definitions of this right as the long bow, a formidable armor-piercing weapon, became increasingly the mainstay of British national policy. In 1285, Edward I commanded that all persons comply with the earlier Assizes and added that "anyone else who can afford them shall keep bows and arrows".[4] The right of armament was subject only to narrow limitations. In 1279, it was ordered that those appearing in Parliament or other public assemblies "shall come without all force and armor, well and peaceably".[5] In 1328, the statute of Northampton ordered that no one use their arms in "affray of the peace, nor to go nor ride armed by day or by night in fairs, markets, nor in the presence of the justices or other ministers".[6] English courts construed this ban consistently with the general right of private armament as appyling only to wearing of arms "accompanied with such circumstances as are apt to terrify the people".[7] In 1369, the King ordered that the sheriffs of London require all citizens "at leisure time on holidays" to "use in their recreation bowes and arrows" and to stop all other games which might distract them from this practice.[8]

The Tudor kings experimented with limits upon specialized weapons—mainly crossbows and the then-new firearms. These measures were not intended to disarm the citizenry, but on the contrary, to prevent their being diverted from longbow practice by sport with other weapons which were considered less effective. Even these narrow measures were shortlived. In 1503, Henry VII limited shooting (but not possession) of crossbows to those with land worth 200 marks annual rental, but provided an exception for those who "shote owt of a howse for the lawefull defens of the same".[9] In 1511, Henry VIII increased the property requirement to 300 marks. He also expanded the requirement of longbow ownership, requiring all citizens to "use and exercyse shootyng in longbowes, and also have a bowe and arrowes contynually" in the house.[10] Fathers were required by law to purchase bows and arrows for their sons between the age of 7 and 14 and to train them in longbow use.

In 1514 the ban on crossbows was extended to include firearms.[11] But in 1533, Henry reduced the property qualification to 100 pounds per year; in 1541 he limited it to possession of small firearms ("of the length of one hole year" for some firearms and "thre quarters of a yarde" for others)[12] and eventually he repealed the entire statute by proclamation.[13] The later Tudor monarchs continued the system and Elizabeth added to it by creating what came to be known as "train bands", selected portions of the citizenry chosen for special training. These trained bands were distinguished from the "militia", which terms was first used during the Spanish Armada crisis to designate the entire of the armed citizenry.[14]

The militia continued to be a pivotal force in the English political system. The British historian Charles Oman considers the existence of the armed citizenry to be a major reason for the moderation of monarchial rule in Great Britain; "More than once he [Henry VIII] had to restrain himself, when he discovered that the general feeling of his subjects was against him. . . . His 'gentlemen pensioners' and his yeomen of the guard were but a handful, and bills or bows were in every farm and cottage".[15]

When civil war broke out in 1642, the critical issue was whether the King or Parliament had the right to control the militia.[16] The aftermath of the civil war saw England in temporary control of a military government, which repeatedly dissolved Parliament and authorized its officers to "search for, and seize all arms" owned by Catholics, opponents of the government, "or any other person whom the commissioners had judged dangerous to the peace of this Commonwealth".[17]

The military government ended with the restoration of Charles II. Charles in turn opened his reign with a variety of repressive legislation, expanding the definition of treason, establishig press censorship and ordering his supporters to form their own troops, "the officers to be numerous, disaffected persons watched and not allowed to assemble, and their arms seized".[18] In 1662, a Militia Act was enacted empowering officials "to search for and seize all arms in the custody or possession of any person or persons whom the said lieutenants or any two or more of their deputies shall judge dangerous to the peace of the kingdom".[19] Gunsmiths were ordered to deliver to the government lists of all purchasers.[20] These confiscations were continued under James II, who directed them particularly against the Irish population: "Although the country was infested by predatory bands, a Protestant gentleman could scarcely obtain permission to keep a brace of pistols." [21]

In 1668, the government of James was overturned in a peaceful uprising which came to be known as "The Glorious Revolution". Parliament resolved that James had abdicated and promulgated a Declaration of Rights, later enacted as the Bill of Rights. Before coronation, his successor, William of Orange, was required to swear to respect these rights. The debates in the House of Commons over this Declaration of Rights focused largely upon the disarmament under the 1662 Militia Act. One member complained that "an act of Parliament was made to disarm all Englishmen, who the lieutenant should suspect, by day or night, by day or night, by force or otherwise—this was done in Ireland for the sake of putting arms into Irish hands." The speech of another is summarized as "militia bill—power to disarm all England—now done in Ireland." A third complained "Abitrary power exercised by the ministry. . . . Militia—imprisoning without reason; disarming—himself disarmed." Yet another summarized his complaints "Militia Act—an abominable thing to disarm the nation. . . ." [22]

The Bill of Rights, as drafted in the House of Commons, simply provided that "the acts concerning the milita are grievous to the subject" and that "it is necessary for the public Safety that the Subjects, which are Protestants, should provide and keep arms for the common defense; And that the Arms which have been seized, and taken from them, be restored." [23] The House of Lords changed this to make it a more positive declaration of an individual right under English law: "That the subjects which are Protestant may have arms for their defense suitable to their conditions and as allowed by law." [24] The only limitation was on ownership by Catholics, who at that time composed only a few percent of the British population and were subject to a wide variety of punitive legislation. The Parliament subsequently made clear what it meant by "suitable to their conditions and as allowed by law". The poorer citizens had been restricted from owning firearms, as well as traps and other commodities useful for hunting, by the 1671 Game Act. Following the Bill of Rights, Parliament reenacted that statute, leaving its operative parts unchanged with one exception—which removed the word "guns" from the list of items forbidden to the poorer citizens.[25] The right to keep and bear arms would henceforth belong to all English subjects, rich and poor alike.

In the colonies, availability of hunting and need for defense led to armament statutes comparable to those of the early Saxon times. In 1623, Virginia forbade its colonists to travel unless they were "well armed"; in 1631 it required colonists to engage in target practice on Sunday and to "bring their peaces to church." [26] In 1658 it required every householder to have a functioning firearm within his house and in 1673 its laws provided that a citizen who claimed he was too poor to purchase a firearm would have one purchased for him by the government, which would then require him to pay a reasonable price when able to do so. [27] In Massachusetts, the first session of the legislature ordered that not only freemen, but also indentured servants own firearms and in 1644 it imposed a stern 6 shilling fine upon any citizen who was not armed. [28]

When the British government began to increase its military presence in the colonies in the mid-eighteenth century, Massachusetts responded by calling upon its citizens to arm themselves in defense. One colonial newspaper argued that it was impossible to complain that his act was illegal since they were "British subjects, to whom the privilege of possessing arms is expressly recognized by the Bill of Rights" while another argued that this "is a natural right which the people have reserved to themselves, confirmed by the Bill of Rights, to keep arms for their own defense".[29] The newspaper cited Blackstone's commentaries on the laws of England, which had listed the "having and using arms for self preservation and defense" among the "absolute rights of individuals." The colonists felt they had an absolute right at common law to own firearms.

Together with freedom of the press, the right to keep and bear arms became one of the individual rights most prized by the colonists. When British troops seized a militia arsenal in September, 1774, and incorrect rumors that colonists had been killed spread through Massachusetts, 60,000 citizens took up arms.[30] A few months later, when Patrick Henry delivered his famed "Give me liberty or give me death" speech, he spoke in support of a proposition "that a well regulated militia, composed of gentlemen and freemen, is the natural strength and only security of a free government. . . ." Throughout the following revolution, formal and informal units of armed citizens obstructed British communication, cut off foraging parties, and harassed the thinly stretched regular forces. When seven states adopted state "bills of rights" following the Declaration of Independence, each of those bills of rights provided either for protection of the concept of a militia or for an express right to keep and bear arms.[31]

Following the revolution but previous to the adoption of the Constitution, debates over militia proposals occupied a large part of the political scene. A variety of plans were put forth by figures ranging from George Washington to Baron von Steuben.[32] All of the proposals called for a general duty of all citizens to be armed, although some proposals (most notably von Steuben's) also emphasized a "select militia" which would be paid for its services and given special training. In this respect, this "select militia" was the successor of the "trained bands" and the predecessor of what is today the "national guard". In the debates over the Constitution, von Steuben's proposals were criticized as undemocratic. In Connecticut one writer complained of a proposal that "this looks too much like Baron von Steuben's militia, by which a standing army was meant and intended." [33] In Pennsylvania, a delegate argued "Congress may give us a select militia which will, in fact, be a standing army—or Congress, afraid of a general militia, may say there will be no militia at all. When a select mulitia is formed, the people in general may be disarmed." [34] Richard Henry Lee, in his widely read pamphlet "Letters from the Federal Farmer to the Republican" worried that the people might be disarmed "by modeling the militia. Should one fifth or one eighth part of the people capable of bearing arms be made into a select militia, as has been proposed, and those the young and ardent parts of the community, possessed of little or no property, the former will answer all the purposes of an army, while the latter will be defenseless." He proposed that "the Constitution ought to secure a genuine, and guard against a select militia," adding that "to preserve liberty, it is essential that the whole body of the people always posses arms and be taught alike, especially when young, how to use them." [35]

The suspicion of select militia units expressed in these passages is a clear indication that the framers of the Constitution did not seek to gurantee a State right to maintain formed groups similar to the National Guard, but rather to protect the right of individual citizens to keep and bear arms. Lee, in particular, sat is the Senate which approved the Bill of Rights. He would hardly have meant the second amendment to apply only to the select militias he so feared and disliked.

Other figures of the period were of like mind. In the Virginia convention, George Mason, drafter of the Virginia Bill of Rights, accused the British of having plotted "to disarm the people—that was the best and most effective way to enslave them", while Patrick Henry observed that "The great object is that every man be armed" and "everyone who is able may have a gun".[36]

Nor were the antifederalist, to whom we owe credit for a Bill of Rights, alone on this account. Federalist arguments also provide a source of support for an individual rights view. Their arguments in favor of the proposed Constitution also relied heavily upon universal armament. The proposed Constitution had been heavily criticized for its failure to ban or even limit standing armies. Unable to deny this omission, the Constitution's supporters frequently argued to the people that the universal armament of Americans made such limitations unnecessary. A pamphlet written by Noah Webster, aimed at swaying Pennsylvania toward ratification observed

"Before a standing army can rule, the people must be disarmed; as they are in almost every kingdom in Europe. The supreme power in America cannot enforce unjust laws by the sword, because the whole body of the people are armed, and constitute a force superior to any band of regular troops that can be, on any pretense, raised in the United States".[37]

In the Massachusetts convention, Sedgwick echoed the same thought, rhetorically asking if an oppressive army could be formed or "if raised, whether they could subdue a Nation of freemen, who know how to prize liberty, and who have arms in their hands?" [38] In Federalist Paper 46, Madison, later author of the Second Amendment, mentioned "The advantage of being armed, which the Americans possess over the people of all other countries" and that "notwithstanding the military establishments in the several kingdoms of Europe, which are carried as far as the public resources will bear, the governments are afraid to trust the people with arms."

A third and even more compelling case for an indivdiual rights perspective on the Second Amendment comes from the State demands for a bill of rights. Numerous state ratifications called for adoption of a Bill of Rights as a part of the Constitution. The first such call came from a group of Pennsylvania delegates. Their proposals, which were not adopted but had a critical effect on future debates, proposed among other rights that "the people have a right to bear arms for the defense of themselves and their own state, or the United States, or for the purpose of killing game; and no law shall be passed for disarming the people or any of them, unless for crimes committed, or a real danger of public injury from individuals." [39] In Massachusetts, Sam Adams unsuccessfully pushed for a ratification conditioned on adoption of a Bill of Rights, beginning with a guarantee "That the said Constitution shall never be construed to authorize Congress to infringe the just liberty of the press or the rights of conscience; or to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens from keeping their own arms. . . ." [40] When New Hampshire gave the Constitution the ninth vote needed for its passing into effect, it called for adoption of a Bill of Rights which included the provision that "Congress shall never disarm any citizen unless such as are or have been in actual rebellion". [41] Virginia and North Carolina thereafter called for a provision "that the people have the right to keep and bear arms; that a well regulated militia composed of the body of the people trained to arms is the proper, natural and safe defense of a free state." [42]

When the first Congress convened for the purpose of drafting a Bill of Rights, it delegated the task to James Madison. Madison did not write upon a blank tablet. Instead, he obtained a pamphlet listing the State proposals for a Bill of Rights and sought to produce a briefer version incorporating all the vital proposals of these. His purpose was to incorporate, not distinguish by technical changes, proposals such as that of the Pennsylvania minority, Sam Adams, and the New Hampshire delegates. Madison proposed among other rights that:

"The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed; a well armed and well regulated militia being the best security of a free country; but no person religiously scrupulous of bearing arms shall be compelled to render military service in person." [43]

In the House, this was initially modified so that the militia clause came before the proposal recognizing the right. The proposals for the Bill of Rights were then trimmed in the interests of brevity. The conscientious objector clause was removed following objections by Elbridge Gerry, who complained that future Congresses might abuse the exemption for the scrupulous to excuse everyone from militia service.

The proposal finally passed the House in its present form: "A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed." In this form it was submitted into the Senate, which passed it the following day. The Senate in the process indicated its intent that the right be an individual one, for private purposes, by rejecting an amendment which would have limited the keeping and bearing of arms to bearing "for the common defense".

The earliest American constitutional commentators concurred in giving this broad reading to the amendment. When St. George Tucker, later Chief Justice of the Virginia Supreme Court, in 1803 published an edition of Blackstone annotated to American law, he followed Blackstone's citation of the right of the subject "of having arms suitable to their condition and degree, and such as are allowed by law" with a citation to the Second Amendment, "And this without any qualification as to their condition or degree, as is the case in the British government". [44] William Rawle's "View of the Constitution" published in Philadelphia in 1825 noted that under the Second Amendment

"The prohibition is general. No clause in the Constitution could by a rule of construction be conceived to give to Congress a power to disarm the people. Such a flagitious attempt could only be made under some general pretense by a state legislature. But if in blind pursuit of inordinate power, either should attempt it, this amendment may be appealed to as a restraint on both." [45]

The Jefferson papers in the Library of Congress show that both Tucker and Rawle were friends of, and corresponded with Thomas Jefferson. This suggests that their assessment, as contemporaries of the Constitution's drafters, should be afforded special consideration.

Later commentators agreed with Tucker and Rawle. For instance, Joseph Story in his "Commentaries on the Constitution" consider the right to keep and bear arms as "the palladium of the liberties of the republic", which deterred tyranny and enabled the citizenry at large to overthrow it should it come to pass. [46]

Subsequent legislation in the Second Congress likewise supports the interpretation of the second amendment that creates an individual right. In the Militia Act of 1792, the second Congress defined "militia of the United States" to include almost every free adult male in the United States. These persons were obligated by law to possess a firearm and a minimum supply of ammunition and military equipment.[47] This statute, incidentally remained in effect into the early years of the present century as a legal requirement of gun ownership for most of the population of the United States. There can be little doubt from this that when the Congress and the people spoke of a "militia", they had reference to the traditional concept of the entire populace capable of bearing arms, and not to any formal group such as what is today called the National Guard. The purpose was to create an armed citizenry, such as the political theorists at the time considered essential to ward off tyranny. From this militia, appropriate measures might create a "well regulated militia" of individuals trained in their duties and responsibilities as citizens and owners of firearms.

The Second Amendment as such was rarely litigated prior to the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment. Prior to that time, most courts accepted that the commands of the federal Bill of Rights did not apply to the states. Since there was no federal firearms legislation at this time, there was no legislation which was directly subject to the Second Amendment, if the accepted interpretations were followed. However, a broad variety of state legislation was struck down under state guarantees of the right to keep and bear arms and even in a few cases, under the Second Amendment, when it came before courts which considered the federal protections applicable to the states. Kentucky in 1813 enacted the first carrying concealed weapon statute in the United States; in 1822, the Kentucky Court of Appeals struck down the law as a violation of the state constitutional protection of the right to keep and bear arms: "And can there be entertained a reasonable doubt but the provisions of that act import a restraint on the right of the citizen to bear arms? The court apprehends it not. The right existed at the adoption of the Constitution; it then had no limit short of the moral power of the citizens to exercise it, and in fact consisted of nothing else but the liberty of the citizen to bear arms."[48] On the other hand, a similar measure was sustained in Indiana, not upon the grounds that a right to keep and bear arms did not apply, but rather upon the notion that a statute banning only concealed carrying still permitted the carrying of arms and merely regulated one possible way of carrying them.[49] A few years later, the Supreme Court of Alabama upheld a similar statute but added "We do not desire to be understood as maintaining, that in regulating the manner of wearing arms, the legislature has not other limit than its own discretion. A statute which, under the pretense of regulation, amounts to a destruction of that right, or which requires arms to be so borne as to render them wholly useless for the purpose of defense, would be clearly unconstitutional."[50] When the Arkansas Supreme Court in 1842 upheld a carrying concealed weapons statute, the chief justice explained that the statute would not "detract anything from the power of the people to defend their free state and the established institutions of the country. It prohibits only the wearing of certain arms concealed. This is simply a regulation as to the manner of bearing such arms as are specified", while the dissenting justice proclaimed "I deny that any just or free government upon earth has the power to disarm its citizens".[51]

Sometimes courts went farther. When in 1837, Georgia totally banned the sale of pistols (excepting the larger pistols "known and used as horsemen's pistols") and other weapons, the Georgia Supreme Court in Nunn v. State held the statute unconstitutional under the Second Amendment to the federal Constitution. The court held that the Bill of Rights protected natural rights which were fully as capable of infringement by states as by the federal government and that the Second Amendment provided "the right of the whole people, old and young, men, women and boys, and not militia only, to keep and bear arms of every description, and not merely such as are used by the militia, shall not be infringed, curtailed, or broken in on, in the slightest degree; and all this for the important end to be attained: the rearing up and qualifying of a well regulated militia, so vitally necessary to the security of a free state."[52] Prior to the Civil War, the Supreme Court of the United States likewise indicated that the privileges of citizenship included the individual right to own and carry firearms. In the notorious Dred Scott case, the court held that black Americans were not citizens and could not be made such by any state. This decision, which by striking down the Missouri Compromise did so much to bring on the Civil War, listed what the Supreme Court considered the rights of American citizens by way of illustrating what rights would have to be given to black Americans if the Court were to recognize them as full fledged citizens:

"It would give to persons of the negro race, who are recognized as citizens in any one state of the Union, the right to enter every other state, whenever they pleased. . . . and it would give them full liberty of speech in public and in private upon all subjects upon which its own citizens might meet; to hold public meetings upon political affairs, and to keep and carry arms wherever they went."[53]

Following the Civil War, the legislative efforts which gave us three amendments to the Constitution and our earliest civil rights acts likewise recognized the right to keep and bear arms as an existing constitutional right of the individual citizen and as a right specifically singled out as one protected by the civil rights acts and by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, against infringement by state authorities. Much of the reconstruction effort in the South had been hinged upon the creation of "black militias" composed of armed and newly freed blacks, officered largely by black veterans of the Union Army. In the months after the Civil War, the existing southern governments struck at these units with the enactment of "black codes" which either outlawed gun ownership by blacks entirely, or imposed permit systems for them, and permitted the confiscation of firearms owned by blacks. When the Civil Rights Act of 1866 was debated members of both the Senate and the House referred to the disarmament of blacks as a major consideration.[54] Senator Trumbull cited provisions outlawing ownership of arms by blacks as among those which the Civil Rights Act would prevent;[55] Senator Sulsbury complained on the other hand that if the act were to be passed it would prevent his own state from enforcing a law banning gun ownership by individual free blacks.[56] Similar arguments were advanced during the debates over the anti-KKK act"; its sponsor at one point explained that a section making it a federal crime to deprive a person of "arms or weapons he may have in his house or possession for the defense of his person, family or property" was "intended to enforce the well-known constitutional provisions guaranteeing the right in the citizen to 'keep and bear arms'."[57] Likewise, the debate over the Fourteenth Amendment Congress frequently referred to the Second Amendment as one of the rights which it intended to guarantee against state action.[58]

Following adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, however, the Supreme Court held that that Amendment's prohibition against states depriving any persons of their federal "privileges and immunities" was to be given a narrow construction. In particular, the "privileges and immunities" under the Constitution would refer only to those rights which were not felt to exist as a process of natural right, but which were created solely by the Constitution. These might refer to rights such as voting in federal elections and of interstate travel, which would clearly not exist except by virtue of the existence of a federal government and which could not be said to be "natural rights".[59] This paradoxically meant that the rights which most persons would accept as the most important—those flowing from concepts of natural justice—were devalued at the expense of more technical rights. Thus when individuals were charged with having deprived black citizens of their right to freedom of assembly and to keep and bear arms, by violently breaking up a peaceable assembly of black citizens, the Supreme Court in United States v. Cruikshank[60] held that no indictment could be properly brought since the right "of bearing arms for a lawful purpose" is "not a right granted by the Constitution. Neither is it in any manner dependent upon that instrument for its existence." Nor, in the view of the Court, was the right to peacefully assemble a right protected by the Fourteenth Amendment: "The right of the people peaceably to assemble for lawful purposes existed long before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. In fact, it is and has always been one of the attributes of citizenship under a free government. . . . It was not, therefore, a right granted to the people by the Constitution." Thus the very importance of the rights protected by the First and Second Amendment was used as the basis for the argument that they did not apply to the states under the Fourteenth Amendment. In later opinions, chiefly Presser v. Illinois[61] and Miller v. Texas,[62] the Supreme Court adhered to the view, Cruikshank has clearly been superseded by twentieth century opinions which hold that portions of the Bill of Rights—and in particular the right to assembly with which Cruikshank dealt in addition to the Second Amendment—are binding upon the state governments. Given the legislative history of the Civil Rights Acts and the Fourteenth Amendment, and the more expanded views of incorporation which have become accepted in our own century, it is clear that the right to keep and bear arms was meant to be and should be protected under the civil rights statutes and the Fourteenth Amendment against infringement by officials acting under color of state law.

Within our own century, the only occasion upon which the Second Amendment has reached the Supreme Court came in United States v. Miller.[63] There, a prosecution for carrying a sawed off shotgun was dismissed before trial on Second Amendment grounds. In doing so, the court took no evidence as to the nature of the firearm or indeed any other factual matter. the Supreme Court reversed on procedural grounds, holding that the trial court could not take judicial notice of the relationship between a firearm and the Second Amendment, but must receive some manner of evidence. It did not formulate a test nor state precisely what relationship might be required. The court's statement that the amendment was adopted "to assure the continuation and render possible the effectiveness of such [militia] forces" and "must be interpreted and applied with that end in view", when combined with the court's statement that all constitutional sources "show plainly enough that the militia comprised all males physically capable of acting in concert for the common defense. . . . these men were expected to appear bearing arms supplied by themselves and of the kind in common use at the time,"[64] suggests that at the very least private ownership by a person capable of self defense and using an ordinary privately owned firearm must be protected by the Second Amendment. What the Court did not do in Miller is even more striking: It did not suggest that the lower court take evidence on whether Miller belonged to the National Guard or a similar group. The hearing was to be on the nature of the firearm, not on the nature of its use; nor is there a single suggestion that National Guard status is relevant to the case.

The Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms therefore, is a right of the individual citizen to privately possess and carry in a peaceful manner firearms and similar arms. Such an "individual rights" interpretation is in full accord with the history of the right to keep and bear arms, as previously discussed. It is moreover in accord with contemporaneous statements and formulations of the right by such founders of this nation as Thomas Jefferson and Samuel Adams, and accurately reflects the majority of the proposals which led up to the Bill of Rights itself. A number of state constitutions, adopted prior to or contemporaneously with the federal Constitution and Bill of Rights, similarly provided for a right of the people to keep and bear arms. If in fact this language creates a right protecting the states only, there might be a reason for it to be inserted in the federal Constitution but no reason for it to be inserted in state constitutions. State bills of rights necessarily protect only against action by the state, and by definition a state cannot infringe its own rights; to attempt to protect a right belonging to the state by inserting it in a limitation of the state's own powers would create an absurdity. The fact that the contemporaries of the framers did insert these words into several state constitutions would indicate clearly that they viewed the right as belonging to the individual citizen, thereby making it a right which could be infringed either by state or federal government and which must be protected against infringement by both.

Finally, the individual rights interpretation gives full meaning to the words chosen by the first Congress to reflect the right to keep and bear arms. The framers of the Bill of Rights consistently used the words "right of the people" to reflect individual rights—as when these words were used to recognize the "right of the people" to peaceably assemble, and the "right of the people" against unreasonable searches and seizures. They distinguished between the rights of the people and of the state in the Tenth Amendment. As discussed earlier, the "militia" itself referred to a concept of a universally armed people, not to any specifically organized unit. When the framers referred to the equivalent of our National Guard, they uniformly used the term "select militia" and distinguished this from "militia". Indeed, the debates over the Constitution constantly referred to organized militia units as a threat to freedom comparable to that of a standing army, and stressed that such organized units did not constitute, and indeed were philosophically opposed to, the concept of a militia.

That the National Guard is not the "Militia" referred to in the second amendment is even clearer today. Congress has organized the National Guard under its power to "raise and support armies" and not its power to "Provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the Militia".[65] This Congress chose to do in the interests of organizing reserve military units which were not limited in deployment by the strictures of our power over the constitutional militia, which can be called forth only "to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions." The modern National Guard was specifically intended to avoid status as the constitutional militia, a distinction recognized by 10 U.S.C. § 311(a).

The conclusion is thus inescapable that the history, concept, and wording of the second amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as well as its interpretation by every major commentator and court in the half-century after its reatification, indicates that what is protected is an individual right of a private citizen to own and carry firearms in a peaceful manner.

A RUDE AWAKENING

(By Richard Cohen)

Crash! It's 3:30 in the morning, a Saturday night/Sunday morning, and I am, as I should be at that hour, in bed. Crash Wrip! What's that? It sounds like the door, as if it's sticking because it's swollen with humidity, but the noise is sharper than that. Besides, I'm expecting no one. Crash! Wrip! Kapow! The door is open. Someone's in my apartment!

I leap out of bed and rush to the stairs. I have a triplex apartment with a narrow spiral staircase connecting the floors. The noise seems to have come from the second floor (my bedroom is on the third), but I can't be sure. "Who's there?" I yell. No response. But I hear something. At least I think I hear something. "Who's There?" I bellow. I hear a sound—running feet?—and then what sounds like the crashing of the door. Then nothing.

I rush to the phone. Thank God there's a dial tone. I call 911 and report an intruder. Then I leap into some pants and grap the only weapon I have—oversize scissors. I spread them to see if one blade alone makes a better weapon and then, deciding otherwise, close them and return to the head of the stairs. I listen. Nothing.

What did I hear before? I'm not sure. I've been living in this place for only a little while, and I'm not yet accustomed to the noises this particular house makes. All houses "talk" at night. The heating system talks to the air-conditioning system. The joists talk to the floorboards. It takes time to learn the language of a house. Also, mine is an apartment, and there are others in the building. The night creaks with footsteps, with the whoosh of water rushing through pipes and, sometimes with voices coming from outside. Some nights, this house babbles.

From time to time, the house would wake me. An intruder! I would creep to the stairs and listen. Nothing. Still, I heard something. I would comfort myself with reason: A burglar would not come at night, when someone might be home. Reason always worked for me as a child. After I had seen a horror film or a murder mystery, I would think it through: I did not live in the desert, where the space aliens had landed. I did not live in a Cape Cod house, where the woman had been murdered. I did not . . . There were enough differences to help me make it through the night. Sometimes I could actually fall asleep.

But now none of my reasoning was working. I had heard something. There was someone in the house. That was definite. Would he come upstairs? That was not definite. If he did, would he have a weapon? All I had was the scissors. That wouldn't do. I wanted what I didn't have. I wanted a gun.

Yes, yes, a gun. A lifetime of being a proponent of gun control, of being—truly—anti-gun suddenly meant nothing. I knew all the arguments. What if the noise was my son inexplicably coming in at 3:30 in the morning? (Well, I would see him as he came up the stairs.) What if the intruder had a gun? One or both of us could get killed. And what if the gun were to get stolen, adding to the millions of guns already out there? What was I, some sort of cliché, yet more proof that a liberal is someone who has not yet been mugged?

All my life I have been against guns. In the Army, when rifles were finally assigned to us, I seemed to be alone in greeting the weapon as nothing but a nuisance. Others in my barracks loved their weapons. Not I. When it came to Remingtons, I preferred the typewriters.

But now I wanted a gun. Understand: Even as I held the scissors overhead, I knew I would write about this (if I lived). I knew, too, it would be about guns, about my feelings at the time—not some detailed, dispassionate proposal. I still think it's crazy that a John Hinckley could easily buy a cheap gun and almost kill a president. I still think it's crazy that cheap guns are on the market. But at that moment, I wanted a gun.

Within minutes, the police arrived. They came from both the front and back of the house. The ones in the front rang the doorbell. Was it safe to run down to buzz them in? I decided to chance it. Scissors held high, I dashed down and lunged for the buzzer. Then I ran for the door and swung it open. Two policemen stood there. Loveliest sight I've ever seen.

From the ground floor came a voice. The cops were down there, too. How had they gotten in? It soon became clear. My back door had been forced open. The lock dangled. The door itself had been damaged. "Anything missing?" a policeman asked. I looked around. A laptop computer was gone.

The police stayed awhile to make out a report and dust for fingerprints. Their radio crackled—the static of the city night. Someone was trying to steal a mailbox. An officer reported missing had been found. I knew my incident was mere nothing. I was okay. The computer was no personal loss (it was owned by The Washington Post), although it had a column in it. Literary theft, I weakly joked to the cops. "Please put down those scissors, sir," one of them said.

Later, I took a board and nailed it across the door, and soon there would be a new lock and a repaired door. But I know there's no such thing as a burglar-proof house. I hate guns, and I had thought I would never want one. That night I had. They say there are no atheists in foxholes. Maybe. But there are no anti-gun advocates when the door goes Crash! Wrip! Kapow! in the night. The guy took more than a computer. He took an ideology, too.●

By Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself and Mr. RUDMAN):

S. 46. A bill to clarify standards governing bankruptcies and reorganizations of public utility companies under title 11 of the United States Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ELECTRIC UTILITY BANKRUPTCY CLARIFICATION ACT

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator RUDMAN and on my own behalf, I am introducing legislation which would prevent electric utilities from using the reorganization provisions of the bankruptcy code to circumvent State laws governing rates and other matters.

Bankruptcy reorganization proceedings involving the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire [PSNH]—my State's largest electric utility—have prompted this bill. Indeed, without this legislation, ratepayers in New Hampshire could be subjected to huge rate increases, while the shareholders and creditors might escape the losses which a bankruptcy proceeding ordinarily entails.

PSNH is the lead owner in the enormously expensive Seabrook Nuclear Powerplant, which has yet to operate. A New Hampshire law, enacted in 1979, provides that the costs to utilities for construction work-in-progress [CWIP] may not be included in the rate base until the facility is generating electricity. PSNH and its investors were well aware of this so-called CWIP law when they made the significant financial gambles which eventually led to the bankruptcy filing.

The utility's bankruptcy reorganization plan, filed in December, attempts an end run around New Hampshire's carefully structured regulatory system. The plan would circumvent State rate restrictions by converting PSNH to a holding company subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission [FERC]. The plan proposes to use FERC regulations to supplant State laws. Under those regulations, utilities may include up to 50 percent of construction-work-in-progress in their rate base.

Inasmuch as PSNH has already spent more than $2 billion on the Seabrook project, this plan, if approved by the bankruptcy court, could send electricity rates skyrocketing. The investment bankers who took a gamble with high-interest, unsecured PSNH bonds would be rescued at the expense of PSNH customers. In effect, the costs of a bad business deal would be transferred to the ratepayers.

Mr. President, in crafting the Bankruptcy Code, Congress did not anticipate the unique problems arising from a public utility bankruptcy. As the Congressional Research Service stated in a study on this subject:

The unique legal status of a highly regulated investor-owned utility, and the critical product it provides, may suggest that special legislative provisions should govern its reorganization under the Bankruptcy Code.

The current situation in New Hampshire bears this out.

This bill makes it clear that State regulatory bodies will retain their appropriate jurisdiction over electric utilities undergoing a chapter 11 reorganization. For example, an electric utility will not be able to convert to a federally regulated holding company, and thereby avoid State restrictions on rate hikes, unless the State agency approves the change.

This bill is narrowly tailored to clarify the rules governing electric utility reorganizations only. It has no effect on the Bankruptcy Code as it applies to all other forms of businesses.

Moreover, it merely clarifies existing law, rather than imposing any novel or drastic changes. The Bankruptcy Code already provides that governmental regulatory bodies which have jurisdiction over a company under the terms of a reorganization plan must approve any rate changes provided for in the plan before the court may approve it. In requiring the prior approval of the regulatory authority with existing jurisdiction over the company, this bill ensures that the terms of the reorganization plan will not be used to circumvent State laws.

Finally, there is sound precedent for tailoring the Bankruptcy Code to address the unique public interest issues raised by the bankruptcy of electric utility companies. The Railroad Reorganization Act adopted special provisions to govern the unique problems raised by railroad reorganization in the 1930's. Among other things, those provisions required the court and the trustee to consider the public interest in connection with actions taken in a railroad reorganization. The purpose of this legislation is to address specific public interest issues—notably, the protection of consumers against unwarranted rate increases—in the context of an electric utility reorganization.

This bill is necessary to prevent electric utilities from circumventing meaningful local regulation. If PSNH can get away with this manipulation of the regulatory system, other utilities are sure to follow at the expense of ratepayers across the country. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be reprinted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 46

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Electric Utility Bankruptcy Clarification Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 1 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 110. Electric utility debtors

"(a) In cases in which the debtor is an electric utility, the prior approval of any State regulatory authority vested with jurisdiction over the electric utility operations, transactions, properties or rates of the debtor shall be obtained before the court may confirm any plan of adjustment or reorganization or take any other action pertaining to the debtor which would terminate or restrict the existing jurisdiction of such State regulatory authority.

"(b) The pendency of any proceeding under this title shall not be construed to nullify the jurisdiction or authority of any State regulatory authority which would otherwise apply to the operations, transactions, properties, or rates of a debtor which is an electric utility.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'electric utility' means any entity which owns or operates facilities used for the generation, transmission, or distribution of electric energy for sale, other than sale to tenants or employees of the entity operating such facilities for their own use and not for resale.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 1 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"110. Electric utility debtors.".

(c) This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of enactment and shall apply to any case pending on such date.

● Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I rise today along with my colleague from New Hampshire, Senator HUMPHREY, to introduce legislation that would prevent the creation of a loophole for public electric utilities in bankruptcy proceedings.

The Federal Bankruptcy Code now requires approval by the State or Federal regulatory agency which oversees rates, of any rate increases provided for in a reorganization plan approved by the court. I believe the intent of Federal law is thus clear, and that provision ought to be dispositive of the issue.

Regrettably, the Bankruptcy Code has no explicit provision preventing a court from transferring regulation authority away from the State to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission [FERC], thereby escaping the jurisdiction of a State regulatory agency for the principle purpose of setting rates. Some attorneys are now asserting that, in the absence of such a specific prohibition, the bankruptcy court has the authority to violate all our federalist principles. Our bill would clarify this. A transfer of regulatory authority should be acceptable if the State concurs with the utility on the regulatory transfer. Were the bankruptcy court to approve the transfer without the approval of the State regulatory agency, it would deprive captive consumers of the protection established by law and contemplated in our Federal system of government. The bankruptcy of a public electric utility, which is the sole provider of electricity in an area, is far different than the bankruptcy of a widget manufacturer. In the case of the electric utility, there is a clear public and federalism interest which must be protected. This legislation merely requires the bankruptcy court to condition its approval, at any point in the bankruptcy proceedings, on compliance by the debtor with State regulatory requirements over rates and other utility operations prior to terminating or restricting the existing jurisdiction of the State agency. Thus it would clarify existing statute as to the role of the State public utility commission.

Mr. President, this legislation is proconsumer. It assures consumers who would otherwise be held hostage by the bankruptcy court without any input from the State agency with jurisdiction over rates that their interests, along with the interests of investors and creators will be considered prior to the confirmation of a reorganization plan.

The beginning of a dangerous precedent is taking place in the State of New Hampshire where Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, the State's largest public electric utility, filed for bankruptcy on January 28, 1988, becoming the first major investor-owned utility to file bankruptcy since the Great Depression. As my colleague Senator HUMPHREY has already noted, because of the enormous cost overruns incurred by PSNH in constructing the Seabrook Nuclear Powerplant, combined with a State statute restricting construction-work-in-progress [CWIP] fees from being charged back to the ratepayer, PSNH sought protection under chapter 11. The recent reorganization plan submitted by PSNH is an attempt to run roughshod over ratepayers. If PSNH is regulated by FERC, it may be allowed to increase its rates drastically since FERC allows utilities to charge back the costs of plants not yet in operation. If PSNH is allowed to dramatically increase its rates, the injection of capital from the rate increase will be money in the pockets of investors. Let me make it clear, the beneficiaries of such a rate increase will not be average Americans who hold common stock in PSNH. Instead, it will be Wall Street investment bankers who purchased unsecured bonds at high interest rates or at 30 cents on the dollar, knowing full well the risk of investing in PSNH and who now want to remove that risk by manipulating Federal law to obtain a full dollar back in value.

While this measure, if enacted, would prevent the regulation transfer to take place in New Hampshire without the approval of the State public utilities commission, it is not meant to be limited to just our State. Similar cases of this type may arise in other States around the country.

It is our intent to clarify the Bankruptcy Code as it relates to electric utilities. Our legislation would not impact other types of businesses in bankruptcy.

Mr. President, we must protect electricity consumers from a process which does not consider their interests but rather, favors those of the investor and the creditor. While I do not begrudge these investors their fair profit, I do object to various entities using the bankruptcy process to further their financial ends and stick it to the consumer. Congress intended for the public interest to be considered in the case of a bankrupt public electric utility. While the current Bankruptcy Code already contains provisions concerning electric rates, our legislation would further clarify these provisions to protect the public interest. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. KERRY, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. ADAMS, Ms. MIKULSKI, and Mr. CHAFEE):

S. 47. A bill to prohibit discrimination on the basis of affectional or sexual orientation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CIVIL RIGHTS AMENDMENTS ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation on behalf of myself, the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY and Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from New York, [Mr. MOYNIHAN], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], and the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI], which would amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964, to prohibit discrimination in employment, housing, public accommodations, or federally assisted programs on the basis of affectional or sexual orientation.

Mr. President, it is time that our Nation's civil rights law be amended to make it clear that discrimination against individuals on the basis of their sexual orientation is wrong. I firmly believe that it is just as wrong to discriminate on the basis of an individual's sexual orientation as it is to discriminate on the bases of sex, religion, race, age, national origin, or disability. We have an obligation to fight against invidious discrimination whatever the form. Our laws must prevent unfair discrimination against all individuals.

Justice and fair play are deeply embedded concepts in our society. Discrimination on the basis of an individual's sexual orientation is simply unfair. It also violates the traditional American respect for privacy and individual freedoms.

Extending the civil rights laws of this Nation to protect gay men and lesbian women from invidious discrimination because of their sexual orientation has broad support from numerous religious and other organizations. In the past, the National Council of Churches, the Lutheran Church in America, the United Church of Christ, the Episcopal Church USA, the United Presbyterian Church, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the National Federation of Priests' Councils, among others, have endorsed the inclusion of the term "sexual orientation" in existing civil rights laws. Major labor organizations, including the AFL-CIO, the American Federal of State, County, and Municipal Employees, and the Service Employees International Union have supported the policy of nondiscrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in employment, as have many major corporations which have adopted nondiscrimination policies. Public opinion polls have also shown that the majority of Americans support basic civil rights for gay individuals.

Despite the general view that discrimination against individuals because of sexual orientation is wrong, there is little question that gay Americans repeatedly face discrimination, hostility, and prejudice in many communities throughout the Nation. This legislation is needed to bring an end to that discrimination, to provide a clear remedy to redress violations of individual rights, and to make it clear that this type of discrimination is wrong and unlawful.

Mr. President, this legislation would not establish any special treatment or rights. It would simply extend to gay men and lesbian women basic protections against invidious discrimination because of their sexual orientation.

Mr. President, the time is long past due for this fundamental concept of fairness to be embedded in our civil rights laws. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 48. A bill to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide protection for employees of the airlines and to promote air safety; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AVIATION SAFETY PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill entitled the Aviation Safety Protection Act of 1989. This bill protects any airline employee who is fired or reprimanded by his or her employer as a result of reporting to the FAA information relating to air safety. Similar legislation was introduced and passed by the House in the 100th Congress, however no action was taken on the measure in the Senate.

Under current law, an air carrier employee is not protected when he relays information to the FAA regarding the existence of a safety violation and finds himself fired by his employer as a result of that action. The only recourse that may be available to him is a grievance process provided by his union contract. However, the backlog of these cases can be substantial and moving a complaint through the process may take as long as 1 to 2 years; meanwhile the employee is out of work. Furthermore, since a significant sector of the aviation industry is nonunionized even this recourse is unavailable to many employees.

Federal employees currently enjoy whistleblower protection under the Civil Service Reform Act, and have since 1978. Whistleblower protection has been provided for employees in a number of other industries including nuclear powerplant workers, miners, truckers, and employees of defense contractors, to name a few. The same safety concerns that prompted us to take action in those industries also are present in the case of airline employees.

Mr. President, there is widespread concern that, in the deregulated market that exists today, competitive forces have eroded the level of safety at which the airlines operate. Airlines today are under tremendous pressure to keep their planes flying. This can lead to the overlooking of potential safety hazards or violations. In an effort to prevent that, the FAA has recently begun to crack down on such safety violators by imposing fines. For example, in 1986, Pan Am was fined a total of $1.95 million for safety infractions and Eastern was fined $49.5 million; in 1988, Continental was fined $1 million.

The FAA however, does not have the resources necessary to investigate and monitor today's tremendous volume of air traffic. The assistance and information provided by those who operate, service and maintain these aircraft on a daily basis is critical to ensuring that an adequate margin of safety is maintained.

The safety of the flying public may be jeopardized if aviation employees are discouraged from reporting safety violations due to a real or perceived threat of retaliation by their employer. Clearly, these employees must be encouraged to come forward and report safety violations if and where they exist. This legislation would do just that by providing protection for employees so that they do not have to place their jobs at risk when they report safety information.

I believe there is a definite need for this legislation. In hearings held last year by the House Subcommittee on Aviation, testimony was given by an array of witnesses who had personally been subjected to some form of retaliation or discipline as a result of speaking out about safety. For example, Capt. John Knudson, a pilot with Eastern Airlines for 22 years, testified that he was grounded for a period of 5 days as a result of refusing an aircraft that he felt was not safe to fly. Similarly, Ms. Star Hesse, a flight attendant with Pan Am for 21 years, testified before the subcommittee that she was suspended for 30 days as a result of contacting the FAA regarding a coworker who had been on duty for an excessively long period of time. Under FAA regulations a flight attendant has an obligation to remove herself from the flight status when she feels too fatigued to carry out her flight responsibilities. Although permission had been requested from the airline that this particular coworker be allowed to cancel, the airline had refused the request resulting in an on-duty period in excess of 19 hours. Ms. Hesse was notified by the carrier that similar action by her in the future could result in additional discipline, including termination.

Mr. President, I do not believe such retaliatory action by air carriers is either commonplace or conducted by all the airlines. But I do believe that a problem exists and the problem warrants our attention and response.

Under this bill, the Department of Labor would hear and decide all such complaints of employer retaliation. The Department of Labor already has jurisdiction over whistleblower cases in the nuclear industry, for truckers and for hazardous waste workers, and I believe it makes the most sense to have one agency responsible for all such cases. Furthermore, since a petition filed under a whistleblower statute is essentially a labor-management dispute, the Labor Department is the agency with the appropriate expertise.

Employees covered under this bill would include all employees of an airline. Since the purpose of the bill is to promote air safety, coverage provided by the legislation should be as broad as possible. Although certain employees such as pilots, mechanics, stewards, and stewardesses are most likely to have access to safety information, it is very possible that a baggage handler or ticket agent might be privy to certain safety information and they also, under the same rationale, should be protected.

In cases where a claim is brought to the Labor Department in bad faith by an employee for purposes of harrassing an employer, the bill provides that the employer may be awarded attorneys' fees for the cost of his defense, but the fees are not to exceed $5,000. I believe this provision will serve as a strong deterrent to anyone thinking of bringing a bad faith or frivolous claim.

Under the bill, an employee is not required to contact his employer first before he contacts the FAA regarding the existence of a safety violation. Although initial contact with the employer should be encouraged to allow the employer an opportunity to correct the situation, there may be situations where, for whatever reason, an employee is reluctant to do so. Accordingly, he may go directly to the FAA.

Finally, in instances where it is found that an employee has been wrongfully dismissed or punished, the Secretary of Labor can order the employee's reinstatement along with back pay, compensatory damages and expenses incurred.

Mr. President, I believe this is an issue whose time has come and if we are serious about doing everything we can to enhance the safety of our skies then our next logical step is to ensure that those with critical safety information do not hesitate to come forward.

I ask that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 48

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Aviation Safety Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Title XI of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1501-1519) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1119. PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES.

"(a) DISCRIMINATION AGAINST AIRLINE EMPLOYEES.—No air carrier or contractor or subcontractor of an air carrier may discharge an employee or otherwise discriminate against an employee with respect to compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because the employee (or any person acting pursuant to a request of the employee)—

"(1) provided, caused to be provided, or is about to provide or cause to be provided to the Federal Government information relating to air safety under this Act or any other law of the United States;

"(2) has filed, caused to be filed, or is about to file or cause to be filed a proceeding relating to air carrier safety under this Act or any other law of the United States;

"(3) testified or is about to testify in such a proceeding;

"(4) assisted or participated or is about to assist or participate in such a proceeding; or

"(5) refused to perform a task which, if performed, would allow immediate operation of an aircraft if such employee has a reasonable basis for believing that such operation would likely result in serious injury to himself or the public and if such employee promptly notifies the Federal Aviation Administration of such refusal and the reasons therefor.

"(b) DEPARTMENT OF LABOR COMPLAINT PROCEDURE.—

"(1) FILING AND NOTIFICATION.—A person who believes that he has been discharged or otherwise discriminated against by a person in violation of subsection (a) may, within 180 days after such violation occurs, file (or have any person file on his behalf) a complaint with the Secretary of Labor alleging such discharge or discrimination. Upon receipt of such a complaint, the Secretary of Labor shall notify the person named in the complaint and the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration of the filing of the complaint, of the allegations contained in the complaint, of the substance of evidence supporting the complaint, and of the opportunities which will be afforded to such person under paragraph (2).

"(2) INVESTIGATION; PRELIMINARY ORDER.—Within 60 days of receipt of a complaint filed under paragraph (1) and after affording the person named in the complaint of an opportunity to submit to the Secretary of Labor a written response to the complaint and an opportunity to meet with a representative of the Secretary to present statements from witnesses, the Secretary of Labor shall conduct an investigation and determine whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the complaint has merit and notify the complainant and the person alleged to have committed a violation of subsection (a) of the Secretary's findings. If the Secretary of Labor concludes that there is a reasonable cause to believe that a violation of subsection (a) has occurred, the Secretary shall accompany the Secretary's findings with a preliminary order providing the relief prescribed by paragraph (3)(B). Within 30 days after notification of findings under this paragraph, either the person alleged to have committed the violation or the complainant may file objections to the findings or preliminary order, or both, and request a hearing on the record. The filing of such objections shall not operate to stay any reinstatement remedy contained in the preliminary order. Such hearings shall be conducted expeditiously. If a hearing is not requested within such 30-day period, the preliminary order shall be deemed a final order which is not subject to judicial review.

"(3) FINAL ORDER.—

"(A) DEADLINE FOR ISSUANCE; SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS.—Within 120 days after conclusion of a hearing under paragraph (2), the Secretary of Labor shall issue a final order providing the relief prescribed by this paragraph or denying the complaint. At any time before issuance of a final order, a proceeding under this subsection may be terminated at any time on the basis of a settlement agreement entered into by the Secretary of Labor, the complainant, and the person alleged to have committed the violation.

"(B) REMEDY.—If, in response to a complaint filed under paragraph (1), the Secretary of Labor determines that a violation of subsection (a) has occurred, the Secretary of Labor shall order the person who committed such violation to (i) take affirmative action to abate the violation, (ii) reinstate the complainant to his former position together with the compensation (including back pay), terms, conditions, and privileges associated with his employment, and (iii) provide compensatory damages to the complainant. If such an order is issued under this paragraph, the Secretary of Labor, at the request of the complainant, shall assess against the person against whom the order is issued a sum equal to the aggregate amount of all costs and expenses (including attorneys' and expert witness fees) reasonably incurred, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, by the complainant for, or in connection with, the bringing of the complaint upon which the order was issued.

"(C) FRIVOLOUS COMPLAINTS.—If the Secretary of Labor finds that a complaint under paragraph (1) is frivolous or has been brought in bad faith, the Secretary of Labor may award to the prevailing employer a reasonable attorney's fee not exceeding $5,000.

"(4) REVIEW.—

"(A) APPEAL TO COURT OF APPEALS.—Any person adversely affected or aggrieved by an order issued under paragraph (3) may obtain review of the order in the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the violation, with respect to which the order was issued, allegedly occurred or the circuit in which the complainant resided on the date of such violation. The petition for review must be filed within 60 days from the issuance of the order of the Secretary of Labor. Review shall conform to chapter 7 of title 5 of the United States Code. The commencement of proceedings under this subparagraph shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order.

"(B) LIMITATION ON COLLATERAL ATTACK.—An order of the Secretary of Labor with respect to which review could have been obtained under subparagraph (A) shall not be subject to judicial review in any criminal or other civil proceeding.

"(5) ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER BY SECRETARY OF LABOR.—Whenever a person has failed to comply with an order issued under paragraph (3), the Secretary of Labor may file a civil action in the United States district court for the district in which the violation was found to occur to enforce such order. In actions brought under this paragraph, the district courts shall have jurisdiction to grant all appropriate relief including, but not limited to, injunctive relief and compensatory damages.

"(6) ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER BY PARTIES.—

"(A) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—A person on whose behalf an order was issued under paragraph (3) may commence a civil action against the person to whom such order was issued to require compliance with such order. The appropriate United States district court shall have jurisdiction, without regard to the amount in controversy or the citizenship of the parties, to enforce such order.

"(B) ATTORNEY FEES.—The court, in issuing any final order under this paragraph, may award costs of litigation (including reasonable attorney and expert witness fees) to any party whenever the court determines such award is appropriate.

"(c) MANDAMUS.—Any nondiscretionary duty imposed by this section shall be enforceable in a mandamus proceeding brought under section 1361 of title 28, United States Code.

"(d) NONAPPLICABILITY TO DELIBERATE VIOLATIONS.—Subsection (a) of this section shall not apply with respect to an employee of an air carrier who, acting without direction from such air carrier (or such air carrier's agent), deliberately causes a violation of any requirement relating to air carrier safety under this Act or any other law of the United States.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—That portion of the table of contents contained in section 1 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 relating to title XI of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Sec. 1119. Protection of Employees.

"(a) Discrimination against employees.

"(b) Department of Labor complaint procedure.

"(c) Mandamus.

"(d) Nonapplicability to deliberate violations.".

SEC. 3. CIVIL PENALTY.

Section 901(a)(1)(A) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1471(a)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting "or 1119(a)" after "or 1115(e)(2)(B)".

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 49. A bill to prohibit the exploration for and extraction of oil and gas in certain areas off the coast of California, and various other purposes; to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works.

THE CALIFORNIA OCEAN SANCTUARY ACT OF 1989

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing the California Ocean Sanctuary Act of 1989 to give long-range protection to California's coastal environment. The bill, which is identical to S. 884 which I sponsored in the 100th Congress, will protect and preserve the environmentally sensitive areas off the coast of California from the risks of damage associated with oil and gas drilling and exploration, and the dumping or burning of hazardous waste.

The coast is one of California's most precious resources and one of the most scenic shorelines in the world. Its beaches attract millions of visitors each year. And its vital coastal waters host numerous and important commercial fisheries.

But this spectacular coastline is threatened by the Reagan administration's 5-year OCS lease plan which calls for oil and gas development off virtually the entire California coastline over the next 2½ years.

Lease sale 91 off northern California, originally scheduled for February 1989 but postponed by administrative action and congressional mandate, could take place as early as October 1989.

Lease sale 95 off southern California is scheduled for January 1990.

And lease sale 119 off central California is scheduled for March 1991.

These sales could have devastating environmental and economic impacts on the coast—impacts acknowledged by the Department of the Interior itself. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in its comments on lease sale 91 stated that "current technology cannot effectively clean up a spill" and that "offshore development in northern California and the proposed tanker traffic is a high risk operation in rough seas, in a geologically unstable area, with potentially devastating impacts on coastal resources."

Even in the absence of a major spill, fishing would be threatened by platforms and support equipment which compete for space and can damage nets and disperse schools of fish. Discharges of drilling muds and cuttings add heavy metals and other toxics to the food chain which bioaccumulate in fish. Visual and scenic resources would be destroyed by derricks and platforms and onshore facilities to support them. Air quality would be degraded by offshore emissions which blow pollutants to onshore areas already in violation of Federal standards.

In California, the State government—with the full support of county and local officials and the people who live in these areas, as well as the millions of tourists who come to enjoy the incredible beauty of the coast—has chosen to preserve portions of its coastal zone for purposes inconsistent with oil and gas leasing while other areas, both off and onshore, are used for energy production. This is a sensible, balanced, and rational way to allocate resources.

Congress required—in the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act—a careful balance between the economic and environmental risks and the resource recovery benefits of offshore energy development, together with a process of accommodation and consistency between Federal activities and the State interests. But for the past 8 years, the administration in its zealous offshore activities has consistently overridden any attempt to preserve the irreplacable resources of the coastal environment.

While I am encouraged by the statement made by President Bush during the campaign that he would defer lease sale 91, that simply is not enough. It is imperative that all the proposed California lease sales be canceled or the 5-year plan withdrawn. We need permanent protection for California's scenically stunning and environmentally sensitive marine environment.

The California Ocean Sanctuary Act which I am introducing today will provide that protection. It will establish as an ocean sanctuary those California coastal areas that possess unique historical, ecological, educational, recreational, and research values.

Specifically, the bill will keep free from oil and gas exploration and development those environmentally sensitive areas previously covered by the congressional moratorium. It will protect the five geological basins north of Morro Bay and preserve the magnificent scenic vistas off the Mendocino headlands, the Point Reyes National Seashore, Bodego Bay, the Golden Gate National Recreational Area, Farallon Islands, Santa Cruz beach, Monterey Bay, Big Sur and San Simeon. It will protect the northern and central California waters which abut valuable wetland systems, provide important marine mammal breeding grounds, and contain the greatest diversity of seals and sea lions anywhere in the world.

The legislation will also give statutory protection to the Santa Barbara Channel Ecological Preserve and Buffer Zone, the Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary, Santa Monica Bay, and waters offshore San Diego and Orange Counties. Southern California's waters contain 75 percent of the State's coastal recreation, massive bird populations and the migratory route of the entire California grey whale population.

The bill also will protect the entire California coastal area, from the Mexican border to the Oregon border and out to 200 miles off State waters in this region, from other potential sources of strain, including the dumping and incineration of toxic chemicals.

Recreational and commercial fishing, however, would be permitted in the areas covered by the legislation.

Mr. President, the coast of California is a place of rare beauty and a national treasure. We must not sacrifice it for limited and finite energy supplies.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 49

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the California Ocean Sanctuary Act of 1989.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that——

(a) the California coast possesses unique historical, ecological, educational, recreational, and research values which are appropriate for protection under Federal law; and

(b) there is an existing and mounting threat to this sensitive national treasure in the form of burning and dumping of toxic and hazardous wastes and the exploration for and extraction of fossil fuels, which could result in irreparable damage to this coastal resource.

SEC. 3. DESIGNATION.

The area in this Act described in section 6 is designated as the California Ocean Sanctuary (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Sanctuary").

SEC. 5. RESTRICTIONS.

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, no Federal agency shall issue a lease, permit, or license—

(1) for ocean incineration or dumping of toxic or hazardous waste within the Sanctuary; or

(2) for on onshore facility which exists to facilitate ocean incineration or ocean dumping of toxic or hazardous waste within the Sanctuary.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, a vessel may not travel within the Sanctuary while en route to or from ocean incineration or ocean dumping of toxic or hazardous waste.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, no Federal agency shall issue any lease, permit, or license for the exploration for or extraction of fossil fuels on or from submerged lands located in the following areas within the Sanctuary:

(1) an area within the Department of the Interior Central and Northern California Planning Area which lies north of the line between the row of blocks numbered N816 and the row of blocks numbered N817 of the Universal Transverse Mercator Grid System;

(2) an area of the Department of the Interior Southern California Planning Area bounded by the following line on the California (Lambert) Plane Coordinate System: From the point of intersection of the international boundary line between the United States and Mexico and the seaward boundary of the California State Tidelands west along said international boundary line to the point of intersection with the line between the row of blocks numbered 27 west; thence north to the northest corner of block 20 north, 28 west; thence northwest to the southwest corner of block 29 north, 35 west; thence north along the line between the row of blocks numbered 36 west and the row of blocks numbered 35 west to its intersection with the seaward boundary of the California State Tidelands; thence easterly along the seaward boundary of the California State Tidelands to the point of beginning;

(3) a portion of the Department of the Interior Southern California Planning Area which lies both: (a) east of the line between the row of blocks numbered 52 west, and (b) north of the line between the row of blocks numbered 34 north and the row of blocks numbered 35 north, on the California (Lambert) Plane Coordinate System;

(4) the boundaries of the Channel Island National Marine Sanctuary, as defined by title 15, part 935.3 of the Code of Federal Regulations; and

(5) the boundaries of the Santa Barbara Channel Ecological Preserve and Buffer Zone, as defined by the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management Public Land Order numbered 4587 (vol. 34, page 5655 Federal Register March 26, 1969).

SEC. 5. PERMITTED ACTIVITIES

(a) This Act shall not prohibit commercial or recreational fishing or other harvesting of ocean life in the Sanctuary.

(b) This Act shall not prohibit exploration for or extraction of fossil fuels on or from submerged lands within the Sanctuary under the terms of a lease, permit, or license which permits such exploration or extraction.

(c)(1) This Act shall not prohibit oil and gas leasing within the Sanctuary, except in those areas identified in section 4(c) of this Act.

(2) Leasing and all postlease activities permitted under this section shall be carried out in accordance with the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act and other applicable Federal, State and local law.

(3) Leasing and all postlease activities permitted under this section shall be carried out in a manner so as to minimize the environmental, economic, and social impacts of activities related to such leasing.

SEC. 6. DESCRIPTION OF AREA WITHIN SANCTUARY.

(a) The area referred to in section 3 is the area of the Outer Continental Shelf extending 200 miles seaward from the seaward boundary of California (as approved and confirmed by section 4 of the Submerged Lands Act (67 Stat. 31; 43 U.S.C. 1312)).

(b) For purposes of this Act, the term "Outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning given such term in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331(a)).

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 50. A bill to amend the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act to modify the application of such Acts to international commerce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FOREIGN TRADE ANTITRUST IMPROVEMENTS

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am introducing today the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1989 which calls for a codification of the jurisdictional principle of "reasonableness" for private antitrust suits.

This bill is long overdue and urgently needed. In the 99th Congress, the same bill was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee. The action by the Judiciary Committee reflected the need for the legislation then. There is an even stronger need for it today.

The extraterritorial application of U.S. antitrust laws has had a significant adverse impact on the climate for international trade and investment by U.S. firms. U.S. companies are currently caught between a rock and a hard place. They face the demands of domestic antitrust laws and the opposing pressure of the international marketplace for cooperative agreements. In addition, they suffer the retaliation and discrimination arising from resentment at the extraterritorial application of our antitrust laws. U.S. firms have been regarded as less desirable partners in foreign ventures and foreign markets because of their antitrust baggage.

There is a growing consensus that something needs to be done, both to safeguard our foreign relations interests and to increase the competitiveness of U.S. business abroad. Thomas M. Jorde, professor of law at the University of California, Berkeley (Wall Street Journal article, Jan. 18, 1989), noting that Japan and the European community have taken steps to ensure that their antitrust laws do not stand in the way of cooperative arrangements designed to commercialize technological innovation, stated that "the U.S. has not yet taken such steps and as a result, U.S. firms are at a disadvantage." Professor Jorde believes that "the time has come for bipartisan, forward-looking action that will place American firms on an antitrust footing more equal to that experienced by their competitors". Now is the time for those of us in Congress to act.

The United States is now the world's largest debtor nation. We can ill afford to continue to hamper our own international competitiveness through unreasonable application of our antitrust laws. This bill will provide for more harmonious legal rules for international trade, and put U.S. business on more equal footing in international trade and commerce. We must seek to harmonize our policies and laws with those of our trading partners if we are to successfully compete for world markets. I urge my colleagues to expeditiously address this matter in this Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill along with a more detailed explanation of the need for this legislation and a section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 50

FOREIGN TRADE ANTITRUST IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1989".

SEC. 102. Section 7 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 61) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "This Act"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Whenever a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under this section is made, the court shall, except for good cause shown, hear and determine such motion, after such discovery or other proceedings directly related to the motion, as the court deems appropriate, before conducting or permitting the parties to conduct any further proceedings in the action.".

SEC. 103. The Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12 et seq.) is amended by adding after section 20 the following new section:

"SEC. 21. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of the antitrust laws or any provision of any State laws similar to the antitrust laws, in any action brought by any person or State under the antitrust laws or similar State laws which involves trade or commerce with a foreign nation, the court shall enter a judgment dismissing the action as to all parties whenever it determines that the exercise of jurisdiction would be unreasonable primarily on the basis of the following factors—

"(1) the relative significance, to the violation alleged, of conduct within the United States as compared to conduct abroad;

"(2) the nationality of the persons involved in or affected by the conduct;

"(3) the presence or absence of a purpose to affect United States consumers or competitors;

"(4) the relative significance and foreseeability of the effects of the conduct on the United States as compared with the effects abroad;

"(5) the existence of reasonable expectations that would be furthered or defeated by the action; and

"(6) the degree of conflict with foreign law or articulated foreign economic policies; except that nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the court to consider the effect on the foreign political relations of the United States of any action sought to be dismissed.

"(b) Whenever a motion to dismiss on the ground that the exercise of jurisdiction would be unreasonable under this section is made, the court shall, except for good cause shown, hear and determine such motion after such discovery or other proceedings directly related to the motion, as the court deems appropriate, before conducting or permitting the parties to conduct any further proceedings in the action.".

SEC. 104. Section 12 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 22) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "That any suit"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The doctrine of forum non conveniens shall be applicable in any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws that involves trade or commerce with a foreign nation, and nothing contained in this section or any other venue provision applicable to such suits, actions, or proceedings shall be construed to prevent dismissal of such a suit, action, or proceeding on the grounds of forum non conveniens.".

S. 50—FOREIGN TRADE ANTITRUST IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 1989

I. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The application of United States antitrust law to conduct outside United States territory has been a continuing source of controversy in the international community. While there appears to be increasing international acceptance of the U.S. position that the effects within national territory of certain extraterritorial actions may warrant taking jurisdiction over them, the proper scope of such extraterritorial jurisdiction remains a sensitive and contentious issue. In an interdependent international economy where the economic well-being and national security of the United States require good relations with our allies and trading partners, any claim of extraterritorial jurisdiction thus must be asserted with care.

Private foreign commerce antitrust cases have been an especially troublesome area of extraterritorial jurisdiction. Many foreign nations differ with our attitude toward coordinated behavior among competitors, particularly in market sectors such as sea and air transportation. Foreign nations also view private enforcement of penal laws like the antitrust laws with great suspicion. This suspicion is exacerbated by the mandatory treble damages available under Clayton Act § 4 and by what is perceived abroad as virtually limitless and unduly burdensome discovery in U.S. antitrust cases.

The enactment of Section 7 of the Sherman Act in the 1982 Foreign Trade Improvements Act was a first step toward meeting international concerns about foreign commerce antitrust cases. By limiting U.S. jurisdictional claims to conduct which has a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable impact on our domestic commerce, import commerce or export opportunities, the Congress indicated that the United States was not attempting to impose an antitrust code of conduct on other nations but only to safeguard its own substantial interests.

The 1982 Act, however, did not seek to resolve the further jurisdictional question of how the U.S interest in regulating international conduct under the antitrust laws should be weighed against the legitimate interest of foreign sovereigns who might be affected by the same conduct but assess it under a different regulatory standard. (See H.R. Rep. No. 686, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 13 (1982).) The courts, the Department of Justice in its prosecutorial capacity and legal scholars, however, have recognized the need to determine when the assertion of U.S. antitrust jurisdiction within the outer boundary established by the 1982 Act would be unreasonable in light of foreign interests. (See, e.g., Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, 549 F.2d 597 (9th Cir. 1976); Mannington Mills, Inc. v. Congoleum Corp., 395 F.2d 1287, 1297-98 (3d Cir. 1979); Restatement of Foreign Relations Law 2d § 40; Restatement of Foreign Relations Law (Revised) § 403); but see Laker Airways, Ltd. v. Sabena, 731 F.2d.909 (D.C. Cir. 1984). There appears to be an emerging consensus that foreign commerce antitrust jurisdiction should not be asserted when an assessment of all relevant competing interests shows a U.S. claim to jurisdiction to be unreasonable. The practice of other states supports this principle. See Reporters Note 1 to § 403 Restatement Foreign Relations Law (Revised). However, not all courts have been persuaded that this analysis should be made (See, Laker Airways v. Sabena) and there is substantial divergence in the relevant interest factors set out in various cases and publications.[1]

In these circumstances, testimony in the 99th Congress before the Judiciary Committee by Judge Sofaer, the State Department's Legal Adviser, demonstrated that the international controversy and friction over the extraterritorial application of U.S. antitrust law had not been eliminated. The Legal Adviser first noted that foreign nations believe that conduct within the boundaries of Sherman Act § 7 may in many instances affect their interests more substantially than our own and should be regulated under their laws and policies. In this connection, he also noted that while the Department of Justice has weighed foreign interests in its enforcement program, private plaintiffs have no reason to be sensitive to them. Second, he pointed out that foreign nations believe that the risk of U.S. antitrust liability may impede the willingness of businessmen to cooperate on matters of foreign local interest in the manner desired by foreign authorities. Third, he noted that foreign nations still view antitrust discovery as intrusive, burdensome and a weapon to coerce unwarranted settlements. Fourth, he pointed out that foreign governments consider treble damages to be penal and inappropriate in private actions involving conduct in which they have significant interests.

Other witnesses appearing before the Judiciary Committee, including representatives of the Department of Justice and the American Bar Association, confirmed that the 1982 Act had not fully resolved the extraterritorial jurisdiction issue. They pointed out that a number of foreign nations had enacted "blocking" statutes to restrict the production of documents and furnishing of evidence for use in U.S. antitrust investigations or litigated cases. Some countries, including the United Kingdom, have also enacted "clawback" legislation to permit their nationals to recover the trebled portion of any antitrust judgment. Such foreign actions reflect continuing international concern with private foreign commerce antitrust cases and threaten to undermine the effective and fair administration of the antitrust laws in cases where they properly should apply to foreign defendants. Foreign governments confronted by what they may consider a generally unyielding U.S. posture on recognizing their jurisdictional interests may invoke their blocking statutes to protect their nationals without even considering whether there is a predominant U.S. interest in the conduct at issue.

The Judiciary Committee also heard testimony from representatives of the American business community who added their own concerns to the foreign relations and antitrust enforcement concerns expressed by the government and professional association witnesses. Because extraterritorial conduct in the foreign commerce of the United States is inevitably in the commerce and jurisdictional reach of at least one other nation, extraterritorial antitrust jurisdiction poses difficult problems for American businessmen operating abroad and seeking to remain competitive in international markets. As I previously explained:

"The U.S. corporation doing business abroad must also have some reassurance that it will not become caught in between sometimes inconsistent regulatory responsibilities of governments. Even if a foreign government does not affirmatively require a U.S. corporation to do business in a way that could pose antitrust problems, the foreign government may well condone and encourage cooperative practices among competitors that the U.S. corporation ignores at its own business peril in the foreign market." (131 Cong. Rec. S1160 (daily ed. February 6, 1985).)

Representatives of the business community also pointed to three other problems arising from foreign hostility to extraterritorial antitrust actions. First, they noted that the availability of blocking statutes, "clawbacks" and diplomatic support to foreign defendants tends to throw a disproportionate burden on U.S. defendants in private antitrust litigation. U.S. defendants became the prime focus of discovery and the prime target for levies of judgment regardless of their importance to or depth of involvement in the conduct at issue.

Second, they testified that foreign hostility to U.S. antitrust jurisdiction may foster corresponding hostility to overseas affiliates of U.S. companies and adversely impact the general business climate which American firms encounter abroad. Foreign firms, for example, may simply not invite U.S. companies to participate in critical cooperative activities like standard setting for foreign markets for fear that the involvement of U.S. nationals will bring with it the risk of private antitrust litigation.

Third, the business community representatives pointed out that foreign regulatory entities increasingly were asserting extraterritorial jurisdiction over U.S. business conduct based on its effects in foreign nations. While such foreign actions could have a disruptive effect on conduct in the U.S. like new product introductions, foreign regulators were unlikely to exercise jurisdictional restraint unless they perceived reciprocal restraint on the U.S. side.

S. 50 is intended to meet these problems by codifying a jurisdictional rule of reason standard for foreign commerce antitrust cases. The centerpiece of the bill is its express declaration that private foreign commerce antitrust cases shall be dismissed as to all parties when the exercise of U.S. antitrust jurisdiction would be unreasonable. (Sec. 103). That declaration is supplemented by six carefully structured primary factors which, while not exclusive, provide an orderly and comprehensive framework for the weighing of U.S. and foreign interests in particular extraterritorial conduct. To avoid embroiling this jurisdictional rule of reason analysis in matters more appropriately determined by the Executive branch, consideration of the effect of jurisdiction on U.S. foreign political relations is not authorized in this analysis.

S. 50 recognizes that the legitimate regulatory interests of foreign governments in conduct outside the United States may sometimes outweigh our own interests despite the arguable existence of effects sufficient to meet the threshold standard of Sherman Act S. 7. This Congressional declaration should provide assurance to our allies and trading partners that the United States respects their sovereignty as we expect our own to be respected. I believe that foreign nations should and will respond to this action by carefully reviewing the use of their blocking statutes in cases where their interests have been fairly evaluated under the standards of S. 50.

The development of case law under the structured standards of the S. 50 jurisdictional rule of reason should increase the predictability of governing law in international transactions and help to resolve situations which could generate substantial international relations and business difficulties. Some examples of situations in which S. 50 would be particularly useful are:

[1] As set out in the Restatement of Foreign Relations Law Revised 403(2) the relevant factor analysis is:

(2) Whether the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable or unreasonable is judged by evaluating all the relevant factors, including, where appropriate,

(a) the extent to which the activity (i) takes place within the regulating state, or (ii) has substantial, direct, and foreseeable effect upon or in regulating state;

(b) the connections, such as nationality, residence, or economic activity, between the regulating state and the persons principally responsible for the activity to be regulated, or between that state and those whom the law or regulation is designed to protect;

(c) the character of the activity to be regulated, the importance of regulation to the regulating state, the extent to which other states regulate such activities, and the degree to which the desirability of such regulation is generally accepted;

(d) the existence of justified expectations that might be protected or hurt by the regulation in question;

(e) the importance of the regulation in question to the international political, legal or economic system;

(f) the extent to which such regulation is consistent with the traditions of the international system;

(g) the extent to which another state may have an interest in regulating the activity; and

(h) the likelihood of conflict with regulation by other states.

A foreign government owned airport or port facility faced with congestion and environmental problems may wish them to be resolved by scheduling agreements among carriers and foreign carriers serving the United States. Service restrictions in the agreements may have substantial effects on movements to and from the U.S. and also may be claimed to affect the cost of U.S. international passenger service and cargo movement. Application of U.S. Antitrust law to prohibit such agreement, however, would clearly regulate: extraterritorial conduct; conduct largely involving and affecting foreign nationals; conduct designed to resolve a local problem with incidental worldwide effects; and conduct consistent with the articulated economic policy of the foreign government.

A foreign government may articulate to manufacturers including subsidiaries of U.S. companies and exporters from the U.S. its policy interest in voluntary standardization of goods to be sold in its local market. Product standards may affect the export potential of other U.S. companies with an interest in the foreign market. Application of U.S. antitrust law to prohibit such agreement, however, would regulate: extraterritorial conduct; conduct largely involving and affecting foreign nationals; conduct designed to regulate a foreign market with incidental effects on sellers into that market; and conduct consistent with foreign economic policy.

A foreign government which has accorded natural resource concessions to a number of companies, including U.S. subsidiaries, may articulate its policy interest in an agreement limiting production for conservation reasons and to further its own economic development plan. Production limitations may affect world prices for the resource, including U.S. import prices. Application of U.S. antitrust law to prohibit such agreement, however, would regulate: extraterritorial conduct; conduct largely involving and affecting foreign nationals; conduct designed to regulate the exploitation of resources in a foreign nation; and conduct conforming to an articulated foreign economic policy.

In all three of these cases, Section 103 of S. 50 would require a careful weighing of foreign and U.S. interests in the conduct at issue. Absent unusual circumstances, it is likely that the exercise of U.S. jurisdiction to regulate such matters as use of foreign airports or port facilities, standards for goods sold in foreign domestic markets or the exploitation of foreign natural resources would be found unreasonable. I believe that this result would serve the foreign relations interests of the United States and permit American business to take sensible steps to protect its competitive position in such matters as access to foreign facilities, foreign export markets and foreign resource concessions.

On the other hand, I want to make it very clear that not all extraterritorial conduct in which foreign governments claim an interest should be outside the reasonable exercise of United States antitrust jurisdiction. For example, if a group of foreign producers exporting to the United States agreed without foreign government objection to allocate U.S. distributors and to raise export prices, the predominant U.S. interest in protecting U.S. consumers and domestic business would, absent unusual circumstances, negate any claim that U.S. jurisdiction would be unreasonable. Foreign governments should understand that predominant U.S. interests will continue to be safeguarded under the antitrust laws, that foreign and U.S. businesses should conform their relevant extraterritorial conduct to U.S. antitrust standards, and that foreign governments should cooperate in U.S. antitrust enforcement where U.S. interests are predominant.

S. 50 also deals with the potential burdens of unnecessary discovery and motion practice in U.S. antitrust cases and the possibility that litigation cost may force unwarranted settlements. Section 102 of the bill requires priority consideration of jurisdictional motions to dismiss under Sherman Act § 7. Section 103(b) of the bill affords the same priority to motions under the new jurisdictional rule of reason. By foreclosing unrelated discovery and proceedings while these motions are pending, absent a judicial determination of good cause, S. 50 gives assurance that the necessary costs of merits discovery and proceedings will be borne only where jurisdiction properly lies in U.S. courts. In addition, Section 104 of S. 50 affirms the applicability of the doctrine of forum non conveniens to private foreign commerce antitrust cases thus limiting "forum shopping" by antitrust cases thus limiting "forum shopping" by antitrust plaintiffs and helping to minimize litigation burdens on parties and witnesses.

In summary, S. 50 makes no changes in substantive antitrust law. It is intended to reflect and harmonize what I believe are the better jurisdictional precedents and scholarly analyses on the application of United States antitrust law to predominately foreign conduct and the resolution of conflicting international regulatory interests. Enactment of S. 50 would help alleviate the legitimate concerns of our trading partners about jurisdictional overreach, enable U.S. businessmen to compete more fairly and vigorously in the international arena, and enhance antitrust enforcement in cases where U.S. jurisdiction is reasonable by helping dissuade foreign governments from blocking relevant discovery or frustrating enforcement of antitrust judgments against their nationals.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Title I

Section 101—Short title

The first section states the short title of the bill, the "Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1987." The title reflects the purpose of the legislation: to supplement the provisions of the 1982 Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (Pub. L. No. 97-290, §§ 401-3-03, 96 Stat. 1246) by harmonizing the international application of the United States antitrust laws with the legitimate interests of our trading partners.

Section 102—Threshold resolution of jurisdiction issues

Section 2 of the bill adds a new subsection (b) to Section 7 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 6a). Existing Section 7 sets the outer boundary of United States foreign commerce which has a "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect" on domestic or import commerce or on the export opportunities of a domestic person. New Section 7(b) would require the court in a foreign commerce antitrust case to hear and determine jurisdictional motions under existing Section 7 prior to conducting, or permitting the parties to conduct, any other proceedings in the action. New Section 7(b) is intended to effect an expeditious resolution of jurisdictional issues and to avoid internationally controversial and potentially burdensome discovery and merits proceedings in cases which should not be heard in United States courts. It thus provides that all discovery prior to disposition of a Section 7 motion generally will be limited to the jurisdictionally relevant facts set forth in the complaint and such additional jurisdictional facts as the defendant may assert. Section 7(b) permits the court to modify these limitations for good cause shown such as an emergency situation where jurisdictional and merits discovery are so intertwined that it would be burdensome to separate them. However, in light of the peculiar international sensitivities of foreign commerce antitrust cases, it is anticipated that this discretion will be used sparingly.

Section 103—Principle of jurisdictional reasonableness

Section 3 of the bill adds a new Section 21 comprised of two subsections to the Clayton Act. Subsection (a) codifies a jurisdictional rule of reason in private antitrust cases involving trade or commerce with foreign nations and specifies the primary factors to be considered by the court in deciding whether a particular exercise of foreign commerce antitrust jurisdiction would be unreasonable. Subsection (b) generally requires the court to hear and determine the merits of a motion to dismiss an action under subsection (a) prior to conducting, or allowing the parties to conduct, any other proceeding in the action.

Codification of the Jurisdictional Rule of Reason: New Section 21(a) requires the court in a private foreign commerce antitrust case, or any similar case brought under state law, to dismiss the action as to all parties whenever it determines that the exercise of jurisdiction would be "unreasonable" under the criteria of the new section. New Section 21(a) relates exclusively to subject matter jurisdiction and is not intended to affect the disposition of other issues such as the act of state doctrine or claims of sovereign compulsion which are outside the scope of the bill. For purposes of new Section 31(a), the term action is equivalent to claim upon which the relief can be granted so that each claim for relief is to be reviewed independently under the criteria of the new section.

The requirement of dismissal as to all parties is intended to avoid any discrimination between domestic and foreign corporations. The purpose of Section 21(a) is to determine whether the conduct at issue is more appropriately regulated under United States law or the law of a foreign nation. If United States law should not reasonably apply to the conduct at issue, neither domestic nor foreign corporations should be held to United States antitrust standards. If, on the other hand, United States law reasonably should apply, both domestic and foreign corporations should be subject to its command. This nondiscriminatory standard is particularly appropriate in antitrust conspiracy cases, which constitute the bulk of foreign commerce antitrust cases, where each co-conspirator is deemed responsible for the conduct of all other co-conspirators.

Primary Factors in Determining Jurisdictional Reasonableness: New Section 21(a) enumerates six factors which the court is required to consider in determining whether the exercise of jurisdiction in a particular case would be unreasonable. The listed factors are to be given primacy in Section 21(a) analysis but are not to be considered exclusive since unusual fact situations may bring other relevant considerations into play. There is no special significance or scheme of priorities in the order in which the factors are listed, and the weight to be given any factor in a specific action will vary with the particular circumstances. Taken together, however, the factors of Section 12(a) are intended to foster a comprehensive analysis of possible conflicts between U.S. interests in applying domestic antitrust laws to protect against harm from anticompetitive restraints and the legitimate interests of foreign governments in regulating their own economic affairs.

The first enumerated factor is "the relative significance, to the violation alleged, or conduct within the United States as compared to conduct abroad." The conduct that is relevant under this factor includes not only meetings and agreements, but also the whole range of economic activity that is involved in an alleged violation. This factor is not intended to give individuals or firms an opportunity to evade U.S. antitrust laws simply by moving some or all of their activities offshore. At the same time, this factor recognizes the sovereign interest in applying national legal standards to acts occurring within national territory.

The second enumerated factor is "the nationality of the persons involved or affected by the conduct." This factor recognizes the sovereign interest created by and the involvement of or the effect on citizens, whether or not they are resident. It would, for example, give added weight to foreign jurisdictional claims in a boycott case where the person allegedly boycotted, and many of the conspirators, were foreign nationals. Similarly, this factor would be significant in a merger case in which the merging parties and the relevant productive facilities are located abroad. This criterion is not intended, however, as a departure from the general principle that U.S. antitrust laws are applied in a nationality-blind way that neither favors nor dicriminates against parties of foreign nationality.

The third enumerated factor is "the presence or absence of a purpose to affect United States consumers or competitors." This factor expressly recognizes the legitimate U.S. interest in protecting U.S. consumers and competitors from intentional anticompetitive assaults and distinguishes such cases from incidental impacts on U.S. interests from predominately foreign conduct. In assessing this factor, the court should consider not only overt declarations of intention to affect U.S. markets, but also facts demonstrating that a substantial effect on U.S. markets were reasonably expected.

The fourth enumerated favor is "the relative significance and foreseeability of the effects of the conduct on the United States as compared with the effects abroad." This factor recognizes that both the anticipated and actual effects of the conduct at issue should be weighed in determining relative U.S. and foreign interests. Consideration by the courts of this factor will assist in identifying circumstances in which jurisdiction is appropriately asserted because of the significance of such effects on the U.S. economy. At the same time, it will weigh against the exercise of jurisdiction where actual or intended domestic effects are outweighed by those abroad and where regulation of the conduct at issue may be more appropriately exercised by other governments.

The fifth enumerated factor is "the existence of reasonable expectations that would be furthered or defeated by the action." This factor recognizes the significance of a reasonable prior determination by defendants and/or foreign governments that challenged conduct is compelled by or consistent with the public policies of a foreign sovereign with a strong interest in its effects. It also affirms the desirability of reasonable predictability regarding the rules applicable to international business transactions.

The sixth enumerated factor is "the degree of conflict with foreign law or articulated foreign economic policies." Under this criterion, the court is to consider the extent to which application of U.S. antitrust law to the challenged conduct would require action or inaction inconsistent with expressions of foreign government law or foreign economic policy as articulated to those involved. If the challenged conduct were also unlawful under foreign law, or if foreign law or articulated foreign economic policy were neutral with respect to the conduct, there likely would be little or no conflict of a kind that would weigh heavily against the assertion of U.S. antitrust jurisdiction. On the other hand, if the challenged conduct were affirmatively mandated or strongly encouraged by foreign law or expressed policy, or if application of U.S. antitrust laws would frustrate enforcement or implementation of such laws or policies, those facts would tend to militate against the exercise of U.S. jurisdiction.

Foreign Policy Considerations Precluded: The proviso to new Section 21(a) expressly excludes from this Act's provisions consideration by the court of "the effect on the foreign political relations of the United States of any action sought to be dismissed." This provision reflects fundamental constitutional principles of separation of powers and expressly confirms that such policy decisions are matters more appropriate for determination by the Executive Branch.

Procedural Primacy: New Section 21(b) generally requires the court to hear and determine the merits of a motion to dismiss under new section 21(a) prior to other proceedings in the action. This provision is intended to operate in the same manner as new Section 7(b) of the Sherman Act, as described above in the analysis of Section 2 of the bill.

Section 104—Forum non conveniens

Section 4 of the bill adds a new subsection (b) to Section 12 of the Clayton Act, which provides venue in antitrust cases in any district which a corporate defendant inhabits, or in which it may be found or transacts business. New Section 12(b) affirms the applicability of the doctrine of forum non conveniens in antitrust cases involving trade or commerce with foreign nations. This provision makes clear to the courts that they are not foreclosed from concluding, in appropriate cases, that a foreign court would be a preferable forum for litigating the claims asserted in a U.S. antitrust case. The applicable legal standards for such analysis are set out in the Supreme Court's 1981 decision in Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. GLENN, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. KERRY):

S. 51. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide that the combined earnings of a husband and wife during the period of their marriage shall be divided equally and shared between them for benefit purposes, so as to recognize the economic contribution of each spouse to the marriage and ensure that each spouse will have Social Security protection in his or her own right; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY EQUITY ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce S. 51, the proposed Social Security Equity Act of 1989, which is identical to legislation I introduced in the past four Congresses—S. 3 in the 98th, 99th and 100th Congresses, and S. 3034 in the 97th Congress. This measure would incorporate the concept of "earnings sharing" into the Social Security system. I am joined in sponsoring this legislation by the distinguished Senators form Ohio, Mr. GLENN and Mr. METZENBAUM and the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KERRY.

S. 51 is similar to earnings sharing legislation which has been introduced in the House in past Congresses by Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR, who has served as the Chair of that body's Select Committee on Aging's Task Force on Social Security and Women. Representative OAKAR has been a tremendous leader in the effort to reform the Social Security system in a manner that would adequately and equitably deal with the needs of older women. The provisions of the earnings sharing legislation which Representative OAKAR and I introduced in past Congresses have also been included in the Economic Equity Act—an omnibus measure introduced each Congress which includes a number of important measures relating to economic equity for women.

Mr. President, the supporters of this proposal fully recognize the complexities of making this kind of fundamental change in the way Social Security records are maintained and benefits are calculated and recognize the length of time that implementation of these changes would take. The size of the task means that we must start soon to meet the challenge ahead.

Mr. President, the basis concept underlying earnings sharing is relatively simple: marriage for Social Security purposes should be and would be regarded as a partnership. In order to compute benefits, all of the earnings of a married couple would be combined and divided equally between the spouses upon retirement or divorce. Each member of the couple would then have established for him or her an individual Social Security account. Earnings acquired before or after a marriage would go into this individual account along with whatever share each member acquired during marriage.

Mr. President, to understand the need for reform, it is necessary to understand the conditions of poverty and dependency which face millions of older women in our society and how the present system of determining Social Security benefits contributes to these and other problems.

OLD AGE AND POVERTY

Poverty in this country among elderly individuals is principally a problem afflicting women. Although women constituted about 60 percent of the aged population in 1986, they accounted for more than 71 percent of the elderly poor. In 1986, more than 3.8 million older women had incomes below the poverty line. The poverty rate of elderly women was 20 percent in 1986, compared to the 11-percent rate for older men. For unmarried elderly women—the poverty rate was 32 percent.

ELDERLY WOMEN LIKELY TO BE DEPENDENT ON SOCIAL SECURITY

There are a number of factors which contribute to this disparity. First, Mr. President, women are far more likely than men to be almost totally dependent upon Social Security for income in their old age. Since Social Security was never intended to meet all of the financial needs of a retiree, Social Security alone seldom provides more than a marginal standard of income.

According to the Department of Health and Human Services, in 1986, only 26 percent of older women had any income from private pensions and/or annuities, and only 16 percent of the unmarried elderly women received private pensions in contrast to 38 percent of married couples and 28 percent of unmarried men. Typically, these private pension benefits were low, especially those received by women who retired after years of working at low paying jobs or by women who, as surviving spouses, received reduced benefits from their deceased husband's pension plans.

Interest from assets, such as savings, provide only a minor source of income for many elderly persons, particularly for unmarried elderly women. In 1986, for example, the median income received by elderly persons from all assets amounted to only $2,130.

The importance of Social Security to elderly women is demonstrated by the fact that, according to 1986 data, 70 percent of all unmarried women were dependent on Social Security for at least half of their total income. For 35 percent of them, it represented 90 percent or more of their total income. For 1.9 million of these women, Social Security represented 100 percent of their income. In contrast, only 14 percent of married couples and only 31 percent of unmarried men relied upon Social Security for 90 percent or more of their income.

As I will discuss in a moment, this dependence upon Social Security as the major source of their income by elderly women—especially elderly women living alone—when combined with the generally lower Social Security benefits received by these women is a key factor in the disproportionate representation of these women in the poverty population.

ELDERLY WOMEN LIKELY TO LIVE ALONE

Second, Mr. President, elderly women are far more likely than elderly men to be living alone in their old age. Only 40 percent of elderly women live with their husbands, about 20 percent live with other people—mostly family members—and more than 40 percent live alone. Among women over age 75, the percentage living with a husband drops to less than one fourth and the percentage living alone increases to nearly one half. These statistics and the likelihood that a woman will be alone in old age arise from higher male mortality rates coupled with the tendency of men to marry younger women. An elderly man is far more likely to be living with a wife; 7 of every 10 men aged 75 and older is living with a spouse while nearly 7 of every 10 women is a widow. Even at the younger ages, the difference in marital status is striking. Of those between the age of 65 and 74, almost 40 percent of the women are widowed compared to less than 10 percent of the men. Remarriage rates for these men are vastly higher than for women. As I indicated earlier, those elderly women living alone are far more likely to be poor than elderly women living with a spouse.

WOMEN'S SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS LIKELY TO BE LOWER

Third, although so many elderly women living alone depend upon Social Security as their principal and sometimes only source of income, their benefits are dramatically lower than the average benefits received by men. In 1988, 4.8 million women were receiving Social Security benefits as widows based upon age—rather than because of disability or the presence of dependent children. Their benefits averaged $445 per month which, if it were the only or primary source of income wasn't very much. Another 3 million beneficiaries were wives of retired workers receiving a dependent spouse average monthly benefit of $253. In the event that these wives become widows, their monthly benefit would double to $506. For retired workers, the average benefit for women in 1986 was $420; for men, $550. More recent data show little change in these disparities. In 1988, the average benefit for retired female workers was $443; for retired male workers, $580.

ELDERLY WOMEN PREDOMINATE IN NEAR-POVERTY STATUS

Finally, although the disproportionate poverty status of elderly women frequently has drawn the most attention because of its staggering nature, the situation is equally grim for millions of elderly women just above the poverty line—which was $5,255 for individuals 65 and over in 1986. As of 1986, older women had a median personal income of $8,079 compared to the median income of $9,211 for older men. When the median income figures are broken down to show income distributions, an even more grim picture emerges. Fifty-one percent of widowed women, or one in every two had income of less than $7,000 in 1986; less than one in five men fell into this category.

Mr. President, in every income category—whether it is private pensions, asset income, or Social Security—older women have dramatically fewer resources and less income in old age than do men. There are, of course, many factors which contribute to the economic hardships that face women in their retirement years. A lifetime of wage discrimination and pay inequities contribute enormously to these problems in old age—and there is a real need to do something further about eliminating those factors. But there is little question that a major contributing factor lies in the failure of the percent Social Security benefit structure to take into account the changing roles and needs of American women.

HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

Mr. President, much of the problem lies in the fact that the Social Security system was developed in an era when the role of women in our society was far different from what it is today. In the 1930's when the Social Security program was created, the typical American family consisted of a man who was a full-time worker and his wife who was a full-time, lifelong homemaker. The labor force participation of married women was less than 17 percent and fewer than 1 in 12 marriages ended in divorce. The Social Security benefit structure was thus established on the concept of a life-long couple with one wage earner and a dependent spouse.

The situation has dramatically changed over the past 50 years and the typical family of the 1930's and 1940's—even the 1950's and 1960's—is not the typical family of today. Women have become a major part of America's work force, enriching the world of work with their contributions and productivity, despite continuing wage discrimination and employment barriers. The percentage of married women in the work force exceeds 50 percent, and it has been estimated that 90 percent of all women spend some portion of their lives in the work force, many of them moving in and out of the roles of wage-earners and homemakers as the needs of their families change. It is no longer true that women are likely to be either lifelong homemakers or lifelong wage-earners; these roles are combined and interchanged throughout a lifetime.

Similarly, we must recognize, like it or not, that the status of marriage has changed dramatically over the past 50 years. Today, one of three marriages ends in divorce.

Mr. President, despite these massive changes in our society, the Social Security System has continued to operate on the basis of a philosophy designed for an era when most women did not work and when most women were part of a life-long marriage. Consequently, the current system works well only for that very small number of women whose family and work patterns have not changed from the 1930's and 1940's. For the vast majority of women and families that no longer fit into that pattern, the system fails to provide either adequately or equitably for their needs.

CURRENT BENEFIT STRUCTURE

Under the current system, a woman can receive benefits as a covered worker based upon her own earnings record or she can receive benefits as a dependent wife, widow, or ex-wife of a covered worker, but she cannot receive both benefits. If she is entitled to both a worker's benefit and a dependent spouse's benefit, she receives only the higher of the two benefits and loses the other.

DEPENDENT SPOUSE BENEFIT

A dependent spouse benefit is equal to 50 percent of the benefit of the working spouse. Because many women have gaps in their work history due to absences from the workplace for child-care responsibilities and generally have much lower earnings records, many find that their benefits as a dependent spouse are greater than the benefits they would be entitled to receive on the basis of their own work history. Thus, many married women who enter the work force and make contributions to the Social Security system find that their years of work and contributions make little or no difference in their benefit levels. They are no better off than if they had never worked and never paid into the Social Security system.

DIVORCED OR WIDOWED SPOUSE BENEFITS

Mr. President, the inequities of the current system can be even more acute for those women who have been full-time homemakers and are displaced from that role either by divorce or the death of a spouse. After years of work as a homemaker in a marriage, a divorced woman may find herself without any work record of her own and eligible for Social Security benefits only as a dependent spouse. Although she may be of retirement age, she cannot receive any Social Security benefits unless the marriage lasted 10 years. Until enactment of the 1983 Social Security Amendments, she could not receive benefits until her former spouse reached age 62 and if he elected to continue working, she would receive no benefits at all until he retired or died. Fortunately, that particular inequity was corrected in the 1983 legislation, allowing these women of retirement age with at least a 10-year marriage to receive benefits regardless of whether the former spouse continued working.

However, the benefits received by a divorced spouse are likely to be woefully inadequate. The level of the dependent spouse benefit—50 percent of the primary benefit—was geared toward the notion of women whose marriages do not end in divorce and who would be able to rely upon a combination of their husband's 100 percent benefits and the additional 50 percent spouse benefit—in other words, 150 percent of the primary benefit. The spouse benefit by itself may well be insufficient to live on alone.

A widow is equally vulnerable under the present system. Unless she has been able to establish a sufficient Social Security account in her own name, she will be dependent upon the work and earnings record of her deceased spouse. Unable to build up sufficient credits in her own account and unable to add his credits to her account to the extent of her earnings after his death, she is likely to be left with a benefit level that condemns her to entering retirement in poverty.

ONE WAGE-EARNER VERSUS TWO WAGE-EARNER FAMILIES

The current system also discriminates against intact families with two-wage earners as contrasted with one-wage earner families. Under the benefit calculation formula, a two-earner couple is likely to receive less benefits at retirement than a one-earner couple with exactly the same lifetime earnings. Thus, one family with average monthly earnings of $1,000 and one wage earner can ultimately receive higher benefits from Social Security than another family with the exact same average earnings but with two-wage earners contributing to the total family income. This occurs because of the dependent spouse benefit and because of the formula which is used to calculate benefits.

The 1979 HHS report, "Social Security and the Changing Roles of Men and Women" (page 32), described this problem as follows:

> Since spouse's benefits are not payable to two-earner couples [unless one spouse has low average indexed monthly earnings (AIME)], a two-earner couple generally receives lower total benefits than a one-earner couple with the same total AIME. Benefits for two-earner couples with the same AIME can also vary dependent on the proportion of the total AIME earned by each spouse within the couple.
> For example, a one-earner couple each age 62 in 1980 with AIME of $1,000 would have a benefit of $648 (a worker's benefit of $432 plus a spouse benefit of $216). If each spouse had one-half of the earnings, the benefit would be $544. (Each would receive a worker's benefit of $272).

The HHS report also observed that, as in the case of couples, the survivor of a two-earner couple generally gets a lower benefit than the survivor of a one-earner couple with the same total AIME. For example, the report noted, at AIME of $1,000 the aged survivor's benefit is $432 if only one spouse was a paid worker and only $272—$160 less—if each spouse had AIME of $500—the same total earnings of $1,000.

As I noted earlier, this results from the interplay of the dependent spouse benefit and the weighted benefit formula.

DISABILITY PROTECTION

Finally, a woman who spends years working in the home has no disability protection under Social Security for herself or her dependents even though her disability could cause grave economic hardships for her family. Even if she has recently returned to the work force and is currently earning Social Security credits, she may not yet have met the insured status requirements for disability benefits if she becomes disabled soon after she reenters the work force.

MARRIAGE ALSO AN ECONOMIC PARTNERSHIP

Mr. President, it is time that we begin the task of revising the Social Security system to recognize and reflect the changing roles and responsibilities of both men and women in our society and provide for a more equitable recognition of their contributions to a family unit.

Marriage, insofar as economics are concerned, should be viewed as an interdependent partnership in which each spouse makes a contribution—either in the paid workforce or as a homemaker or in some combination of roles—and both ought to accrue Social Security protection equally.

The view of female dependency which is a foundation of the present Social Security system belongs to a bygone era. Women today are achieving the status of equal partnership with men in every facet of our society. The Social Security system needs to be updated to reflect that partnership.

EARNINGS SHARING—A CONCEPT FOR TODAY'S MARRIAGE PARTNERSHIP

Mr. President, as I indicated at the outset, S. 51 would incorporate the concept of "earnings sharing" into the Social Security system. Marriage for Social Security purposes would be regarded as an economic partnership. In order to compute benefits, all of the earnings of a married couple would be combined and divided equally between the spouses upon retirement or divorce. Each partner would have established for him or her an individual Social Security account. Earnings acquired before or after a marriage would go into this individual account along with whatever share each partner acquired during marriage. The concept of dependency would be replaced by the concept of equality.

Although this is a major change from the current Social Security system of benefit accrual, it is a principle which is now applied in virtually every jurisdiction with respect to other assets acquired during a marriage. Upon the termination of a marriage, these other assets are generally divided equally between the husband and wife. It is similar to the concept of "community property" which has long existed in States like California. Interests in other pension programs are now generally considered part of the assets acquired during the marriage and are considered in the division of property between the couple upon the termination of the marriage. The same would be true if we incorporate the "earnings sharing" concept into the Social Security system. I think it is interesting to note, in this regard, that recently enacted Federal legislation has allowed these principles to be applied to military and civil service pensions.

There have, of course, been numerous proposals made to deal with the inequities and inadequacies of the current system. The "earnings sharing" concept, however, has numerous advantages. It would eliminate the current discrimination against two-wage earner families. It would no longer be possible for them to receive less benefits than one-earner families with identical earnings records. It would recognize the value of the contribution of a homemaker and accord her a Social Security account in her own right. If divorce or death of a spouse should occur—and for a woman age 65 or older, the chances are very high that she will confront one of these situations—a woman could build upon the separate account created for her during her years of marriage, rather than be forced to start from scratch in establishing a Social Security account. Likewise, credits from earnings she receives prior to marriage will be able to be added to her account accrued during marriage. The same, of course, would be true for the husband. Women who enter and leave the work force to meet necessary child-rearing responsibilities would no longer be unfairly penalized by gaps in their Social Security coverage.

Mr. President, earnings sharing has repeatedly been identified as the most direct and equitable approach to dealing with the variety of different problems facing women under the current system. Although various interim and single-purpose measures have been proposed, the attractiveness of the earnings-sharing approach is that it would help to resolve many of these problems.

Variations Within The Earnings-Sharing Concept: Obviously, however, a proposal such as earnings-sharing which calls for a major restructuring of the Social Security benefit system involves many complex and important questions. No one has seriously proposed a pure earnings-sharing model. Such a model would be far too harsh on many individuals. Thus, every earnings-sharing model which has been put forward has represented a "modified earnings sharing" concept. For example, the legislation that I have introduced provides for 100-percent inheritance of a couple's combined benefits—up to the ceiling for the applicable years—for the surviving spouse. Other proposals advanced—for example, the model contained in the 1979 report "Social Security and the Changing Roles of Men and Women"—have proposed variations such as an 80-percent inheritance provision. Virtually all models include provisions to address the need to provide adequate protection for dependent children of deceased workers and special provisions to deal with disabled workers.

Cost Implications: There is widespread agreement that the earnings-sharing concept itself would not entail any additional costs for the Social Security system. Indeed, a "pure" earnings-sharing model would probably result in substantial cost-savings. Most of the modified earnings-sharing proposals which have been developed would be cost-neutral. They would simply reallocate benefits on a more equitable basis. However, it is also generally recognized that a transition from the current system to a new system would entail certain transitional costs designed to protect various categories of beneficiaries from being unduly hurt during the transition period. What those costs would be depend in part upon how these transitional provisions are designed and the length of time for such a transition.

Transition Period: There are major decisions which must be made with respect to a transition period. Changes of this dimension and scope must be phased in over time so that individuals can make appropriate plans for their retirement years. The 1979 HHS report represented two models for a transition period. Representative OAKAR's legislation in past Congresses included the first model, which provides for a grandfathering of current benefits or benefits established under the earnings-sharing concept, whichever is greater until the year 2011. The other model proposed in the HHS report, providing for a lengthy delay in the effective date, is the one included in the legislation I am introducing today as S. 51.

The Social Security changes proposed in S. 51 would not take effect with respect to any one over the age of 50 in 1990. Those under 50 would begin having Social Security accounts established and computed under this proposal henceforth. Because no one under age 50 could reach the minimum retirement age of 62 before 2002, no one under age 50 in 1990 would actually begin receiving benefits under this system until 2002 at the earliest. Different transition provisions are provided for individuals who might become eligible for Social Security disability benefits during this phase-in. In no case, however, would a person who became disabled during this period ever receive less benefits as long as that disability continued than they would be entitled to under the old system.

Mr. President, each of the transition proposals presented in the HHS 1979 report are thus represented in the earnings-sharing measures which have been introduced in the Congress. I suspect, however, that a preferable approach lies somewhere in between the first option, the grandfathering of current benefits for a long period of time, and the second option, delaying the effective date of the new system. The complete grandfathering approach, although attractive from a beneficiaries perspective, would entail significant additional costs. Conversely, although the second option of delaying the effective date would not have any additional cost implications, it would mean that none of the benefits of the new system would be realized by those women over age 50 who are rapidly approaching retirement. The need to develop a satisfactory transition mechanism was a major motivating factor behind my offering an amendment to the 1983 Social Security legislation directing HHS to prepare and submit to Congress a report on implementation of various models of earnings sharing in Social Security, including appropriate transition mechanisms.

1983 REPORT AMENDMENT

Mr. President, because of the need for substantial in-depth analysis of the modifications that would be needed in any earnings-sharing proposal and the necessity of providing for an adequate transition process, when the 1983 Social Security legislation was before the Senate, I offered an amendment, which was enacted as section 344 of Public Law 98-21, to require the Department of Health and Human Services to submit to the Congress a report on implementation of earnings sharing. At the time that I offered this amendment, I explicitly stated that the mandated report should not be veiwed as a study of the problems facing women under the Social Security system, but rather it should be focused upon how an earnings-sharing concept could be implemented. At the time I offered the amendment (March 16, 1983, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, daily ed. S3045), I stated:

I want to stress that this amendment does not call for another study. We did that in 1977. The 1977 social security amendments called for HHS to study the problems facing women under the social security system.

The report developed as a result of the 1977 amendments presented the earnings-sharing model as one of two possible comprehensive approaches for dealing with these problems. * * * What needs to be done now is to work out and test the details on how a specific earnings-sharing model can be implemented, and determine what type of transition provisions are needed and what modifications in the basic earnings-sharing concept are necessary in order to provide adequate protection for various categories of beneficiaries.

I should note also that the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], who was then chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and the floor manager of the Social Security bill, also made it clear in his statement accepting my amendment that he, too, recognized that the amendment was not—I stress not—calling for another study of the problems facing women in Social Security, but was focused upon advancing the concept of earnings sharing beyond the study stage. The amendment as enacted called for the Department to submit its report to Congress by July 1, 1984.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the Department failed to submit the statutorily-mandated report on the date it was due. Moreover, the report which was finally submitted in January 1985 was disappointing in a number of respects.

Despite the clear legislative mandate to provide an implementation report and analysis, HHS insisted on conducting a survey of the views of interested organizations on the problems facing women under the Social Security system. Representative OAKAR and I, as well as a number of interested organizations, objected strenuously to this diversion of time and resources from the statutorily-mandated task given to HHS. This survey cost the Federal taxpayers some $157,000 and basically provided no new insights into the issue. Some 100 pages of the final report are devoted to reviewing the results of the survey.

More importantly, Mr. President, the HHS report was disappointing in that HHS failed to design an earnings-sharing model or implementation plan. Instead of developing proposals and recommendations as was called for by the legislation, much of the report was devoted to critiquing existing earnings-sharing proposals—including an analysis of a so-called generic or pure earnings-sharing model. Since no one has seriously proposed that a pure earnings-sharing model be adopted, this analysis did little to advance the discussion of the earnings-sharing concept.

Consistently, the HHS report stressed the problems associated with implementation of earnings-sharing concepts and minimized or ignored the positive outcomes. For example, where its own statistics showed that nearly 54 percent of the elderly divorced women would get increased benefits under a modified earnings-sharing model, HHS described the outcomes as resulting in some divorced women getting increased benefits under this plan. In short, the HHS report betrays a pervasive negative approach to earnings sharing with little effort to identify constructive methods of dealing with the problems that transition to such a model would require.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE REPORT

Mr. President, the 1983 amendment also provided for the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] to submit to Congress a report on the methodology, recommendations, and analyses used in the HHS report. CBO was not asked to provide recommendations itself, but simply to examine the HHS report. Nevertheless, there is little question that the CBO report has contributed significantly more to the understanding of the earnings-sharing concept than the HHS report.

First, the CBO report, "Earnings Sharing Options for the Social Security System" (January 1986), provides a neutral, unbiased, and concise description of earnings sharing and the benefits and disadvantages of attempting to implement this concept. Second, the CBO report placed some of the "loss" and "win" results in a more realistic perspective. For example, whereas the HHS report appeared almost to strain to suggest that significant numbers of Social Security recipients would not be benefited by earnings sharing, the CBO report concluded that the measure used by HHS to define "winners" and "losers" under earnings sharing—a 1-percent increase or decrease in benefits—was too small a range to be meaningful in long-range projections. The CBO report pointed out that since there will be substantial real benefit growth regardless of whether or not an earnings-sharing model is adopted, even a 5-percent loss, relative to current law, would still result in substantial increases in basic benefits. In general, CBO noted that the earnings-sharing model would provide the greatest help to low-benefit recipients—those women most likely to be in the greatest need of assistance. This latter fact is buried deep inside the HHS report.

TECHNICAL COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. President, in addition to the work done by HHS and CBO for the past several years, a number of organizations and individuals interested in the earnings-sharing concept have been developing an earnings-sharing proposal for Social Security. Supported by a variety of funding sources, this group, called the Technical Committee for Social Security Reform for Women, has painstakenly worked through and developed both a modified earnings-sharing model and transition plan. Microsimulations done by the Urban Institute, with support from the House Select Committee on Aging, have shown that the Technical Committee's model would not only provide greater equity, but would assure significantly higher benefits for those classes of women who receive the lowest benefits under current law.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that some time later this year the Technical Committee will publish its report and proposal for a Social Security earnings-sharing model. I am confident that once that report is released the debate around Social Security earnings-sharing will be significantly advanced.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, earnings sharing in Social Security would represent a major reform which obviously cannot be implemented overnight. But such an effort must begin now so that future generations of women will be adequately and equitably treated under the Social Security System. Social Security is vital to the security and well-being of millions of Americans—current retirees and disabled persons and future ones. This country has a major obligation to protect the system. But equally important is the obligation to make sure that the system remains responsive to the changing needs and roles within our population.

Over the years, the Social Security System has grown and responded to the changing needs in many ways, such as by the addition of disability coverage and the enactment of the Medicare program. Earnings sharing is a concept that is part of that process of growth and responsiveness.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of S. 51 be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 51

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Social Security Equity Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. SHARING OF EARNINGS BY MARRIED COUPLES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title II of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SHARING OF EARNINGS BY MARRIED COUPLES

"SEC. 234. (a)(1) For purposes of determining the eligibility of an individual and the spouse of such individual for old-age and disability benefits and the amount of such benefits to which each is or may become separately entitled, the combined earnings of such individual and such spouse shall, to the extent that such earnings are attributable to the marriage period of such individual and such spouse (as determined under paragraph (2)), be divided equally between them and shared in accordance with this section.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), for purposes of this section, the term 'marriage period' means the period—

"(i) beginning with the first day of the calendar year in which the marriage of an individual and the spouse of such individual occurs, and

"(ii) ending with the last day of the calendar year preceding the earliest calendar year in which such individual or such spouse dies, they are divorced, or one of them files application for old-age or disability insurance benefits.

"(B)(i) No marriage period shall begin for any individual and the spouse of such individual if their marriage occurs after such individual or such spouse has filed an application for old-age insurance benefits.

"(ii) No marriage period shall include a period for which such individual or such spouse is entitled to disability insurance benefits or the waiting period (as defined in section 223(c)(2)) with respect to such benefits.

"(iii) A marriage period shall include the 'earliest calendar year' referred to in clause (ii) of subparagraph (A) for purposes of recomputations for that year under section 215(f)(2), in any case where an individual or the spouse of such individual dies or they are divorced, unless the survivor (where one of them dies) or either of them (where they are divorced) is remarried later in the same year.

"(b)(1) Except to the extent otherwise provided in subsections (c), (d), and (e), an individual and the spouse of such individual shall each be credited for all of the purposes of this title with wages and self-employment income, for each calendar year for which either of them is credited with any wages and self-employment income without regard to this section during their marriage period, in an amount equal to—

"(A) 50 percent of the combined total of the wages and self-employment income otherwise credited to both of them for that year if (at the close of the month for which the benefit determinations involved are being made) they are both still living, or

"(B) 100 percent of such combined total, up to but not exceeding the maximum amount that may be counted for that year without exceeding the ceiling imposed for that year under section 215(e), if (at the close of such month) one of them has died.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the crediting of wages and self-employment income to any individual for any calendar year not included in a marriage period of such individual; but to the extent that wages and self-employment income are credited pursuant to this section the other provisions of this title specifying the manner in which wages and self-employment income are to be credited shall (to the extent inconsistent with this section) not apply.

"(3) Except where the context requires otherwise, for purposes of this section, the term 'spouse' includes a divorced spouse, a surviving spouse, and a surviving divorced spouse.

"(c) Subsections (a) and (b) shall not apply with respect to the crediting of wages and self-employment income for any calendar year, in the case of any individual and the spouse of such individual, if—

"(1) as a result of the application of such subsections with respect to that year such individual or such spouse would cease to be a fully insured individual (as defined in section 214(a)); or

"(2) such individual or such spouse is applying for disability insurance benefits (or for the establishment of a period of disability) and as a result of the application of such subsections with respect to that year would cease to be insured for such benefits under section 223(c)(1) (or for such a period under section 216(i)(3)).

"(d) Subsections (a) and (b) shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of the benefit payable to any individual for any month if—

"(1) the total amount of the wages and self-employment income credited to such individual for a marriage period, as determined without regard to this section, is higher than the total amount of the wages and self-employment income credited to such individual's spouse for that period, as so determined; and

"(2) such individual's spouse (taking subsections (a) and (b) into account) has not filed application for old-age or disability insurance benefits by the close of such month.

"(e) Notwithstanding any of the preceding provisions of this section—

"(1) benefits payable under subsection (d) or (h) of section 202 on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of any individual, and benefits payable under subsection (b), (c), (e), (f), or (g) of such section 202 (on the basis of such wages and self-employment income) to any person other than a spouse who has shared in or been credited with a part of such individual's earnings under subsections (a) and (b) of this section, shall be determined as though this section had not been enacted if—

"(A) the application of this section has changed such individual's primary insurance amount from what it would otherwise have been; and

"(B) the crediting of wages and self-employment income to such individual and the spouse of such individual without regard to this section would increase the amount of such benefits; and

"(2) in the application of section 203(a) (relating to maximum family benefits) with respect to benefits payable on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of any individual, where all or any part of the wages and self-employment income of such individual and the spouse of such individual was credited to them in accordance with this section, the primary insurance amount of such individual (and the crediting of such wages and self-employment income) shall be determined in accordance with this section but the benefits payable to any other person on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of such individual shall be determined without regard to this section.

"(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no wife's, husband's, widow's, or widower's insurance benefit shall be paid to any individual for any month under subsection (b), (c), (e), or (f) of section 202, and no individual shall be entitled to any such benefit, unless—

"(1) the period of such individual's marriage (to the spouse or former spouse on the basis of whose wages and self-employment income such benefit is payable) ended before the effective date of this section;

"(2) such individual is under the age of 62 (and is otherwise entitled to such benefit);

"(3) such benefit is payable without regard to age and solely by reason of such individual's having a child in his or her care; or

"(4) the application of this section to such individual is prevented by subsection (c) or (d) (or by clause (i) or (ii) of subsection (a)(2)(B)).

"(g) For purposes of subsections (a)(2) and (d), an individual's application for old-age or disability insurance benefits shall be deemed to have been filed on the first day of the first month for which (by reason of the operation of section 202(j) or 223(b)) such individual is entitled to such benefits.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 202(b)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "The wife" and inserting in lieu thereof "To the extent permitted by section 234(g), the wife".

(2) Section 202(c)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "The husband" and inserting in lieu thereof "To the extent permitted by section 234(g), the husband".

(3) Section 202(e)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "The widow" and inserting in lieu thereof "To the extent permitted by section 234(g), the widow".

(4) Section 202(f)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "The widower" and inserting in lieu thereof "To the extent permitted by section 234(g), the widower".

(5) Section 205(c)(5) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (I);

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subclause (J) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(K) to reflect any changes in the crediting of wages and self-employment income which may be necessitated by section 234.".

(6) Section 215(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) The determination of the wages and self-employment income to be credited to an individual under this subsection shall in all cases be made after the application of section 234.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendments made by this Act shall apply only to wages and self-employment income payable after December 31, 1990, to an individual who has not attained age 50 on or before such date, and only if—

(1) the spouse of such individual has not attained age 50 on or before such date; and

(2)(A) in the case of a benefit based upon the attainment by the wage earner of age 62, such individual and such spouse attain age 62;

(B) in the case of a benefit based upon the death of the wage earner, such death occurs after December 31, 1990, and the individual claiming such benefit attains age 62; and

(C) in the case of a benefit described in subparagraph (A) or (B) with respect to a divorced individual and spouse, the divorce occurs after December 31, 2003.

(b) BENEFITS BASED ON DISABILITY.—In the case of a disability insurance benefit, and a widow's or widower's insurance benefit based upon disability—

(1) if an individual is entitled to such benefit before January 1, 1991, the provisions of this Act shall not apply—

(A) for the period for which such individual continues to be entitled to such benefit, and

(B) in the case of an individual who continues to be entitled to such benefit until age 62, for the period such individual is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit;

(2) if—

(A) an individual becomes entitled to such benefit after December 31, 1990, and before January 1, 2003; and

(B) the total benefits payable to all individuals on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of the individual upon whose disability such entitlement is based (determined without regard to the provisions of this Act) exceeds the total of benefits payable to all individuals on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of the individual upon whose disability such entitlement is based, and to the spouse of such individual, under the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall not apply for the period during which the conditions of subparagraph (B) continue to be met and during which such individual (i) continues to be eligible for such benefit, or (ii) in the case of such an individual who continued to be eligible for such benefit until age 62, is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit.

S. 52. A bill to amend section 1086 of title 10, United States Code, to provide for payment under the CHAMPUS Program of certain health care expenses incurred by certain members and former members of the uniformed services and their dependents to the extent that such expenses are not payable under Medicare, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Armed Services.

CHAMPUS PROGRAM AS "SECOND PAYER" TO MEDICARE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to amend title 10 of the United States Code in order to have the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program serve as a second payer to Medicare for those services which CHAMPUS beneficiaries require and are not covered by the Medicare Act.

Mr. President, I feel that it is very important for our Nation that we continue our firm commitment to those individuals and their families who have served in the Armed Forces and made us the great Nation that we are today. As this population becomes older, they are unfortunately finding that they need a wide range of health services, some of which are simply not available under Medicare. The bill that I am recommending today, would ensure the highest possible quality care for these dedicated citizens and their families.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 52

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENT TO THE CHAMPUS PROGRAM.

(a) REPEAL OF PROHIBITION ON CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—Section 1086(c) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out the sentence following paragraph (2)(B)(ii).

(b) AUTHORIZATION FOR PAYMENT TO EXTENT BENEFITS NOT PAYABLE UNDER ANOTHER PROGRAM.—Section 1086(d) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(d)(1) The provisions of section 1079(j) of this title shall apply to a plan covered by this section, except that a benefit may be paid under such plan for items and services for which payment is made under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(2)(A) The amount payable under a plan covered by this section for items or services for which payment is made under title XVIII of the Social Security Act shall be reduced by the sum of—

"(i) the amount of the payment made for such items or services under such title XVIII; and

"(ii) the amount of any payment made under subsection (b).

"(B) A plan covered by this section shall not be considered a group health plan for the purposes of paragraph (2) or (3) of section 1862(b) of the Social Security Act.

"(C) A person claiming a benefit under a plan covered by this section by reason of the application of this subsection shall certify the cost charged for the items or services to which the claim relates and the amounts referred to in subparagraph (A)(i) that relate to such items or services. A certification made under this subparagraph may be accepted for the purposes of determining the benefit payable under this section.".

SEC. 2. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 613(d) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "the second sentence of section 1086(c) of title 10 or".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect with respect to health care items or services provided on and after the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mrs. KASSEBAUM):

S. 53. A bill to authorize the reformulation of the Cedar Bluff Unit of the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, KS, to provide for the amendment of water service and repayment contracts; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

REFORMULATION OF CEDAR BLUFF UNIT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce needed legislation that would authorize the reformulation of the Cedar Bluff Unit of the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin Program, KS, and provide for the amendment of water service and repayment contracts.

Identical legislation was introduced late last year, but was unable to receive favorable action due to time constraints and adjournment of the 100th Congress.

Studies show a significant flow depletion in the Smokey Hill River above Cedar Bluff Reservoir. There has been a consistent decline in water supply available for irrigation from Cedar Bluff during the past 23 years and no deliveries or irrigation water have been made since 1978.

In recent years, the Cedar Bluff Irrigation District has not been able to pay construction repayment installments, or operation, maintenance, and replacement obligations under the present contract with the Bureau of Reclamation.

In addition, the fish cultural station located below the dam, which was operated by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, has been closed and is now operated by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks as a Canadian goose rearing facility.

Currently, the Federal Government is holding a repayment contract with the irrigation district which they are unable to collect without adverse action to the district.

The district is also unable to pay their share of the annual OM&R costs associated with the dam and reservoir. The Federal Government is allowing, on a temporary basis, the State to utilize the fish cultural station and water right for rearing Canadian geese.

Mr. President, on December 17, 1987, the State of Kansas and the Bureau of Reclamation signed a memorandum of understanding that clears the way for this important legislation. A contract has been negotiated, contingent upon this Federal legislation, that is expected to be signed by the State and the Bureau after the required public comment period.

Congressman PAT ROBERTS is taking the lead in the House and will soon be introducing a companion bill. I am confident the Energy and Natural Resources Committee will move expeditiously with hearings on this undertaking.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this necessary legislation. The Kansas Legislature has made a fiscal year 1989 appropriation of $364,000 that will be used for the use of the conservation storage obligation to the United States. At this time, I would request a copy of the memorandum of understanding be inserted into the RECORD.

Mr. President, this is needed legislation. The Federal Government, State of Kansas and the American taxpayer all come out ahead with these changes. I encourage my colleagues to support this important bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 53

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF REFORMULATION.

The Secretary of the Interior (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary"), pursuant to the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior, the State of Kansas, and the Cedar Bluff Irrigation District No. 6, dated December 17, 1987, is authorized to reformulate the Cedar Bluff Unit of the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, Kansas, including reallocation of the conservation capacity of the Cedar Bluff Reservoir, to create—

(1) a designated operating pool, as defined in such Memorandum of Understanding, for fish, wildlife, and recreation purposes, for groundwater recharge for environmental, domestic, municipal, industrial, and irrigation uses, and for other purposes; and

(2) a joint-use pool, as defined in such Memorandum of Understanding, for flood control, for water sales, for fish, wildlife, and recreation purposes, and for other purposes.

SEC. 2. CONTRACT WITH THE STATE OF KANSAS FOR OPERATING POOL.

The Secretary may enter into a contract with the State of Kansas for the sale, use and control of the designated operating pool, with the exception of water reserved for the city of Russell, Kansas, and to allow the State of Kansas to acquire use and control of water in the joint-use pool.

SEC. 3. CONTRACT WITH THE STATE OF KANSAS FOR CEDAR BLUFF DAM AND RESERVOIR.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary may enter into a contract with the State of Kansas, accepting a payment of $365,424, and the State's commitment to pay a proportionate share of the annual operation, maintenance, and replacement charges for the Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir, as full satisfaction of the reimbursable costs associated with irrigation of the Cedar Bluff Unit, including the Cedar Bluff Irrigation District's obligations under Contract No. 0-07-70-W0064. After the reformulation of the Cedar Bluff Unit authorized by this Act, any revenues in excess of operating expenses received from the sale of water from the Cedar Bluff Unit shall be allocated to pay the United States for the cost of the project.

(b) TRANSFER OF FISH HATCHERY.—The Secretary may transfer ownershp of the buildings, fixtures, and equipment of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service fish hatchery facility at Cedar Bluff Dam, and the related water rights, to the State of Kansas for its use and operation for fish, wildlife, and related purposes.

SEC. 4. TRANSFER OF DISTRICT HEADQUARTERS.

The Secretary may transfer title to all interests in real property, buildings, fixtures, equipment, and tools associated with the Cedar Bluff Irrigation District headquarters located near Hays, Kansas, contingent upon the District's agreement to close down the irrigation system to the satisfaction of the Secretary at no additional cost to the United States, after which all easement rights shall revert to the owners of the lands to which the easements are attached. The transferee of any interests conveyed pursuant to this section shall assume all liability with respect to such interests and shall indemnify the United States against all such liability.

SEC. 5. ADDITIONAL ACTIONS.

The Secretary may take all other actions consistent with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding referred to in section 1 that the Secretary deems necessary to accomplish the reformulation of the Cedar Bluff Unit.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION AND FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE, THE STATE OF KANSAS AND THE CEDAR BLUFF IRRIGATION DISTRICT NO. 6 CONCERNING REFORMULATION AND OPERATION OF THE CEDAR BLUFF UNIT, DECEMBER 1987

1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this Memorandum of Understanding is to establish a cooperative partnership between the U.S. Department of the Interior—Bureau of Reclamation (Bureau) and Fish and Wildlife Service (Service), the State of Kansas (State), and the Cedar Bluff Irrigation District (District) to achieve the greatest possible level of multipurpose benefits from the Cedar Bluff Unit, built and operated by the Bureau on the Smoky Hill River, in Trego and Ellis counties, in west-central Kansas.

2. BACKGROUND

The Cedar Bluff Unit was authorized as a multipurpose unit of the Missouri Basin Project to provide flood control, irrigation, and other associated benefits. The major feature of the project, Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir, was completed in 1951. The dam was constructed in advance of the finalization of irrigation plans as a part of the Missouri River Basin Flood Control Program. Formation of the District was filed with the Chief Engineer, Division of Water Resources, Kansas State Board of Agriculture, on January 3, 1958. After approval by the Chief Engineer, the three member District board of directors was elected September 9, 1958. The District has a total irrigable acreage of 6,800 acres. The delivery of irrigation water to project lands began in 1963.

The Cedar Bluff Unit includes the dam and reservoir, the irrigation distribution system, a fish cultural station built by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service below the dam, and the fish, wildlife, and recreation investment made by the State in land and water management and in State park facilities. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service holds a Kansas water right for water supply associated with the fish cultural station. The City of Russell holds a Kansas water right associated with storage space in Cedar Bluff Reservoir for municipal water supply by direct releases to the Smoky Hill River. The District holds the water right associated with the irrigation of its 6,800 acres of irrigable lands.

During flood stages, operation of the reservoir is in accordance with cooperative agreements with the Corps of Engineers for basinwide control. These agreements provide that the Corps of Engineers will direct operations when the water surface is within the flood control pool.

Studies show a significant flow depletion in the Smoky Hill River above Cedar Bluff Reservoir. There has been a consistent decline in water supply available for irrigation from Cedar Bluff Reservoir during the past 23 years. The following problems related to operating the Cedar Bluff Unit under these depleted inflow conditions have been identified:

a. No deliveries of irrigation water have been made to the District since 1978.

b. In recent years, the Dirtrict has not been able to pay construction repayment installments, or operation, maintenance, and replacement obligations under the present contract with the Bureau.

c. The fish cultural station located below the dam, which was operated by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, has been closed and is now operated by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks as a Canadian goose rearing facility.

d. Without (1) water deliveries to the District, (2) water releases to the river for the city of Russell, and (3) water utilized by the fish cultural station below the dam, the Smoky Hill River and alluvial ground-water system has not been recharged by stream flows, or return flows, that historically have been available. This has in part been responsible for critical depletions at city and rural water district alluvial groundwater supply facilities.

e. The Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks is concerned about protecting and utilizing the State's investment in the fishery in Cedar Bluff Reservoir and wildlife management associated with the land area around the reservoir. It is also concerned about protecting and utilizing the State's investment in recreation facilities at the Cedar Bluff State park areas down to the reservoir water level.

3. OVERVIEW OF INITIATIVE

The Federal/State/District partnership established in this Memorandum of Understanding is designed to reformulate and operate the Cedar Bluff Unit in recognition of the issues in paragraph 2 above. In order to achieve this objective, the Bureau, the Service, the State, and the District intend to reformulate and operate the Cedar Bluff Unit so that:

a. The existing flood control aspects of the project would be unchanged, except for additional flood storage in the "joint-use pool" as described in f. below.

b. The lower 9.1 feet of the existing conservation pool (consisting of 29,739 acre-feet between elevation 2090.0 and elevation 2109.1) would be a "designated operating pool" (2,700 acre-feet) for the City of Russell's municipal water supply; (5,400 acre-feet) for artificial recharge (environmental, domestic, municipal, industrial, and irrigation); and (21,639 acre-feet) for fish, wildlife, and recreation.

c. The "designated operating pool" would be operated as a single pool with the three uses sharing proportionally the inflows and losses, so that a continuous accounting is maintained on the amount of water that is available for Russell's municipal water supply; for artificial recharge; and for fish, wildlife, and recreation. The State intends to operate the fish, wildlife, and recreation part of the "designated operating pool" for the benefit of recreation activities and fisheries management at Cedar Bluff Lake, and for minimal downstream releases for goose rearing activities and stream environment preservation.

d. The City of Russell's existing water storage right and contract with the Bureau would be unchanged, including the continuance of the existing accounting procedure for sharing of inflows and losses at Cedar Bluff Reservoir.

e. Subject to Congressional approval of the reformulated Cedar Bluff Unit, the District would be relieved of its contractual obligations under contract No. 0-07-70-W0064, formerly No. 14-06-700-2118, dated September 3, 1959, as amended. After this approval, the District would request the Chief Engineer, Division of Water Resources, State Board of Agriculture, for permission to disband the irrigation district as provided for under Kansas law.

f. The upper 34.9 feet of the existing conservation pool (consisting of 147,090 acre-feet between elevation 2109.1 and elevation

g. The Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks would continue to administer the reservoir lands and lake areas for fish and wildlife management purposes according to existing agreements, and to operate the Cedar Bluff State Park areas extended down to the water surface actually in the reservoir.

h. The Service would transfer to the State the ownership of all buildings, fixtures, and equipment associated with the fish hatchery for the State's operation for fish, wildlife, and related purposes.

i. The State would pursue its evaluation for the formulation of an Intensive Groundwater Use Control Area in the Smoky Hill River alluvium above Cedar Bluff Reservior.

j. The Bureau would conduct "Safety-of-Dams" (SOD) studies as it deems necessary concerning SOD issues. The contract for sale of the use of a portion of the conservation storage capacity to the State will acknowledge these SOD studies, and allow both parties to have the option to invalidate the sale contract, should that be determined to be the best solution to the SOD problems.

4. PROCEDURES

a. The Bureau intends to:

(1) Prepare a contract for the sale of storage capacity in the conservation pool of Cedar Bluff Reservoir to the State, based on the agreed upon criteria.

(2) Operate and maintain Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir for flood control in cooperation with the Corps of Engineers; for municipal water supply for the City of Russell; and for artificial recharge (environmental, domestic, municipal, industrial, and irrigation) and fish, wildlife, and recreation, in cooperation with the State.

(3) Designate a part of the existing conservation storage space in Cedar Bluff Reservoir (between elevation 2090.0 and elevation 2109.1) as a "designated operating pool", and the remaining portion of the existing conservation storage space in Cedar Bluff Reservoir (between elevation 2109.1 and elevation 2144.0) as a "joint-use pool".

(4) Operate the "designated operating pool" as a single pool with all three uses sharing proportionally in the inflows as well as the losses, so that a continuous accounting is maintained on how much water is available for the City of Russell's municipal water supply; for artificial recharge; and for fish, wildlife, and recreation.

(5) Operation "joint-use pool" for flood control; for water supply; and for fish, wildlife, and recreation. When the "joint-use pool" is empty, the OM&R costs would be assigned to flood control, and, if water should accumulate into the "joint-use pool", the OM&R costs would be paid by the State based on the highest level of water in the "joint-use pool" during the preceding calendar year. "OM&R Costs" shall mean and shall be limited to those necessary expenditures directly incurred for operation, maintenance, and replacement for the facilities necessary to fulfill the intent and purposes for which Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir was authorized and constructed including the reformulation of those purposes as herein comtemplated. Any net revenues from sale of water from the "joint-use pool" will be shared equally between the Bureau and the State.

(6) Accept, subject to Congressional approval and in lieu of the District's repayment obligation to the United States, an upfront payment of $365,424 from the State for purchase of the use of a portion of the conservation storage capacity in Cedar Bluff Reservoir. The payment will be made in two successive equal annual installments of $182,712.

(7)(a) Include in the proposed sale contract a provision for a payment by the State for its proportionate share of the OM&R costs for Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir. The State's share for the "designated operation pool" OM&R costs will be 7.33 percent of the total, or $15,000, whichever is greater. 27,039 A.F./368,689 A.F.=7.33%

(b) Should the water level ever rise into the "joint-use pool", the maximum amount of storage in that pool will be divided by the total reservoir storage of 368,689 acre-feet to find a percent of OM&R costs for the next year's payment to be paid by the State. Any OM&R costs associated with this pool will be in addition to the 7.33 percent for the "designated operating pool" as stated above, or a total of $15,000, whichever is greater.

(8) Continue unchanged the existing contract between the City of Russell and the Bureau, including continuance of the existing accounting procedure for sharing inflows and losses at Cedar Bluff Reservoir.

(9) Transfer to the District fee title to all real property and buildings at the District headquarters, along with all equipment and tools, for its agreement to abandon the distribution system at no further cost to the United States.

(10) Effect a declaration of abandonment of all easements for the District's distribution system. Filing of any formal rights-of-way abandonment documents will be each landowner's responsibility.

(11) Continue with Safety-of-Dams (SOD) studies on Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir to determine the most feasible corrective actions to be undertaken to resolve the SOD issues.

b. The Service intends to:

(1) Transfer to the State the ownership of all buildings, fixtures, and equipment associated with the fish hatchery for the State's operation for fish, wildlife, and related purposes.

(2) Transfer the water rights associated with the fish hatchery to the State for their use for fish, wildlife, and related purposes.

c. The State intends to:

(1) Enter into a contract of sale for the use of a portion of the conservation storage in Cedar Bluff Reservoir with the Bureau based on the agreed upon criteria.

(2) Promote the passage of the required legislation for the reformulated operation of the Cedar Bluff Unit through the United States Congress.

(3) Pursue its evaluation for the formulation of an Intensive Ground-water Use Control Area in the alluvium above Cedar Bluff Reservoir.

(4) Utilize the "designated operating pool" as a single pool for the City of Russell's municipal supply; for artificial recharge (environmental, domestic, municipal, industrial, and irrigation); and for fish, wildlife, and recreation purposes, with all three uses sharing proportionally inflows and losses, so that a continuous accounting is maintained on how much water is available for each of the three use categories.

(5) Utilize the "joint-use pool" for flood control; for water supply; and for fish, wildlife, and recreation. When the "joint use pool" is empty, the OM&R costs would be assigned to flood control, and when water accumulates into the "joint-use pool", the OM&R costs would be paid by the State based on the highest level of water in the "joint-use pool" during the preceding calendar year. "OM&R Costs" shall mean and shall be limited to those necessary expenditures directly incurred for operation, maintenance, and replacement for the facilities necessary to fulfill the intent and purposes for which Cedar Bluff Dam and Reservoir was authorized and constructed including the reformulation of those purposes as herein contemplated. Any net revenue from the sale of water from the "joint-use pool" will be shared equally between the Bureau and the State.

(6) Pay, in lieu of the repayment obligation between the Bureau and District, an upfront payment of $367,424 (payable in two successive equal payments of $182,712 per year) for the use of a portion of the conservation capacity in Cedar Bluff Reservoir.

(7) (a) Contract with the Bureau for payment of a share of the OM&R costs for Cedar Bluff Dam. The State's share of the "designated operating pool" OM&R costs will be 7.33 percent of the total, or $15,000, which is greater. 27,039 A.F./368,689 A.F.=7.33%

(b) Should the water level ever rise into the "joint-use pool", the maximum amount of storage in that pool will be divided by the total reservoir storage of 368,689 acre-feet to find a percent of OM&R costs for the next year's payment to be paid by the State. Any OM&R costs associated with this pool will be in addition to the 7.33 percent for the "designated operating pool" as stated above, or a total of $15,000, whichever is greater.

(8) Pursue a change in use application, and transfer the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service water right and the District's water right associated with the conservation storage space in Cedar Bluff Reservoir to the State for artificial recharge (environmental, domestic, municipal, industrial, and irrigation) and for fish, wildlife, and related purposes.

(9) Continue to operate the project lands and lake areas for fish, wildlife, and recreation purposes according to existing agreements.

(10) Extend the Cedar Bluff State Park areas down to the water level actually in the reservoir.

(11) Accept the ownership of all buildings, fixtures, and equipment associated with the fish hatchery for the state's operation for fish, wildlife, and related purposes.

d. The District intends to:

(1) Agree, subject to Congressional approval, to the State's payment of $365,424 to the Bureau for the use of a portion of the conservation storage capacity in Cedar Bluff Reservoir in lieu of its repayment obligation to the United States. In consideration of this debt relief, the District agrees to abandon the distribution system at its expense, and to disband as an irrigation district under Kansas law.

(2) Agree to the submission of an application for a change in use, and to the transfer of that portion of its water right associated with the conservation storage space in Cedar Bluff Reservoir to the State for artificial recharge (environmental, domestic, municipal, industrial, and irrigation) and for fish, wildlife, and recreation purposes.

(3) Accept transfer of ownership of all real property and buildings at the District headquarters, along with all equipment and tools, and agree to abandon all of the distribution system at no additional cost to the United States.

(4) Utilize all of its existing funds and any revenue from the sale of its real property, tools, and equipment to assist the individual landowners in affecting the abandonment of the distribution system and related facilities, at no additional cost to the United States, by reimbursing landowners with the remaining funds to accomplish satisfactory abandonment in accordance with District recommendations.

(5) Agree on behalf of all individual landowners to the declaration of abandonment of all construction, operation, and maintenance easements for the distribution system. Agree that any formal rights-of-way filings desired by landowners will be their individual responsibility.

(6) Support the passage of the required legislation for the reformulated Cedar Bluff Unit through the United States Congress.

5. INTERIM OPERATIONS

Commencing with the execution of this agreement and continuing until the reformulated Cedar Bluff Unit is authorized by the Congress and all contracts and transfer documents are executed between the Bureau, the Service, the State, and the District, the reservoir will be operated in accordance with the purposes for which it was authorized and constructed pursuant to the authority of the Secretary of the Interior and in general accord with the provisions of this Memorandum of Understanding.

6. CONDITIONS

a. This Memorandum of Understanding shall be effective upon the date that all parties have signed.

b. This Memorandum of Understanding is predicated upon the pursuit of the reformulation and operation of the Cedar Bluff Unit on a comprehensive basis. Should the initiative not move forward in a judicious manner due to failure of the Bureau, the Service, the State, or the District to carry out those actions described in paragraph 4 above, then the understanding contained herein shall become null and void.

c. This Memorandum of Understanding may be modified or terminated upon mutual agreement of the parties hereto by giving thirty (30) days written notice to all the parties signatory to this agreement. The Bureau and the State will jointly pursue legislation to implement the provisions of this agreement. If Congress fails to enact legislation approving the provisions of this agreement, then this agreement shall become null and void.

S. 54. A bill to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 with respect to the waiver of rights under such act without supervision, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AGE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT WAIVER PROTECTION ACT

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce S. 54, the Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act. Joining me as original cosponsors are the chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, Senator PRYOR, the ranking member of the Aging Committee, Senator HEINZ, as well as Senators KENNEDY, PELL, MATSUNAGA, SIMON, HARKIN, ADAMS, MIKULSKI, KOHL, DECONCINI, BURDICK, SHELBY, GLENN, and DODD. Representatives HAWKINS, PEPPER, and others are introducing identical legislation in the House of Representatives.

The Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act addresses the technical but very important issue of the extent to which individual employees may waive their rights under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA] without the supervision of a court or of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC]. The Waiver Protection Act will ensure that millions of older Americans are not coerced into waiving their rights to equal employment opportunity under Federal law.

When Congress passed the ADEA in 1967, it specifically incorporated enforcement procedures from the Fair Labor Standards Act [FLSA]. This fact was recognized by the Supreme Court in 1978 in the case of Lorillard versus Pons. The Department of Labor was responsible for enforcing the ADEA from 1967-79, and the Department did not permit individuals to waive their rights under the ADEA unless the waiver was supervised by the Department or by a Federal court. The Department still does not recognize as valid any waiver of FLSA rights that is not supervised either by the Department itself or by a Federal court.

However, the responsibility for enforcing ADEA was transferred from the Department of Labor to the EEOC in 1979. In 1985 the EEOC began work on a rule to permit employees to waive their rights under the ADEA without EEOC supervision. In 1987, a final rule was issued allowing unsupervised waivers, provided that they met certain general guidelines. In announcing the rule, the EEOC cited procedures used under title VII.

The EEOC's approach is wrong, both on legal grounds and as a matter of public policy. As I already mentioned, unsupervised waivers are prohibited under the FLSA, which Congress intended the ADEA to follow. On that basis alone, the EEOC's rule is improper. But the broader reason why unsupervised waivers should not be allowed under the ADEA can be seen by considering the context in which unsupervised waivers have been used.

Hearings before the Labor Subcommittee last year revealed that in increasing numbers, older workers are being asked to sign away their rights under the ADEA as part of an early retirement or exit incentive program. Some companies have opted to condition their offers on the signing of a waiver rather than taking the steps needed to ensure that the early retirement or exit incentive program is nondiscriminatory. This preemptive waiver of rights as a condition for receipt of benefits and before an employee may be aware of any pattern of discrimination is unfair and inconsistent with the intent of the ADEA. The employees have no reason to be on guard to protect their legal rights where no dispute has even arisen. Yet they are effectively coerced into signing away their statutory protections. It is this situation that the Waiver Protection Act seeks to correct.

The Waiver Protection Act addresses the existing problems by setting forth the following framework:

First, the bill provides that unsupervised waivers are valid under the ADEA only when they are obtained in certain precisely defined circumstances. Where an individual raises a bona fide claim—by filing a charge with the EEOC or a lawsuit in court, or by submitting a written allegation of age discrimination to the employer—then and only then may settlement of that claim include a valid waiver of ADEA rights notwithstanding the absence of supervision by a court or Federal agency. This change in current ADEA law is intended to recognize the analogous circumstance of an individual dispute under title VII. Once the two sides are truly in an adversarial posture, we assume that the individuals alleging discriminatory conduct are capable of making informed judgments about their rights.

At the same time, given Congress' continuing concern to protect older workers, we have specified certain minimum conditions that must be met in order for an unsupervised waiver of ADEA rights to be valid, including a reasonable time period to consider the offer, encouragement to consult with an attorney, and similar protections.

The second principle of the Waiver Protection Act is that unsupervised waivers are not valid as a precondition to accepting an early retirement incentive or other employment termination program that features an offer of enhanced benefits to a group or class of employees. This is precisely the kind of circumstance that sharply distinguishes ADEA claims from those arising under title VII. Employees who are offered such enhanced benefits typically have not filed a charge, are not involved in any dispute with their employer, and have no reason to be on guard to protect their rights. These employees deserve the full protection of the ADEA, and we are reaffirming here the judgment made by an earlier Congress that a waiver of their rights is inappropriate without the supervison of the Federal agency charged with protecting those rights, namely the EEOC.

Our intention is to separate the issue of waivers from the issue of whether a particular enhanced benefit program violates the ADEA. At the Labor Subcommittee hearing last year, we were advised that many companies regularly offer their employees exit incentive programs that are not conditioned upon execution of a waiver. Indeed one top corporate official stated to subcommittee staff that waivers could undermine the atmosphere of good will that is essential to such a voluntary program. He explained that a waiver request could discourage participation by arousing needless suspicions among employees. But apart from arguments of sound business practice, we believe it is inappropriate as a matter of law to use waivers of rights to avoid the underlying issue of whether a given early retirement or other exit incentive program discriminates on the basis of age. The EEOC currently is conducting a rulemaking on the validity of early retirement incentive and other enhanced benefit programs under the ADEA in order to give employers guidance on these important issues.

When the EEOC first issued its rule permitting the use of unsupervised waivers, Congress immediately expressed grave concern that the rule was without legal foundation and was contrary to public policy. In both 1987 and 1988, the Congress unanimously adopted amendments to the EEOC appropriations legislation, ordering the EEOC to suspend the waiver rule. But the need for a permanent legislative solution to this problem is clear.

Senator HEINZ and I introduced similar legislation at the end of the 100th Congress, but the bill was lost in the rush of last-minute business. The legislation we are introducing today has the support of major senior citizen groups, including the American Association of Retired Persons; the Older Women's League; the Gray Panthers, represented by the National Senior Citizens Law Center; the National Council of Senior Citizens; the National Council on the Aging; and the Villers Foundation. I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support from these six organizations be included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the end of my statement.

The Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act is compromise legislation. It is bipartisan legislation. It offers a responsible and equitable solution to a pressing problem. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Waiver Protection Act, and I urge swift action on this much needed measure.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 54

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. WAIVER PROVISION.

Section 7 of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. 626) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) An individual may not waive any right under this Act without the supervision of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission or a court, except in settlement of a bona fide claim alleging age discrimination of a kind prohibited under section 4 or section 15 of this Act.

"(2) A settlement of a bona fide claim pursuant to paragraph (1) may occur only if the waiver is knowing and voluntary and only if—

"(A) a settlement agreement applicable to the bona fide claim is in writing and specifically refers to rights or claims arising under this Act;

"(B) the agreement does not waive rights or claims that may arise after the date the agreement is entered into;

"(C) the rights or claims are waived in exchange for consideration in addition to anything of value—

"(i) to which the individual already is entitled; or

"(ii) that has been offered to a group or class of individuals under an early retirement incentive or other employment termination program;

"(D) the individual is given a reasonable period of time in which to consider the agreement; and

"(E) the individual is advised in writing to consult with an attorney prior to entering into the agreement.

"(3) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'bona fide claim' means—

"(A) a charge of age discrimination filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission;

"(B) an action alleging age discrimination filed in court by the individual or the individual's representative; or

"(C) a specific allegation of age discrimination communicated in good faith and in writing by the individual or the individual's representative directly to the employer (including, where applicable, a Federal agency), employment agency, or labor organization or their representatives.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) RULE ON WAIVERS.—Effective on the date of enactment of this Act, the rule on waivers issued by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and contained in section 1627.16(c) of title 29 of the Code of Federal Regulations shall have no force and effect.

JANUARY 25, 1989.

DEAR SENATOR METZENBAUM, SENATOR HEINZ AND SENATOR PRYOR: We the undersigned organizations, representing the interests of older Americans nationwide, wish to express our strong support for the legislation you introduced today, the Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989. This bill provides important and necessary protection for the rights of millions of older workers under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA).

The Waiver Protection Act establishes a process by which older workers may validly waive their ADEA rights without supervision by the EEOC or the courts. The bill makes clear that unsupervised ADEA waivers are valid only when obtained in settlement of a specific charge or claim of age discrimination. Therefore, employees could not be coerced into signing away their federal rights in order to participate in an early retirement or exit incentive program. Benefits are offered in these programs not in exchange for settlement of a claim of discrimination, but as an inducement to leave employment.

This legislation is necessary to counter the effects of a rule issued by the EEOC that would have validated ADEA waivers obtained even in circumstances where the employee was unable to know whether an ADEA claim existed. Although this rule was twice suspended by Congress, the EEOC's refusal to modify or rescind the rule provided many employers with a shield against ADEA lawsuits and, effectively, a license to discriminate against older workers.

We applaud your actions to preserve and enhance the rights of older workers to equal employment opportunity and look forward to working with you to insure passage of this important bill.

American Association of Retired Persons, Gray Panthers, represented by the National Senior Citizens' Law Center, Older Women's League, National Council on Aging, National Council of Senior Citizens, Villers Foundation.●

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from Ohio in introducing legislation to restrict the unsupervised waiver of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA] rights by workers taking early retirement. As the dramatic demographic changes of the coming decades begin to have their impact on the American workforce, it is important that we maintain our commitment to one of this Nation's most valued resources—the older worker. Pressures in the labor force pushing older workers into retirement at earlier and earlier ages led over two decades ago to the enactment of legislation to prevent age discrimination and limit the use of mandatory retirement. Two years ago we extended these protections by both eliminating mandatory retirement and ensuring older workers the right to accrue pension benefits after age 65. These new laws provide important reaffirmations of the policy objectives launched with enactment of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA] some 20 years ago.

While the Congress has been making it easier for older workers to remain in the workforce, many employers have been increasingly encouraging workers to take earlier retirements. Often these early retirements have been induced by offering financial incentives to older workers where companies have been reducing their workforces. In some cases, early retirement incentive programs have given early retirees attractive benefits and helped in humanely reducing the workforce. In other cases, early retirement incentive programs have accomplished the same discriminatory results that were barred under the ADEA. The structure of early retirement incentive programs is itself a age discrimination issue that must be resolved. In the context of this question, I have become increasingly concerned about the use of a pre-emptive waiver of a worker's ADEA rights as a condition for participation in an early retirement incentive program.

When Congress enacted the ADEA some 20 years ago, we patterned its enforcement provisions directly on those contained in the Fair Labor Standards Act [FLSA]. Under those FLSA provisions, employees may not waive their rights without the supervision of the Department of Labor. Regulations finalized by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in July 1987 would have allowed unsupervised waivers that were knowing and voluntary. The concerns I have about these regulations are exemplified in the case of one of my constituents, Mr. Ronald Hallas, who testified before the Aging Committee last year. When Mr. Hallas' employer was cutting back its workforce with an early retirement program, he was faced with a "Hobson's" choice: he could either sign a waiver and receive retirement benefits, or face permanent lay-off without pension or health benefits. Strictly speaking, this waiver was "knowing and voluntary"—it was written in plain English, and Mr. Hallas was given time to make his decision—however it was not without an element of coercion. A Federal District court used reasoning very similar to that of EEOC's to find that the waiver was "knowing and voluntary", and therefore a valid bar to enforcement of Mr. Hallas' rights under ADEA. Only after several additional years of litigation did a United States Court of Appeals overturn that decision. When Congress acted in October 1987 (and again last year in the fiscal year 1989 Commerce/Justice Appropriations bill) to suspend implementation of EEOC's regulations, we clearly chose to address this issue by developing clarifying legislation.

Unfortunately, while this moratorium is in effect, employers and their older employees have been left in limbo. Their uncertainties arise not only from not knowing how to interpret what force and effect waivers should be given, but also from a more important underlying confusion as to what types of early retirement programs are in compliance with the ADEA. The current situation forces both older workers and their employers to look to the courts for guidance on both these issues—a time-consuming and expensive proposition.

Therefore I am pleased to join with Senator METZENBAUM, and some of our other colleagues in introducing legislation designed to clear up confusion in both these areas. The Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989 will clarify the validity of ADEA waivers in a number of situations. In instances where older workers has a bona fide claim pending with their employer, the individual may waive his or her ADEA rights as long as certain statutory safeguards are followed. For cases arising out of early retirement incentive programs, any waivers signed by individuals would have to be supervised by the EEOC or the courts. In my judgment, this new legislation will adequately protect the rights of older workers while at the same time provide their employers with both the guidance they need to design equitable early retirement incentive programs as well as the flexibility to negotiate with employees without undue Government interference.

I urge my colleagues to support us in this effort by giving this legislation full consideration as expeditiously as possible.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the proposed Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989. This legislation would prohibit unsupervised waivers of the rights provided to older workers under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA] except in limited situations where certain safeguards were in place for those workers. In addition, the bill would nullify a ruling of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC] to permit unsupervised waivers.

More than two decades ago, the Congress established critically needed protections for older working Americans against age discrimination by enacting into law the ADEA. As a result of the law, age, in and of itself, became an unacceptable basis for laying off an older worker.

Under the ADEA, our Nation has made important strides in reducing age discrimination and in promoting employment opportunities for older Americans. Nevertheless, during this period of rapid economic change, where corporate downsizings have become commonplace, the ones who have given the most in the workplace—older workers—often are at the greatest risk of getting the least. Against this background, unsupervised waivers of older workers' rights under the ADEA, except under a very narrow set of carefully considered circumstances, represent a potentially dangerous blow to the very protections older workers most need at this time.

Although I share the view that the ADEA invalidates any waiver of an older worker's rights unless it is supervised by the EEOC or a court, a number of recent court decisions have clouded this issue. To make matters worse, the EEOC has taken the position that unsupervised waivers are permissible under the law. Not surprisingly, employers are uncertain about Federal policy in this area, while the rights of older workers under the ADEA are being placed at unnecessary risk.

This legislation would clarify congressional intent with respect to unsupervised waivers. First, to ensure that older workers are not coerced into signing away their rights, with the exception described below, this bill would prohibit waivers of ADEA rights unless supervised by the EEOC or a court. This provision would prevent efforts to secure a waiver from an older worker in exchange for benefits wrongly withheld or as part of a discriminatory early retirement package.

Second, in recognition that supervision by the EEOC or a court is not always needed, this legislation would establish an exception to the above prohibition against unsupervised waivers provided specified standards were met. The exception would apply to circumstances involving the settlement of a bona fide age discrimination claim where the claimant would presumably be in a position to make a fully informed decision.

Under this provision, the settlement of an age discrimination claim must be in writing, may not waive rights prospectively and cannot waive rights in exchange for benefits to which the claimant is already entitled. In addition, the older worker must be given a reasonable period of time to consider the terms of the settlement and be advised in writing to consult with an attorney.

Finally, this bill would nullify once and for all a rule that the EEOC issued in August 1987 to permit unsupervised waivers. Twice, already, due to very serious concerns about the damage this rule would have done to the protections of older workers against age discrimination, the Congress has moved to suspend the rule during fiscal year 1988 and fiscal year 1989.

Mr. President, it is clear that this measure is needed to settle the uncertainty that has arisen regarding the legal basis of unsupervised waivers. This bill would reaffirm the longstanding congressional prohibition against such waivers except in certain limited situations where supervision is not needed. This measure is supported by the American Association of Retired Persons and the National Senior Citizens Law Center. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.●

● Mr. KENNEDY. The Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989 is an essential piece of legislation for preserving the rights of America's older workers.

Often employers have reason to reduce their work forces through voluntary incentive plans. In most cases, an agreement can be reached that benefits both the employer and the older worker who can take advantage of an attractive early retirement package. In a few unfortunate cases, however, employers have forced unsuspecting employees to sign away their civil rights in exchange for early retirement benefits. The trusting employee may have no reason to think that he has been a victim of age discrimination, and yet, the implementation of the reduction in force may well have violated Federal discrimination law.

Last spring, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Subcommittee on Labor heard the tragic story of Nelson Marans, who, after almost 30 years of outstanding service to W.R. Grace & Co., was fired for refusing to sign away his rights in exchange for an enhanced early retirement package. Donald J. Graham, at age 55, accepted Pet, Inc.'s, offer of enhanced benefits when his job was eliminated; he signed away his rights after his attorney reminded him of the harsh reality that a lawsuit could take years and might cost more than the benefits he would receive. William Terrell did not consult an attorney when Xerox terminated him and other older workers during an involuntary reduction in force; he did not know his rights when he signed a paper waiving all his claims against the company. Mr. Terrell, at age 56, spent 8 months looking for a job at a lower wage in a different field. He later suffered a heart attack that may have resulted from stress relating to his employment situation.

It is in precisely these kinds of cases that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission should step in to safeguard the rights of the employee. When the Age Discrimination in Employment Act was signed into law, Congress incorporated certain enforcement provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, including the requirement that a waiver of an employee's rights be supervised. Yet the EEOC has taken the opposite position—under a rule issued in 1987, the EEOC gave notice that it will turn its back on the rights of older employees by recognizing as valid waivers that are not supervised by the Federal Government or a court. In so doing, it issued an open invitation to employers to use manipulative tactics to persuade employees to waive their rights without advise of attorney.

Congress has stepped in twice to void the EEOC's rule and to protect the rights of older employees. This had been a bipartisan effort, as is this legislation, which will clearly define the limited instances in which employee waivers will be permitted in ADEA cases.

I urge the Senate to adopt this legislation.●

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989. This important legislation simply reinforces the original intent of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 [ADEA], which specifically prohibits employers from treating employees differently on the basis of age. The proposed legislation generally requires that waiver of employment rights must be supervised, or that the employee be given a reasonable time to seek legal advice. Federal law already requires supervision of employment right waivers in other areas. The Employment Waiver Protection Act would simply extend that rule to the waiver of employment rights of millions of older workers under the ADEA.

It is important to note that this issue is not new and has been addressed by prior legislative action. Unfortunately, Congress has only delayed making a permanent decision by annually suspending the 1987 ADEA unsupervised waiver rule promulgated by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC].

The unsupervised waiver rule suspensions passed by unanimous votes on the fiscal years 1988 and 1989 EEOC appropriations legislation. Delay has not satisfied either the proponents or opponents of this act. Immediate action is needed, and I applaud Senator METZENBAUM for his perseverance and leadership on this and other important older worker issues.

This principal issue is one of informed consent prior to waiver of statutory rights. Unless represented, the typical employee does not have full knowledge of facts necessary to make an intelligent decision, and could be coerced by the employer to relinquish his or her rights under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. In all other similar instances, Congress and the courts have determined that either the burden of full disclosure will be upon the employer, or no waiver is valid unless approved by the responsible Federal agency. To do otherwise would undermine the very purpose of the ADEA; such a contrary holding would actually encourage employers to place their older employees in an inferior bargaining position. Hence, unsupervised waivers place older workers in jeopardy of unknowingly throwing away their statutorily guaranteed rights when negotiating early retirement incentives.

This bill provides that unsupervised waivers are valid under the ADEA only when an individual has expressly indicated that he or she knows he or she may have an age discrimination claim against his employer. For the purposes of this act, unsupervised waivers will only be allowed in cases in which the employee raises a bona fide claim of age discrimination—either by filing an ADEA charge with the EEOC or by submitting a written allegation of age discrimination to the employer. Waivers of ADEA rights in cases of bona fide claims of age discrimination need no supervision.

However, should an employer wish to obtain a legally binding waiver of ADEA rights in cases not involving a bona fide claim of age discrimination, that waiver must be supervised by the EEOC. As stated earlier by Senator METZENBAUM, an ever increasing number of companies condition their early retirement and exit incentives upon release of their rights under the ADEA.

Immediate congressional intervention is needed due to the recent inability of some Federal courts to correctly follow a higher court ruling which held that Congress specifically incorporated enforcement procedures from the Fair Labor Standards Act when it passed the ADEA in 1967. Instead of following the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in Lorillard versus Pons (1978), three Federal circuit courts have ignored the Supreme Court's holding or errantly limited it to the limited fact situations in which the ADEA enforcement procedure asserted was the right to a jury trial. Lorillard more correctly stands for the proposition that all FLSA enforcement procedures were incorporated by Congress into the ADEA, including the requirement that employment rights waivers must be supervised.

Moreover, these inferior courts have also used the EEOC's interpretation of prior case law and the EEOC proposed rule itself as precedent. In so doing, these courts relied on an EEOC that has been often criticized for its controversial enforcement of the ADEA.

The EEOC argues that requiring supervision will increase ADEA enforcement costs and would deter employers from offering enhanced compensation and benefit packages to induce employees to leave voluntarily. The EEOC contends that if this legislation is enacted, it would have an affirmative obligation to actively supervise all waivers.

While their argument appears to have merit, the reality is that EEOC has never actively supervised waivers before the waiver is signed by an employee and, therefore, only hypothesizes that enforcement costs would increase should this bill become law. The EEOC's experience has actually occurred only when an employee had filed an EEOC charge of age discrimination or when the employee had notified an employer that he or she may have a claim against the employer for age discrimination. In the case of the title VII waiver EEOC supervision requirement, a requirement virtually identical to that proposed here, the cost of EEOC enforcement actually decreased. Furthermore, the congressional purpose behind the statutory employment rights waiver was to encourage employers to provide amicable settlements with their employees. Supervised waivers provide employers with greater certainty and protection from subsequent litigation.

In conclusion, I would again like to thank Senator METZENBAUM and Senator HEINZ for their vigilance in the protection of the rights of older workers. I assure them that I will maintain my active support for their efforts as I have every time the Senate has considered this critical issue involving the rights of older American workers. I strongly urge all my colleagues in the Senate and the House of Representatives to support the passage of the Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989.●

● Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I am delighted to join with Senator METZENBAUM and other colleagues in introducing the Age Discrimination in Employment Waiver Protection Act of 1989.

This legislation, Mr. President, is designed to prevent older workers from being pressured or fooled into waiving the rights that were guaranteed them under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. It is both a reaffirmation of the protections provided by that act and a reassertion of the position taken by the Congress in 1987 and 1988. While I am proud to support this legislation I am, to be honest, disturbed by the fact that we need to pass it. Despite the clear intent of the law, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has decided that if a person says they want to waive their rights under the law, then there is no need to supervise the waiver, even though it may have been made under conditions conducive to coercion.

Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to return the law to the status it enjoyed when the Congress passed the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. This bill imposes no new burden on business nor does it reduce or expand the rights of individual employees. It simply reaffirms the rights and protections which were contained in the original law and, once again, rebuffs the efforts of the EEOC to allow undue pressure to be placed on employees. It assures that when workers elect to waive their rights, they do so either in the context of an existing bona fide claim or under the supervision of the EEOC or a court.

Mr. President, this is a simple but necessary bill. I urge my colleagues to support it.●

By Mr. WILSON:

S. 55. A bill to increase the availability of quality affordable child care, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

KIDS IN DAY CARE SERVICES ACT

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise to reintroduce comprehensive child care legislation which I sponsored last Congress. I am taking this action for several reasons.

In the final days of the 100th Congress, in the midst of what often times becamse quite a spirited debate, the Senate considered child care legislation offered by my colleague from Connecticut, Senator DODD. The "Act for Better Child Care," or its more familiar, publicized name, the ABC bill, became the focus of this body, if only for political reasons, for a brief period.

Frankly, the important issue of child care deserved much more time, much more careful thought. Nonetheless, in the few days that we were able to review the ABC bill, I believe it became increasingly apparent to Members on both sides of the aisle, that the bill's approach to child care was, notwithstanding the good intentions of its sponsors, misguided.

At some point this year we may be asked to consider similar legislation again. However, many of the concerns raised during the debate last Congress remain unaddressed.

I am hopeful that the door to a child care compromise has not been shut. No one would relish a repeat of the impasse which we encountered last fall.

I am confident that if given the opportunity, Congress can develop a bipartisan child care bill. As a point from which to begin the process toward consensus, I offer, once more, the "KIDS in Day-Care Services Act," or for the sake of an acronym, the kids bill.

If the Chair would indulge me, I would like to outline the major provisions of the kids bill.

Mr. President, the Dependent Care Planning and Development Program was originally developed to assist States for activities related to dependent care resource and referral systems and school-age child care services. The kids bill would build upon this program and reform it into a sizable State block grant program.

A total of $1.6 billion would be authorized over 4 years for State child care services. A variety of activities could be underwritten including afterschool programs, child care training for seniors, or programs for the temporary care of sick children.

Perhaps most important is that States, not a Federal bureaucrat, would make funding decisions.

That is not to say that the States would not be required to perform certain tasks. To the contrary, there are several conditions of funding which the States would have to meet. For example, a system for criminal and child abuse records checks for group-based and family-based child care must be established. Additionally, alleged child abuse cases would have to be investigated. Regular communications with child care providers and parents must be undertaken.

A further condition for funding is the development of standards for family-based and group-based child care-standards which dictate licensing requirements, inspection and certification procedures, staff to child ratios, and minimum competency requirements for group-based child care providers.

But let me be clear on this point. The States, not an ad hoc national commission, would set these standards. This is an important difference between the kids bill and the ABC bill.

Indeed, if we could resolve the very question of which entity should set standards, a Federal child care commission or a State, much of the road toward a child care bill would be paved. It is on this issue, however, where the most divergent views exist.

Frankly, I believe the one-size-fits-all approach adopted by the ABC bill is neither reasonable nor workable. If we adopt a solution which limits a State's ability to be responsive to its unique needs, I'm afraid that the result would be the disruption of present services and the creation of yet another blockade to the establishment of new child care services.

Mr. President, another point of departure from the ABC bill is that the kids bill provides tax relief to those who, because of fiscal limitations, cannot afford child care. I speak of our Nation's low and modest income families.

Clearly, current tax laws with respect to child care does not benefit American working families of limited means. As a practical matter, the child and dependent care tax credit with its present limits is preconditioned upon a rather sizable child care outlay in order to be of maximum benefit. Therefore, for low income families, the dependent care tax credit is not useful.

That is why the kids bill would create a new refundable children's tax credit for low and modest income families. Families with incomes under $16,000 per year, rising gradually to $20,000 over 4 years, would be provided with a $750 per child credit, up to $1,500, for child care.

For those families who do not earn enough income to pay taxes, but for whom access to child care services is equally important, the kids bill would make the present child and dependent care tax credit refundable.

Under the kids bill, parents could select their child care provider without losing their eligibility for either tax credit. This contrasts sharply with the ABC bill which would force parents to use any public assistance they obtained only for those services rendered by child care providers who meet Federal standards.

Another difference between the ABC bill and the kids bill is that my legislation would encourage private sector involvement in the solution to shortage of child care. To place purchasing power in the hands of families via a tax credit becomes futile if there are no child care services to purchase.

Simply, if we are ever to truly increase the availability of child care, we must encourage business to support personnel practices and policies responsive to the needs of the changing work force. That means the establishment of more on-site or near-site child care facilities.

Unhappily, recent studies have shown that business has been slow to respond to this need. When child care services have been provided to employees, they have usually consisted solely of information and referral services.

Even though the number of employer-sponsored child care facilities continues to rise, supply has not kept pace with demand. I do not believe the reason for this problem can be attributed to any single factor. It is more likely a combination of many.

For example, after a review of the Internal Revenue Code, one finds few, if any, provisions which provide incentive to a corporation, let alone a small business with limited capital, to establish a child care center for its employees.

Consider that fact and examine the astronomical costs of liability insurance, I am sure anyone would be surprised to find employer-sponsored day care facilities at all.

To Fortune 500 companies, underwriting liability or establishing child care facilities for their employees comes much easier than to our Nation's small business men and women. For this reason, I believe we must offer child care incentives to the small business sector of our economy. It is here where tomorrow's jobs will be created. It is small business which will offer employment opportunity to the great influx of working mothers expected in the job market by the year 2000.

Accordingly, the kids bill would create a small business tax credit of up to 25 percent, up to $100,000, for expenses related to the establishment of on-site or near-site child care facilities.

Additionally, to help reduce the liability barrier which is oftentimes too great for most businesses to overcome, the kids bill would authorize $100 million in funding for the establishment of liability risk retention groups.

Briefly, Mr. President, other provisions of the kids bill include the establishment of $25 million revolving loan fund to improve day care facilities, a study on the feasibility of offering child care as a benefit to Federal employees, and a comprehensive examination of Federal day care efforts.

To recognize those employers who have been responsive to the needs of working parents under their employ, the kids bill would create a new President's Award for Excellence in Child Care.

And, to enlist the support of one of the Nation's most valuable resources, our senior citizens, the kids bill would exempt earnings received for the provision of child care under the Social Security earnings test for recipients age 62 through 69.

Mr. President, I have outlined most of the provisions of the kids bill. I would ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill's content and its full text be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

One of the points on which I haven't elaborated is that of cost. I believe any child care bill which Congress considers should provide, for the lack of a better phrase, the biggest bang for the buck. Further, it must reflect the fiscal perimeters under which we must operate.

I believe the kids bill meets both criteria.

First, its approach is comprehensive in nature and therefore, provides for a wiser investment of Federal funds or the bigger bang, if you will. As I have stated, the kids bill authorizes funding for a block grant program to the States, tax incentives for small business, a liability risk pool, and tax credits for low and modest families.

By contrast, the ABC bill would authorize $2.5 billion annually primarily for the purchase of child care slots. No incentive is offered to the States to develop child care programs. No assistance is offered to business to establish child care facilities.

Above all, no guarantee of access to child care services is granted to low income families. Instead, the ABC bill would underwrite about 750,000 child care slots nationwide. To demonstrate the inadequacy of this approach, Mr. President, consider that the State of California alone requires nearly 1 million slots. What hope would that offer to families in the remaining 49 States?

The second test which any child care bill must meet is that of fiscal responsibility. The kids bill contains two important revenue provisions to help offset the costs associated with its enactment.

To ensure that Federal programs and tax incentives will be directed to those families with the greatest need, the kids bill would gradually reduce the dependent care tax credit for those taxpayers whose adjusted gross incomes exceed $50,000 per year, eliminating the credit completely for those families with adjusted gross incomes over $78,500 per year. According to the Congressional Budget Office, this provision will save the Treasury approximately $2.1 billion over 4 years and affect less than 20 percent of American taxpayers.

A second revenue provision which I have included in the kids bill is one which has received considerable attention in recent weeks. Similar to the proposals included in President Reagan's fiscal year 1990 budget and endorsed by a number of environmental organizations, the kids bill would place a $1 per pound fee, increasing to $4 in fiscal year 1993, on ozone depleting chemicals.

By way of background, under the Montreal protocol, the United States has agreed to restrict production and usage of chlorofluorocarbons [CFC's] and halons. The net result will be a safer environment for future generations to enjoy.

However, as a result of the Montreal protocol and the quota allocation system established thereunder, producers of CFC's and halons are likely to realize a substantial windfall, estimated as high as $6 billion.

Specifically, under the allocated quota system, the supply of CFC's and halons will be restricted. Since demand for these chemicals by user industries is expected to continue to increase, competition for the restricted CFC and halon supplies should result in firms paying higher prices for these chemicals. Although some industries will be able to shift to alternative materials, many will have to use CFC's and halons while paying higher prices. The result is that chemical producers would realize substantial profits.

By reducing the size of the windfall gains to producers through the ozone fee, the kids bill would remove the incentive to delay the introduction of chemical substitutes. Further, in order to ensure continued research on substitutes, the kids bill would establish a $300 million alternative chemical research fund. Funding would support ongoing research efforts in six vital areas.

I am told by the Environmental protection Agency [EPA] that the total revenue raised from the ozone depleting chemical fee would exceed $2.6 billion over 4 years, and the impact of an ozone depleting chemicals fee upon consumers would be negligible.

When combined with the proposed elimination of the dependent care tax credit for upper income taxpayers, the total 4-year cost of the kids bill, excluding revenue lost from the small business tax credit, would be less than $2 billion.

That's $8 billion less than the most conservative cost estimates of the ABC bill.

Mr. President, throughout my remarks today, I have discussed my legislation, the kids bill, which I hope will have the support of many of my colleagues. But, I have also identified the differences which exist between the approach adopted by proponents of the ABC bill and that which I believe to be the better course.

I remain optimistic that at some point these two approaches will become one, and we will have developed a child care bill which can be supported at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. Certainly, as we consider this bill, we must be mindful that the President has expressed serious concerns about the ABC bill.

If this exercise in child care which we are about to undertake is truly born of desire to assist the American working family, we must be willing to make difficult choices. To succeed, we must check the interest groups and the demagoguery cloaked in emotion at the door, roll up our sleeves, and make every effort to resolve the contentious issues.

At a child care hearing which I attended yesterday, I believe there was an expressed willingness by members on both sides of the aisle to forge a solution. One which we can be proud of, one which the President can sign into law, and most importantly, one which will help, not hurt, millions of families across this country, who, by no fault of their own, must face the question daily, who will watch our children?

If the skeptics label this task too impossible, then I would ask my colleagues to remember what they said about a little idea called welfare reform when President Reagan arrived in Washington 8 years ago.

Today, I would urge all involved in this debate to prove the skeptics wrong once more and pass comprehensive child care legislation in the 101st Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS OF THE WILSON KIDS BILL

DEPENDENT CARE PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Reforms current Dependent Care Planning and Development Progam into $400 million grant program to the States for the development of child care services (requires 15 percent State funding match).

Requires States to make grants to eligible entities for at least two of the following child care projects:

Certificate/voucher program for low and modest income families;

Expansion of existing child care programs if such programs are consistent with the purposes of the KIDS Bill;

Establishment/operation of community or neighborhood child care centers;

After-school programs;

Programs to recruit/train seniors as child care providers;

Child care programs for migrant worker families;

Programs for the temporary care of sick children;

Training programs for child care providers; or Any project consistent with the purposes of the KIDS bill.

STATE RESPONSIBILITIES

As a condition for receipt of program funds, States must:

Provide technical assistance to eligible entities;

Establish a system for criminal and child abuse records checks for group-based and family-based child care;

Investigate alleged child abuse in child care projects receiving assistance;

Coordinate projects receiving assistance under the KIDS Bill with existing programs;

Establish regular communications with registered, licensed, and accredited child care providers; and Establish a consumer education program to inform parents and public about standards and programs.

STATE STANDARDS

A further condition for receipt of Dependent Care Program funding is that States must establish standards for child care in both family and group-based settings including:

Licensing/registration standards for family-based and group-based child care;

Inspection/certification of family-based and group-based child care;

Minimum competency requirements, including health and first aid training, for child care center directors/teachers/operators;

Staff/child ratios for child care centers; and Thresholds for family/group-based child care (the point at which a family-based child care provider becomes a group-based provider, measured by the number of children).

LIABILITY

Authorizes $100 million for child care liability risk retention groups.

FAMILY-BASED COMPLIANCE WITH STATE STANDARDS

Authorizes $25 million revolving loan fund for capital improvements to family-based child care facilities.

SENIORS AS CHILD CARE PROVIDERS

Exempts from the Social Security earnings test for recipients age 62 through 69 income earned from the provision of child care.

TAX CREDITS

Makes current Dependent Care Tax Credit refundable;

Creates new refundable Children's Tax Credit providing families with incomes of $16,000 and under (rising to $20,000 over four years) a credit up to $750 per child under age five up to $1,500; and Provides for a new small business tax credit of up to 25 percent of expenses up to $100,000 for the establishment of an on-site or near-site child care facility.

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to report to Congress regarding federal and state child care efforts;

Requires States to report to the Secretary of Health and Human Services regarding child care activities to ensure compliance with requirements of KIDS Bill; and Requires Office of Personnel Management to conduct a feasibility study of offering child care as a benefit to federal workers.

PRESIDENT'S AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN CHILD CARE

Establishes Presidential Award to recognize employers who have successfully implemented personnel programs and policies responsive to the child care needs of their workers.

SENSE OF THE SENATE

Expresses the sense of the Senate that the most desirable child care legislation would maintain State flexibility in developing programs, remove barriers encountered by business in providing child care, and preserve parental choice in selecting child care services.

RESEARCH FUND FOR CHEMICAL ALTERNATIVES

Establishes $420 million research fund to assist user industries and chemical producers in developing alternatives to ozone depleting chemicals.

OFFSET

Phases out Dependent Care Tax Credit for families with adjusted gross incomes of $50,000, gradually eliminating the credit for those with adjusted gross incomes of $78,500 or more; and Imposes $1 per pound excise tax on ozone depleting chemicals, increasing to $4 per pound in Fiscal Year 1990.

By Mr. KERRY:

S. 57. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act to control certain sources of sulfur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen to reduce acid deposition, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works.

NATIONAL ACID RAIN CONTROL ACT OF 1989

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce my first bill of the 101st Congress. The legislation addresses a problem that has plagued our planet for far too long and needs immediate attention before it is too late. An issue that has concerned me for quite some time is air pollution; specifically, acid rain and greenhouse gases. In fact for that reason, Mr. President, the first legislation I introduced in the 100th Congress also dealt with the same subject.

Mr. President, the evidence is all too clear—acid rain and CO_2 emissions have and continue to wreak havoc on our environment and produce devastating health effects on our citizens. Although the United States has made some definitive efforts to improve the air we breathe, experts say that we still emit roughly 15 percent of the world's sulfur dioxide [SO_2], 25 percent of the globe's nitrogen oxide [NO_x], and 25 percent of the Earth's carbon dioxide [CO_2]. These three pollutants are the major sources of the greenhouse effect, ground level ozone, and acid rain. Of the greenhouse gases, carbon dioxide emitted when fossil fuels are burned, is the largest contributor to global warming. When CO_2 and other greenhouse gases are released into the air, they trap the heat in the atmosphere and produce a global warming. Predictions of the magnitude of the consequences from climate warming vary, but there is a general consensus that if the Earth's temperature continues to rise, we will witness major climatic changes such as shifting rainfall and hurricane patterns, sea level rise resulting in flooding of our coasts, and heatwaves and drought upsetting agriculture. NO_x which come primarily from auto emissions and powerplants is a contributor to tropospheric (ground level) ozone, a major public health problem which has been linked to long-term lung damage. Furthermore, NO_x is a key component of acid rain and threatens marine life and devastates forests. And SO_2 the major culprit of acid rain comes from the burning of fossil fuels primarily from powerplants and is known as the principal air pollutant killing rivers and lakes, devastating forests, and destroying buildings.

The United States cannot reduce air pollutants worldwide, but as the primary contributor we can act as a model and lead the world in addressing the Earth's environmental woes. The legislation I am introducing today begins on our own domestic front and if enacted will display our own commitment. By the year 2000 the legislation will reduce the emissions of SO_2 by 12 million tons per year nationally or by 50 percent; it will reduce NO_x by 3 million tons per year; cut CO_2 emissions by 90 million tons per year, while saving roughly 600,000 barrels of oil a day. The fuels that generate CO_2 also emit NO_x and SO_2 and this legislation seeks to reduce these pollutants in a cohesive manner.

For over a decade Congress has debated the issues associated with acid deposition. But today we are told that the winds are changing and they appear to be blowing in the direction of real action aimed at addressing this serious concern. For example, at the end of the 100th Congress we were close to passing compromise acid rain legislation; for the first time in history acid rain was a major issue in a Presidential campaign; we have a President who has suggested that the time for study is over and now is the time to end acid rain; we have a Chief of Staff in the White House with whom I have worked at the National Governor's Association, to develop a national acid rain policy, and who has testified before Congress on the need to end acid rain; and today citizens throughout the Nation are becoming more educated than ever before on the human and environmental dangers associated with air pollutants. Now is the time for action and on this the first day of our new legislative session I call upon my colleagues to help in achieving passage of necessary environmental legislation.

Mr. President, while the endless debate has been raging about acid rain, Massachusetts and other States—particularly Northeastern States, have been suffering damage. In fact just last month, frustrated by the absence of national clean air legislation, Massachusetts went ahead to propose tough new restrictions designed to reduce acid rain emission within the State. The regulations stem from a 1985 law, on which I had the pleasure to work as the Massachusetts Lieutenant Governor, which caps the amount of sulfur dioxide allowed to be emitted in the State. The new proposed regulations are expected to reduce SO_2 emissions by 26 percent by the mid-1990's. Some may ask why Massachusetts is willing to impose such tough standards on itself, when it only contributes 1.3 percent of the SO_2 nationwide, particularly when the majority of SO_2 that falls on the State comes from other States. The answer is simple—the State's rivers, lakes, and streams, forests, buildings, and now even marine life have suffered for far too long from the ill effects of acid rain. Therefore even the modest improvements that such a cap can produce is necessary. And furthermore, Mr. President, in Massachusetts we recognize that our emissions do flow downwind to neighboring States, and it is our responsibility to curb these emissions.

Since 1983, an ongoing study has been conducted in Massachusetts by the Massachusetts acid rain monitoring project, to put together a data base with which to study the magnitude of acid rain's effects on our surface waters. Last year, phase two of the study was released, and the findings are alarming. Of the 1,200 bodies of water tested 64 percent were found to be vulnerable to acid deposition, 20 percent were critically sensitive, and 5 percent were found to be acidified or basically dead. In essence, in the 5 years since the collection of this data began, the problem has gotten worse.

The devastating consequences of acid deposition are not solely felt by estuaries, rivers, and other bodies of water, aquatic life, forests, and soils. In Massachusetts for example, approximately $13 million is being spent each year to protect and restore statuaries and buildings eaten away by acidic moisture. In order to provide safe drinking water the State spends $1.2 million per year to ensure that tap water from the Quabbin Reservoir, the main water supply for the metropolitan Boston area, does not exceed safe levels of toxics such as lead from pipes corroded by the acidity of the water in the reservoir. Basically, if we take into account the health, ecological, and financial impact of this damage and project it on a national scale, the deterioration and its cost become enormous.

Although Massachusetts has responded to this information definitively by enacting one of the most comprehensive acid rain control bills in the country which mandates substantial reductions in both sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions within the State, they cannot do it alone. State action should not serve as a substitute to fix America's problem of acid rain, it should act as a component of a larger national program. The Federal Government must lead the Nation as a whole on this issue.

But one can look beyond Massachusetts to witness the damage associated with acid rain. Close to home on Camels Hump in neighboring Vermont there has been a 40- to 70-percent decrease in the life expectancy of spruce trees over the past 20 years. In a 1983 survey, 10 to 30 percent of the standing red spruce in the Catskill, Adirondack, and Green and White Mountain forests were dead with greatest morality at the highest altitudes.

In the Chesapeake Bay nutrients from acid deposition are literally choking marine life. On Mount Mitchell in North Carolina where just 5 years ago a spruce forest covered the peak, one finds raspberry bushes, clumps of sedge, and a few young trees. According to an American Forestry Association official, conditions in southern Appalachia show the same damaging signs as forest damage in the German Black Forest. And let me tell you Mr. President, as a first hand observer of the Black Forest damage, that is a truly frightening prospect.

I visited the Black Forest 6 years ago and what I found was a nation's heritage being destroyed by acid rain. In fact, according to German forestry officials 80 percent of the Bavarian Alps is damaged, 97 percent of the trees, ages 100 to 120 years, are dying including evergreens, birches, and furs, and 41 percent of the young trees are already showing signs of sickness.

Swiss scientists with whom I have visited, report that alpine lakes are virtually dead and cannot support fish life. In Norway, scientists estimate that by the year 2000 salmon will no longer inhabit their coastal waters or rivers due to acid rain pollution. The Swedes tell us that a majority of their lakes are acidified. In Warsaw scientists claim that air pollution is "melting their buildings." And in Greece according to engineers the famous Parthenon is literally deteriorating because of air pollution. And in nearby Quebec, a 1986 study found that 82 percent of the sugar maples in one area were dead or dying, making maple sugar production the lowest in centuries.

For the past 8 years, the response by the Reagan administration has been one study after another, and in their view, studies addressed the problem adequately. Mr. President, as I have just illustrated, the data is in—globally, the questions have been answered, and now is the time for some tough action.

And let me add Mr. President, that while the data is in, let us not forget about our responsibility as a Nation to our good neighbors to the north in Canada. Canada has made it clear over the past few years that the goal to achieve acid rain reductions both from within its own country as well as across its borders is one of Canada's highest priorities. I quote Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, "We know the cause of acid rain, we know the consequences and we know the cure. The Government of Canada is firmly determined to end the blight of acid rain—and expects the same genuine resolve from the United States of America."

I am very hopeful that President Bush will recognize the political, environmental, and economical benefits in addressing this issue, and will use the opportunity to act upon his campaign promise and provide the necessary leadership to solve our acid rain problem.

The bill I am introducing today, the Acid Rain Control Act of 1989, stems from my previous experience as a member of the National Governor's Association Acid Rain Task Force, while I served as Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts. It is also based on observations I made as chairman of the New England Governor's Acid Rain Working Group, during a fact finding tour in Europe in 1984, where I witnessed the devastating effects of acid deposition on Europe's forests and of course from hearings I chaired last Congress on the effects of acid rain on United States-Canadian relations and the effects of acid rain on marine life.

My legislation is based on the fundamental notion that: sulfur dioxide emissions need to be cut approximately in half; nitrogen oxide emissions must be reduced; reductions should be achieved by the year 2000; and States should be given flexibility in designing their own methods to reach mandated reductions.

However, the economic implications of a national control program and its impact on various regions of the country have unfortunately clouded the acid rain debate. A lesson that we learned through the NGA task force, is that in order to produce effective action, a national consensus is necessary. And, Mr. President, we developed a constructive, general approach which I have incorporated into my bill.

There is little doubt that in a perfect world an acid rain reduction bill would have the polluters pay all the costs associated with the damage. However, that approach is not a reality today, nor was it 6 years ago when I was Lieutenant Governor. Consequently, based on my experience my bill suggests that there should be a broad sharing of the financial burden among producers of acid rain and those who will benefit from its reduction, the Nation as a whole. Acid rain is a national dilemma; and we want to mitigate to the greatest extent possible, the cost for all parties involved. The plan proposed in my legislation, I believe, reflects the best of the "polluter pays" concept without bankrupting companies or displacing workers.

To do this my bill establishes a fund to subsidize the costs of capital equipment to reduce emissions based on a payment of approximately $147 per ton reduced. The payment formula would favor the installation of capital equipment to avoid coal miner job displacement while fixing the subsidy at a level which will permit the use of newer and less costly technologies. To pay for the fund the bill includes a cost sharing mechanism based on a graduated fee—a reward system so to speak in which States that emit the most pollution will pay the most money into a general acid rain cleanup fund. Yet, under this proposal, areas in the country with very large emissions and who reduce the most, will also receive the very large subsidies from the fund. The bill establishes a three-tiered graduated fee in electricity generation to collect the subsidy. I chose to use electricity rates to determine the fee, as it is clearly the most efficient passthrough mechanism available, since everyone nationwide uses electricity. Basically, the approach set forth in the legislation seeks to bring people into the process in a way that does not displace jobs, does not create inequities, yet still works toward a real solution.

In addition, the bill also establishes a fund to assist in research and development efforts which will help us in bringing new technologies on line. It is my belief that such technologies can be developed very quickly once we have a mandate, and will not be as costly as some predict.

Mr. President, the issues associated with acid rain are complex, but the results are quite simple. Acid deposition is wreaking havoc in America, Canada, and other parts of the globe. The time is upon us. And the initiatives set forth in my legislation offer this Nation a chance, through its balanced approach to put an end to acid rain. Mr. President, as Prime Minister Mulroney once said, "The day Congress joins the battle to purge acid rain from our common environment will be a day of celebration on both sides of the border." Why not give our allies to the north and throughout the world reason to celebrate.

Title 3 of the legislation, the Motor Vehicle Fuel Conservation Act of 1989, deals primarily with reducing CO_2 emissions by addressing the issue of automotive fuel economy. As I noted earlier, CO_2 is the primary greenhouse gas which contributes to global warming.

It is estimated that 18 billion tons of CO_2 is emitted annually into the air. The transportation sector accounts for one-third of this CO_2 buildup. Today, there are 120 million cars on our roads, 2.5 million more than in 1986. The transportation sector is known to use 63 percent of the oil used in the United States. Furthermore, the United States is currently importing more oil than it produces. As oil prices have plummeted, there has been a decrease in conservation. In fact, last year the Department of Transportation rolled back the Corporate Fuel Economy [CAFE] standards for passenger cars from 27.5 to 26.5 miles per gallon. This action flies in the face of any efforts to reduce CO_2, and must be changed. Some experts estimate that by increasing fuel efficiency standards by 1 mile per gallon, 3.8 billion gallons of oil could be saved in 1 year. Furthermore in a 1982 Office of Technology Assessment report, it was estimated that technologies exist within the automotive industry that would permit manufacturers to reach 45 miles per gallon by the year 1995. In addition, according to a recent publication, prototype cars were built in Europe during the early 1980's which could achieve 60 miles per gallon in the city and 80 miles per gallon on the highway, while maintaining safety, and high performance standards.

Mr. President, increasing fuel efficiency is clearly one method of reducing CO_2 emissions. There is broad based support throughout Congress to reduce greenhouse gases. In fact, some of the CAFE recommendations in legislation introduced last year by Senators CHAFEE and WIRTH are consistent with the recommendations in the bill that I am introducing today. This legislation reinstitutes the 27.5 mpg requirement for automobiles and light trucks. It then gradually raises it to 45 mpg for automobiles and 35 mpg for light trucks by the year 2000. The legislation also requires that vehicles within the Federal Government's fleet come under new efficiency standards. It offers a tax rebate to consumers for purchasing more fuel efficient vehicles, and it raises the gas-guzzler tax on extremely inefficient vehicles. Finally the legislation imposes fines on manufacturers who do not comply, and places 50 percent of the fees raised through noncompliance into an energy conservation research and development fund to be used to develop new fuel efficient technologies. The other 50 percent will go back to the general fund to help reduce the deficit.

Mr. President, on August 31, 1988, at a speech in Michigan, President Bush told the American public that we can "do something" about the greenhouse effect. He made it crystal-clear that those who thought we could do nothing were wrong. Furthermore, last year the Toronto Conference on Global Atmosphere recommended that nations reduce the CO_2 emissions by 20 percent by the year 2005. It is my hope, Mr. President that President Bush will take this idea seriously and live up to the commitment he made to the American people. By directing the appropriate agencies to use the structure set forth in this bill to reduce CO_2, the main contributor to global warming, the United States will set an example for other nations to follow.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in cosponsoring this legislation and help me move it swiftly through Congress. An environmental emergency is upon us and it is my hope that we can put an end to acid rain and curb the warming of our globe before it is too late.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a summary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 57

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

Except for title III, this Act may be cited as the "National Acid Rain Control Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide by 12 million tons per year and to reduce emissions of oxides of nitrogen by 3 million tons per year, by the year 2000, in order to lessen the damage to public health and the environment from acid deposition attributable to those pollutants.

TITLE I—ACID DEPOSITION CONTROL AND ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

SEC. 101. AMENDMENT OF CLEAN AIR ACT.

Title I of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART E—ACID DEPOSITION CONTROL

"Subpart 1—General Provisions

"PURPOSE OF PART

"SEC. 181. The purpose of this part is to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions in the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia by 12,000,000 tons by 2000. Such reduction shall be achieved through—

"(1) a program under subpart 2 consisting of direct federally mandated emission reductions;

"(2) a program under subpart 3 consisting of State plans to provide for reductions in emission rates as may be necessary to achieve the remaining portion of the reduction; and

"(3) a program under subpart 4 to mitigate any potential economic impacts and coal mining job dislocation by subsidizing the capital costs of control technology used for the purpose of the program under subpart 3 through a fee on the generation of electric energy by fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 182. As used in this part—

"(1) The terms 'new' and 'modified' when used with respect to an electric utility unit or other source means an electric utility unit or other source which commenced construction (or modification) after December 31, 1980, and which is subject to new source performance standards for sulfur dioxide under section 111.

"(2) The term 'commenced' when used with respect to construction or modification has the same meaning as when used in section 111.

"(3) The term 'fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant' means all of the fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units owned or operated by an electric utility which are located on one or more contiguous or adjacent properties.

"(4) The terms 'steam generating unit', 'electric utility', and 'fossil fuel' have the same meanings as provided in regulations under section 111 applicable to electric utility steam generating units for which construction is commenced after September 18, 1978.

"(5) The term 'Btu' means a British thermal unit.

"(6) The term 'technological system of continuous emission reduction' has the meaning provided by section 111(a)(7).

"(7) The term 'sulfur dioxide' when used with respect to emissions means total sulfur emissions expressed as sulfur dioxide emissions.

"(8) The term 'baseline year' means the calendar year 1980, except that the Administrator may designate a subsequent calendar year as the baseline year if he determines that reasonable and reliable data is available for that year with respect to the actual sulfur dioxide emission rates of the unit or source involved.

"(9) The term 'best available cleaning method' means the coal cleaning method which results in the highest reasonably obtainable level of sulfur removal, as determined by the Administrator.

"RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 183. Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect or impair the requirements of section 110 (or of any applicable implementation plan) or of any other section of this Act; except that any stationary source which is subject to any such requirement may also be subject to additional requirements under this part.

"Subpart 2—Federally Mandated Emission Reductions

"FEDERALLY MANDATED EMISSION REDUCTIONS

"SEC. 186. (a) COAL CLEANING.—Any fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant which burns coal with an average sulfur content of more than 2 percent must provide that such coal is cleaned prior to combustion using the best available cleaning method by not later than December 31, 1990.

"(b) ADIPIC ACID TREATMENT.—Any fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant which is equipped with flue gas desulfurization units must include adipic acid treatment with such units by not later than December 31, 1990.

"Subpart 3—State Plans for Additional Emission Reductions

"CALCULATION OF STATE SHARES

"SEC. 191. (a) SHARE OF 12,000,000 TON REDUCTION.—

"(1) EPA COMPUTATION.—For each of the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia, the Administrator shall compute a State share of the 12,000,000 ton reduction in annual emissions of sulfur dioxide referred to in section 181. The Administrator shall compute the State share for each such State as provided in subsection (b) not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act.

"(2) DATA TO BE USED IN COMPUTATION.—In making computations under subsection (b), the Administrator shall use the best available data. To the extent that other better data regarding the emissions of sulfur dioxide from any category of sources is not available on or before the date 18 months after the date of the enactment of the national Acid Rain Control Act of 1989, the Administrator shall utilize the inventory of emissions developed in the Anthropogenetic Emission Data for the 1985 NAPAP Inventory (prepared for the National Acid Precipitation Assessment Program).

"(b) STATE SHARE.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—The State share for each such State shall be the number of tons which is the sum of the amounts computed under subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C).

"(A) ELECTRIC UTILITY EXCESS EMISSIONS TONNAGE.—The tonnage computed under paragraph (2) for fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants in the State.

"(B) NONUTILITY BOILER EXCESS EMISSIONS TONNAGE.—The tonnage computed under paragraph (3) for other fossil fuel fired steam generating units in the State.

"(C) PROCESS EMITTERS EXCESS EMISSIONS TONNAGE.—The tonnage computed under paragraph (4) for industrial process emitters of sulfur dioxide in the State.

"(2) ELECTRIC UTILITY EXCESS EMISSIONS TONNAGE.—

"(A) FRACTION OF 10,000,000 TONS.—The Administrator shall compute an excess emissions tonnage amount under this paragraph for fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants in the State. The amount shall be determined by multiplying 10,000,000 tons by a fraction the numerator of which is determined under subparagraph (B) and the denominator of which is determined under subparagraph (C).

"(B) NUMERATOR OF ELECTRIC UTILITY FRACTION.—The numerator of the electric utility fraction under this paragraph shall be the tonnage of emissions of sulfur dioxide which the Administrator estimates to have been emitted during the baseline year at a rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input from fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants which are located in the State and which, during the baseline year, emitted sulfur dioxide at an annual average rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.

"(C) DENOMINATOR OF ELECTRIC UTILITY FRACTION.—The denominator of the electric utility fraction under this paragraph shall be the tonnage of emissions of sulfur dioxide which the Administrator estimates to have been emitted during the baseline year at a rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input from all fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants which are located in the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia and which, during the baseline year, emitted sulfur dioxide at an annual average rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.

"(3) NONUTILITY BOILER EXCESS EMISSIONS.—

"(A) FRACTION OF 1,000,000 TONS.—The Administrator shall compute an excess emissions tonnage amount under this paragraph for fossil fuel fired steam generating units located in the State, other than those which are part of a fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant. The amount shall be determined by multiplying 1,000,000 tons by a fraction the numerator of which is determined under subparagraph (B) and the denominator of which is determined under subparagraph (C).

"(B) NUMERATOR OF NONUTILITY FRACTION.—The numerator of the nonutility fraction under this paragraph shall be the tonnage of emissions of sulfur dioxide which the Administrator estimates to have been emitted during the baseline year at a rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input from fossil fuel fired steam generating units which are located in the State, other than units which are part of a fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant, and which, during the baseline year, emitted sulfur dioxide at an annual average rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.

"(C) DENOMINATOR OF NONUTILITY FRACTION.—The denominator of the nonutility fraction under this paragraph shall be the tonnage of emissions of sulfur dioxide emitted during the baseline year at a rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input from all fossil fuel fired steam generating units which are located in the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia, other than units which are part of a fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant, and which, during the baseline year, emitted sulfur dioxide at an annual average rate in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.

"(4) PROCESS EMITTERS EXCESS EMISSIONS TONNAGE.—

"(A) FRACTION OF 1,000,000 TONS.—The Administrator shall compute an excess emissions amount under this paragraph for industrial process emitters (as defined by the Administrator) of sulfur dioxide in the State. The amount shall be determined by multiplying 1,000,000 tons by a fraction the numerator of which is determined under subparagraph (B) and the denominator of which is determined under subparagraph (C).

"(B) NUMERATOR OF PROCESS EMITTER FRACTION.—The numerator of the process emitter fraction under this paragraph shall be the tonnage of emissions of sulfur dioxide emitted during the baseline year at an annual average rate in excess of the limit determined under subparagraph (D) from emissions units of industrial process emitters of sulfur dioxide which are located in the State and which, during the baseline year, emitted sulfur dioxide at an annual average rate in excess of the limit determined under subparagraph (D).

"(C) DENOMINATOR OF PROCESS EMITTER FRACTION.—The denominator of the process emitter fraction under this paragraph shall be the total tonnage of emissions of sulfur dioxide emitted during the baseline year at an annual average rate in excess of the applicable limit determined under subparagraph (D) from emissions units of industrial process emitters of sulfur dioxide which are located in the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia and which, during the baseline year, emitted sulfur dioxide at an annual average rate in excess of the limit determined under subparagraph (D).

"(D) EMISSIONS LIMIT.—

"(i) For purposes of this paragraph, the average annual limit determined under this subparagraph for any emissions unit of a stationary source of industrial process emissions shall be the rate which the Administrator determines to be the national average BACT emissions limit for sulfur dioxide for emissions units within the category of process emitters involved.

"(ii) Utilizing the BACT/LAER Clearinghouse data available at the Environmental Protection Agency, the Administrator shall review the emission limitations for industrial process emitters which were established as 'best available control technology' (BACT) under this Act during the period August 1977 through December 31, 1988. On the basis of such data, and not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act, the Administrator shall establish a national average BACT emission limit for sulfur dioxide for emissions units within each category of process emitters of sulfur dioxide.

"(c) REALLOCATION AMONG STATES.—Under regulations promulgated by the Administrator, any two or more contiguous States may by agreement reallot among agreeing States the State share of two or more agreeing States if, under such reallotment, the total reduction in annual emissions of sulfur dioxide is equal to or greater than, and contemporaneous with, the total reduction in annual emissions of sulfur dioxide which would be required under this part in the absence of such reallotment.

"STATE CONTROL PLANS

"SEC. 192. (a) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—(1) Each of the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia shall submit to the Administrator a plan for achieving such State's share of the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions.

"(2) The plan must be submitted within 12 months after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act, and the Administrator shall approve or disapprove such plan within 6 months after its submission.

"(b) TIMETABLE FOR REDUCTIONS.—The State plan shall provide for a phased reduction such that 7/12 of the State's share of the reduction shall be achieved prior to December 31, 1995, and the entire share shall be achieved prior to December 31, 1999. The timetable for achieving such reductions shall provide for continuous reduction with identifiable incremental reductions.

"(c) STATE PREROGATIVES.—The plan shall provide for the reductions in accordance with subsection (b) by any means; except that the State must comply with the federally mandated emission reductions required by section 186.

"(d) INTERIM EMISSIONS LIMITS.—The State shall apply an annual interim limitation on statewide sulfur dioxide emissions equal to the amount of such emissions for calendar year 1985. The interim limitation shall apply to emissions for calendar years prior to 2000, or, if earlier, until the State has achieved its entire share of the reduction required by section 191.

"(e) RECOMMENDED INDIVIDUAL SOURCE REQUIREMENTS.—The State plan may require that each fossil fuel fired steam generating unit and each industrial process emitter in the State shall—

"(1) apply the best available control technology; or

"(2) limit sulfur dioxide emissions to an annual rate not in excess of 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.

"(f) SUBSTITUTION.—A State may allow the owner or operator of a source required to achieve emission reductions under this part to substitute a reduction in emissions of oxides of nitrogen for required reductions in emissions of sulfur dioxide, at a rate of two units by weight of oxides of nitrogen for each unit of sulfur dioxide.

"(g) ENFORCEMENT.—Each requirement of a State plan approved by the Administrator under this section shall be treated as a requirement of an applicable State implementation plan for purposes of sections 113, 114, 116, 120, and 304.

"REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO STATES WHICH DO NOT HAVE AN APPROVED PLAN

"SEC. 193. (a) REQUIREMENTS FOR FACILITIES.—In any State in the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia which has not submitted a plan under section 192 within 12 months after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act, or which has not had a plan approved by the Administrator under section 192 within 6 months after the submission of such plan, or which fails to implement such plan after its approval—

"(1) the owner or operator of any fossil fuel fired facility which is a major stationary source which is not subject to section 111(a) shall comply with an emission limitation equivalent to an average annual rate of 1.0 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu's of heat input on a rolling 30-day average; and

"(2) the owner or operator of any process emitter shall comply with the average BACT emissions limit established under section 191(b)(4)(D).

"(b) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—The owner or operator of each source subject to the requirements of subsection (a) shall submit to the Administrator a plan and schedule of compliance for achieving such emission limitation not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act, or, if later, 6 months after the date on which the Administrator determines that the State has failed to implement the State plan after its approval.

"(c) APPROVAL.—The Administrator shall approve the plan and schedule of compliance of the source if they—

"(1) contain enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction;

"(2) contain requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met; and

"(3)(A) in the case of a source which proposes to comply with the emission limitation through the use of fuel substitution, will achieve the emission reduction required by this section no later than 24 months after such plan is submitted; or

"(B) in the case of a source which proposes to comply with the emission limitation through the installation of a technological system of continuous emission reduction or replacement of existing facilities with new facilities with substantially lower emissions, or any other means except fuel switching, contains enforceable requirements that such source will, within 24 months after such plan is submitted, enter into binding contractual commitments to acquire, install, or construct such system or facilities.

"(d) PENALTIES.—Failure of such owner or operator to submit an approved plan and schedule within the time provided in this section, failure to comply with the plan and schedule of compliance, and failure to achieve the emission reduction required by the dates required by this section, shall be violations of emission limitations for the purposes of sections 113, 120, and 304.

"Subpart 4—Acid Deposition Control Fund

"ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND

"SEC. 196. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'Acid Deposition Control Fund' (hereafter in this subpart referred to as the 'Fund'), consisting of such amounts as may be deposited into such Fund as provided in this section.

"(b) DEPOSITS INTO THE FUND.—(1) The owner or operator of any fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plant located in the 48 contiguous States or the District of Columbia shall pay to the United States the fees established by section 197. The Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit the fees collected into the Fund.

"(2) Payments of fees under this subsection shall be made on a quarterly basis, based upon the electricity produced in the preceding quarter.

"(3) The Administrator, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

"(c) PAYMENTS FROM THE FUND.—(1) The Administrator shall make payments from the Fund for the following purposes:

"(A) Payments shall be made to owners and operators of facilities for capital costs of sulfur dioxide reductions incurred by such owners or operators in meeting the requirements of this part, other than the federally mandated emission reductions required by section 186 or reductions which result from fuel switching or blending, at a rate of $147 per ton of sulfur dioxide emission reduction. Such payments shall be made for 15 years, commencing at the time the equipment comes into operation.

"(B) Payment of not more than $10,000,000 per year shall be made for accelerated research of cleaner burning industrial processes, in accordance with section 198.

"(C) Payment of not more than $25,000,000 per year shall be made for mitigation programs under title III of the National Acid Rain Control Act.

"(2) The Administrator, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Energy, shall promulgate regulations as may be necessary to implement this section, including regulations providing that—

"(A) no payment may be made under this section to a utility for any costs unless the Administrator determines that, under applicable rate schedules, the full amount of such payment will be used to reduce electric rate increases payable by customers of the utility which otherwise would result from the construction and installation concerned; and

"(B) such payments shall be made at such times as will minimize any electric rate increases for customers of the utility.

"FEES

"SEC. 197. (a) DETERMINATION OF EMISSION RATES.—Within 12 months after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act, the Administrator shall determine the average sulfur dioxide emission rate of each of the 48 contiguous States and the District of Columbia for the calendar year 1985 from all fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants in such State.

"(b) FEE SCHEDULE.—The fee under this section shall apply to all electricity generated in such State by fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants located in the State as follows:

"1982 State average sulfur dioxide emission rate:	Fee:
Less than or equal to 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.	0.50 mills per kilowatthour
Greater than 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input, but less than 2.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.	1.0 mills per kilowatthour
Greater than 2.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input.	1.6 mills per kilowatthour

"(c) YEARS TO WHICH FEE APPLIES.—The fees established by this section shall apply to calendar years beginning with the first calendar year that begins more than 12 months after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act, and ending with the calendar year fifteen years from the date of enactment.

"Subpart 5—Accelerated Research on Cleaner Burning Industrial Processes

"RESEARCH FUNDS

"SEC. 198. The Administrator shall make such grants and enter into such contracts and other arrangements as may be necessary to accelerate the research necessary to develop advanced industrial processes (including atmospheric fluidized bed combustion, magnetohydrodynamics (MHD), and lime-injected multistage burner technology (LIMB)) which may result in lower levels of sulfur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen. For each of the five fiscal years commencing with the fiscal year 1990, $10,000,000 are authorized to be appropriated from the fund established under subpart 4 for purposes of this section.".

SEC. 102. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) ENFORCEMENT.—Section 113(a)(3) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting ", or is in violation of any requirement in effect pursuant to part E" after "inspections, etc.)".

(b) CIVIL ACTIONS.—Section 113(b) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting after and below paragraph (5) the following:

"Whenever any person violates any requirement in effect pursuant to part E, the Administrator may commence a civil action for permanent or temporary injunction or to assess and recover a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day of violation, or both.".

(c) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—Section 113(c)(1)(C) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting "or any requirement in effect pursuant to part E," before "or".

(d) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Section 307(b)(1) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting ", any final action taken by the Administrator under part E of title I" after "120" in the first sentence thereof.

TITLE II—CONTROL OF EMISSIONS OF OXIDES OF NITROGEN

SEC. 201. REVISIONS OF NEW SOURCE PERFORMANCE STANDARD.

Section 111 of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) STANDARDS OF PERFORMANCE RELATING TO OXIDES OF NITROGEN.—(1) The Administrator shall revise the standards of performance for emissions of oxides of nitrogen from electric utility steam generating units which burn bituminous or subbituminous coal. Such revised standards shall prohibit the emission of oxides of nitrogen from such units at a rate which exceeds—

"(A) 0.30 pounds per million Btu's of heat input, in the case of subbituminous coal; and

"(B) 0.40 pounds per million Btu's of heat input, in the case of bituminous coal, based on a 30-day rolling average. Such revised standard shall take effect with respect to units which commence construction after the date of the enactment of the National Acid Rain Control Act.

"(2) As used in this subsection, the terms 'electric utility steam generating unit', 'bituminous coal', and 'subbituminous coal' have the same meanings as when used in 40 CFR part 60, subpart D, as in effect on January 1, 1983.

"(3) The Administrator shall promulgate standards of performance under this section for emissions of oxides of nitrogen and sulfur dioxide from all fossil fuel fired steam generating units which are new sources within the meaning of subsection (a)(2) and which are capable of combusting more than 50 million Btu's per hour heat input of fossil fuel (either alone or in combination with any other fuel). The standards under this section applicable to fossil fuel fired steam generating units which are capable of combusting more than 250 million Btu's per hour heat input may vary from the standards applicable to units which are not capable of such combustion.".

SEC. 202. EMISSIONS FROM MOBILE SOURCES.

(a) TRUCKS AND TRUCK ENGINES.—Section 202 of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) OXIDES OF NITROGEN EMISSIONS FROM LIGHT-DUTY TRUCKS AFTER 1990.—(1) Effective with respect to vehicles and engines manufactured during and after the model year 1990, the regulations under subsection (a) applicable to emissions of oxides of nitrogen from trucks and truck engines the gross vehicle weight of which does not exceed 8,500 pounds shall contain standards which provide that such emissions may not exceed—

"(A) 1.2 grams per vehicle mile for gross vehicle weight not in excess of 6,000 pounds; and

"(B) 1.7 grams per vehicle mile for gross vehicle weight in excess of 6,000 pounds.

"(2) Effective with respect to vehicles and engines manufactured during and after the model year 1990, the regulations under subsection (a) applicable to emissions of oxides of nitrogen from trucks and truck engines the gross vehicle weight of which exceeds 8,500 pounds shall contain standards which provide that such emissions may not exceed 4.0 grams per brake horsepower-hour.

"(3) Subparagraphs (B) and (E) of subsection (a)(3) shall not apply to any standard established under this subsection.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 202(a)(3)(A)(ii) is amended by inserting ", and except as otherwise provided in subsection (g)" after "(E)".

TITLE III—MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1989

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Motor Vehicle Fuel Conservation Act of 1989".

FINDINGS

SEC. 302. The Congress finds that—

(1) motor vehicles are major consumers of oil and major emitters of greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide and nitrogen oxides;

(2) the transportation sector emits one-third of the carbon dioxide emissions in the United States;

(3) the transportation sector emits two-thirds of the nitrogen oxide emissions in the United States;

(4) the United States is currently importing more oil than it produces;

(5) 3.8 billion gallons of oil will be saved in one year if the average fuel economy standard for passenger automobiles is increased by one mile per gallon; and

(6) improving overall fuel efficiency of motor vehicles will reduce greenhouse gases, cut U.S. dependency on foreign oil, and improve energy conservation.

AVERAGE FULL ECONOMY STANDARDS

SEC. 303. (a) Section 502(a) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(a)), relating to average fuel economy standards, is amended by striking and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"1985 and thereafter	27.5."

"1985 through 1991	27.5.
1992 and thereafter	As provided in accordance with section 514 of this Act.".

(b) Section 502(a)(4) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(a)(4)) is amended by striking "The Secretary" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except in the case of standards established by sections 514 and 515, the Secretary".

LIGHT TRUCKS

SEC. 304. (a) Section 501 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2001), relating to definitions, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by inserting "or a light truck" immediately after "off-highway operations",

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (14) as paragraphs (4) through (15) and by inserting immediately after paragraph (2) the following:

"(3) The term 'light truck' shall have such meaning as the Secretary shall prescribe by rule.".

(b) Section 502(b) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(b)), relating to standards for other than passenger automobiles, is amended by inserting "or light trucks" immediately after "average fuel economy standards for automobiles which are not passenger automobiles".

EXEMPTIONS FOR LIMITED PRODUCTION

SEC. 305. Section 502(c)(1) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(c)(1)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or 10,000 light trucks" immediately after "10,000 passenger automobiles" each place it occurs;

(2) by inserting "or section 514 or 515" immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence;

(3) by inserting "or section 514 or 515" immediately before "is more stringent"; and

(4) by inserting "or light trucks" immediately before "manufactured by manufacturers".

EMERGENCY VEHICLES

SEC. 306. Section 502(g)(1) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(g)(1)), relating to exemption of emergency vehicles, is amended by inserting "or section 514 or 515" immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence.

CONSULTATION

SEC. 307. Section 502(i) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(i)) is amended by inserting "or sections 514 and 515" immediately before the period in the first sentence.

NOTIFICATION

SEC. 308. Section 502(j) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2002(j)) is amended by inserting "or sections 514 and 515" immediately before "or any modification".

CALCULATION OF AVERAGE FUEL ECONOMY

SEC. 309. Section 503(d)(1) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2003(d)(1)) is amended by inserting "and light trucks" immediately after "passenger automobiles".

NEW STANDARDS

SEC. 310. (a) Title V of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2001 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new sections:

"PASSENGER AUTOMOBILES

SEC. 514. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act and except as provided in section 517, commencing with model year 1992 and each model year thereafter, the average fuel economy for passenger automobiles manufactured by any manufacturer in any such model year shall not be less than the number of miles per gallon established for such model year pursuant to the following:

"Model year:
"1992 through 1995	For each such manufacturer, the average fuel economy standard required shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by that manufacturer for passenger automobiles in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 20 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.
"1996 through 1999	For each such manufacturer, the average fuel economy standard required shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by that manufacturer for passenger automobiles in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 45 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.
"Model year:
"2000 and thereafter	For each such manufacturer, the average fuel economy standard required shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by that manufacturer for passenger automobiles in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 65 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.

"LIGHT TRUCKS

SEC. 515. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act and except as provided in section 518, commencing with model year 1992 and each model year thereafter, the average fuel economy for light trucks manufactured by any manufacturer in any such model year shall not be less than the number of miles per gallon established for such model year pursuant to the following:

"Model year:
"1992 through 1995	For each such manufacturer, the average fuel economy standard required shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by that manufacturer for light trucks in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 20 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.
"1996 through 1999	For each such manufacturer, the average fuel economy standard required shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by that manufacturer for light trucks in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 45 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.
"Model year:
"2000 and thereafter	For each such manufacturer, the average fuel economy standard required shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by that manufacturer in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 65 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel eocnomy achieved for model year 1988.

"MODIFICATIONS

"SEC. 516. (a) Any manufacturer may apply to the Secretary for modification of an average fuel economy standard applicable under section 514 or 515 to such manufacturer for model year 1992, and any model year thereafter. Such application shall contain such information as the Secretary may require by rule and shall be submitted to the Secretary within 24 months before the beginning of the model year for which such modification is requested. No such average fuel economy standard shall be adjusted if such adjustment would result in an increase or decrease of such standard by an amount in excess of 0.5 miles per gallon.

"(b) The Secretary shall, on an annual basis, report each such adjustment made to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives. In each such report, the Secretary shall justify clearly the reasons for the adjustments and shall address with respect to each such adjustment the following criteria:

"(1) technological feasibility,

"(2) economic practicability,

"(3) the effect of other Federal motor vehicle standards on fuel economy, and

"(4) the need for the Nation to reduce carbon-dioxide emissions, to reduce foreign oil imports, and to reduce annual trade deficits; and

"(5) the effect on long-term and short-term domestic employment.

"(c) Subsection (1) of section 502 shall not be applicable with respect to the average fuel economy standards established pursuant to section 514 or 515.

INCENTIVES FOR PASSENGER AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

"SEC. 517. Notwithstanding section 514, in the case of any manufacturer which achieved an average fuel economy for passenger automobiles of at least 27.5 miles per gallon for model year 1985, the average fuel economy for passenger automobiles manufactured by such manufacturer—

"(1) for model years 1992 and 1993 shall be 27.5;

"(2) for model years 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997, shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by such manufacturer for passenger automobiles in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 20 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988;

"(3) for model years 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001, shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by such manufacturer for passenger automobiles in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 45 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988; and

"(4) for model year 2002, and each model year thereafter, shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by such manufacturer for passenger automobiles in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 65 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.

INCENTIVES FOR LIGHT TRUCK MANUFACTURERS

"SEC. 518. Notwithstanding section 515, in the case of any manufacturer which achieved an average fuel economy for light trucks of at least 21 miles per gallon for model year 1985, the average fuel economy for light trucks manufactured by such manufacturer—

"(1) for model years 1992 and 1993 shall be 21;

"(2) for model years 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997, shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by such manufacturer in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 20 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1985;

"(3) for model years 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001, shall be an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by such manufacturer in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 45 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988; and

"(4) for model year 2002, and each model year thereafter, an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the average fuel economy achieved by such manufacturer in model year 1988, plus an amount equal to 65 percent (as measured in miles per gallon) of such average fuel economy achieved for model year 1988.".

(b) Section 505(a)(1) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2005(a)(1)) is amended by striking "section 502" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 502, 514, and 515".

VEHICLE FUEL CONSERVATION FEE

SEC. 311. (a)(1) Section 508(a) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2008(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) If any average fuel economy calculation reported under section 503(d) indicates that any manufacturer has failed to achieve average fuel economy equal to or exceeding the average fuel economy standard applicable for the model year (unless further measurements of fuel economy, further calculations of the average fuel economy, or other information indicates that the manufacturer did not fail to meet or exceed the standard), the Secretary shall commence a proceeding under paragraph (2) of this subsection. The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the results of such further measurements, calculations, and any other relevant information.

"(2) If, on the record after opportunity for agency hearing, the Secretary determines that such manufacturer failed to meet or exceed the applicable average fuel economy standard, the Secretary shall require the manufacturer to pay into the Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fund a Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee in an amount calculated pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section. Any interested person may participate in any proceeding under this paragraph.".

(2) Section 508(b) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2008(b)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking "liable to the United States for a civil penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "assessed a Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee, 50 percent of which shall be payable into the Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fund and the remainder into the general fund of the Treasury,";

(B) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking "liable to the United States for a civil penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "assessed a Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee, 50 percent of which shall be payable into the Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fund and the remainder into the general fund of the Treasury,";

(C) in paragraph (2), by striking "liable to the United States for a civil penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "assessed a Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee, 50 percent of which shall be payable into the Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fund and the remainder into the general fund of the Treasury,";

(D) in paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking "such civil penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee";

(ii) by striking "any civil penalty" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "any Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee"; and

(iii) by striking "such penalty" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "such Fee";

(E) in paragraph (4)—

(i) by striking "civil penalty" each place it apears and inserting in lieu thereof "Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee";

(ii) by striking "such penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "such Fee";

(iii) by striking "the penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Fee"; and

(iv) by striking "it shall be paid" and inserting in lieu thereof "50 percent shall be paid into the Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fund and the remainder";

(F) in paragraph (5)—

(i) by striking "civil penalty" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee"; and

(ii) by striking "such penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "such Fee"; and

(H) in paragraph (6), by striking "a civil penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "a Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee".

(3) Section 508(c) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2008(c)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "civil penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee"; and

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking "civil penalty" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee".

(4) Section 508(d) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2008(d)) is amended—

(A) by striking "civil penalty" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee"; and

(B) by striking "higher penalty" and inserting in lieu thereof "higher Fee"."

(b) Title V of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2001 et seq.), as amended by section 10 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"ENERGY CONSERVATION FUND

"SEC. 519. (a) Fifty percent of each Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fee assessed and collected pursuant to section 508 of this Act shall be deposited in a separate account within the Treasury of the United States. Such account shall be known as the 'Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fund' (hereinafter referred to as the 'Fund').

"(b) All funds in the account shall be available only to the extent provided in appropriation Acts, for carrying out the provisions of subsection (e) of this section.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

"(d) The Fund shall consist of amounts deposited in the Fund derived from—

"(1) Vehicle Fuel Conservation Fees assessed under section 508; and

"(2) monies appropriated to the Fund.

"(e) Monies in the Fund may be used for grants to conduct vehicle fuel conservation research consistent with the purposes and policies of this Act.

"(f) The Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with Secretary of Energy and the EPA Administrator, may prescribe rules for purposes of carrying out the provisions of subsection (e) of this section.

"(g)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of subsection (e).

(2) There are authorized to be appropriated from the Fund such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of subsection (e).

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT VEHICLE REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 312. (a) Section 510 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2010) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(c) Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b), the fleet average fuel economy for all passenger automobiles and light trucks acquired by all executive agencies after model year 1991 shall not be less than the number of miles per gallon established pursuant to the following table:

"Passenger automobile model years:	Miles per gallon:
1992 through 1995	33.
1996 through 1999	39.
"Passenger automobile model years:	Miles per gallon:
2000 and thereafter	45.
"Light truck model years:	Miles per gallon:
1992 through 1995	25.
1996 through 1999	30.
2000 and thereafter	35.

"(d) In the annual purchase of passenger automobiles and light trucks by any executive agency, any manufacturer that offers for sale a fleet of such vehicles which as determined by the Secretary achieves at least 10 percent more fuel efficiency than a fleet of similarly sized vehicles that have fuel economies representative of the fuel economies measured for model types within their size class shall have its bid be considered as if the bid had been reduced by 2 percent.".

(b) Section 510(b) is of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2010(b)) is amended by inserting ", except as provided in subsections (c) and (d)" immediately after "As used in this section".

FUEL ECONOMY TESTING

SEC. 313. (a) Section 503(d) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2003(d)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of paragraph (1), by inserting immediately before the period the following: "after consultation with the Secretary of Energy";

(2) in the third sentence of paragraph (1) by striking "shall" and inserting in lieu thereof "may"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) For each model type and year, the EPA Administrator shall measure the fuel economy of a sampling of production passenger automobiles during the first month of manufacture for sale. The testing procedures for such measurement shall be the same as used under paragraph (1).

"(B)(i) If the fuel economy results under subparagraph (A) for any model type and year are different than the results under paragraph (1) for such type and year, the average fuel economy for purposes of section 502(a) and (c) shall be adjusted accordingly.

"(ii) If the fuel economy results under subparagraph (A) for any model type and year are more than 0.5 mile per gallon higher or lower than the fuel economy results under paragraph (1) for such type and year, labels described in section 506 which are affixed more than 90 days after the date that results are available under subparagraph (A) shall reflect such results.

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'production passenger automobile' means a passenger automobile manufactured for sale.

"(D)(i) Measurements and calculations under paragraph (1) shall be repeated over a period of years for purposes of monitoring automobile performance in use to determine the extent, if any, of decline in fuel economy after such use.

"(ii) Such measurements and calculations shall be included in a report submitted by the Secretary biennially to the President, to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives.".

(b) Section 503 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2003) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(g)(1) To the maximum extent practicable, procedures under subsection (d) shall simulate average drivers and driving conditions in the United States.

"(2) The EPA Administrator shall, from time to time, review the procedures under subsection (d).

"(3) If the EPA Administrator finds, in conjunction with the review under paragraph (2), that the requirements of paragraph (1) are not met, the Administrator shall revise procedures under subsection (d) to comply with such paragraph.

"(4) The EPA Administrator may not make substantial revisions under paragraph (3) more frequently than once every 3 years.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to measurements of fuel economy for model years (as defined in title V of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act) beginning more than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

EXPLANATORY BOOKLET DISTRIBUTED BY EPA ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 314. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 506(b) of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2006(b)) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The EPA Administrator shall update such booklet at least twice a year."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The Secretary of Energy shall distribute no less than 100 booklets each year to each dealer and shall distribute as many in addition to such 100 as are reasonably requested by dealers from time to time.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to the 12-month period beginning on the first day of the first month after the date of enactment of this Act and corresponding 12-month periods thereafter.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL LEGISLATION

SEC. 315. Section 512 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2012), relating to reports to the Congress, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) The Secretary shall, within 2 years after the date of enactment of the Motor Vehicle Fuel Conservation Act of 1989, submit to the Congress recommendations for such additional legislation as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.".

STUDY

SEC. 316. (a) The National Academy of Sciences, in consultation with vehicle manufacturers, representatives of environmental and consumer groups, appropriate State and local officials, and representatives of labor, shall undertake a review of the current state of research and development in light truck fuel economy and passenger automobile fuel economy and an assessment of the remaining potential for improving the fuel efficiency and reducing the energy consumption of passenger automobiles and light trucks. The assessment shall include all aspects of vehicle design, including engines, drive train, component parts, auto body, tires, and any other aspect contributing to the reduction of energy consumption. The National academy shall report the results of the review and assessment to Congress and in the report recommend research and development priorities that could result in bringing steady improvements into commercialization through the early years of the next century.

(b) As used in this section, "passenger automobile" and "light truck" have the meaning given those terms under section 501 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2001).

PROCEDURES FOR PRESCRIBING NEW OR AMENDED STANDARDS

SEC. 317. (a) Not later than the beginning of fiscal year 1994, the Secretary of Transportation shall initiate proceedings to develop and adopt post-2000 vehicle energy efficiency performance standards. The new vehicle energy efficiency performance standards shall be prescribed in accordance with the following procedure:

(1) The Secretary—

(A) shall publish an advance notice of proposed rulemaking which specifies the type (or class) of covered vehicles to which the rule may apply,

(B) shall invite interested persons to submit, within 60 days after the date of publication of such advance notice, written presentations of data, views, and arguments in response to such notice, and

(C) may identify proposed or amended standards that may be prescribed.

(2) A proposed rule which prescribes an amended or new vehicle energy efficiency performance standard or prescribes no amendment or no new standard for a type (or class) of covered products shall be published in the Federal Register. In prescribing any such proposed rule with respect to a standard, the Secretary shall determine the maximum improvement in energy efficiency or maximum reduction in energy use that is technologically feasible for each type (or class) of covered vehicles. If such standard is not designed to achieve such efficiency or use, the Secretary shall state in the proposed rule the reasons therefor.

(3) After the publication of such proposed rulemaking, the Secretary shall afford interested persons an opportunity, during a period of not less than 60 days, to present oral and written comments (including an opportunity to question those who make such presentations) on matters relating to such proposed rules, including—

(A) whether the standard to be prescribed is economically justified (taking into account those factors which the Secretary shall evaluate under subsection (c)),

(B) whether the standard will achieve the maximum improvement in energy efficiency which is technologically feasible,

(C) if the standard will not achieve such improvement, whether the reasons for not achieving such improvement are adequate, and

(D) whether such rule should prescribe a level of energy use or efficiency which is higher or lower than that which would otherwise apply in the case of any group of products within the type (or class) that will be subject to such standard.

(4) A final rule prescribing an amended or new vehicle energy efficiency performance standard or prescribing no amended or new standard for a type (or class) of covered vehicles shall be published as soon as is practicable, but not less than 90 days, after publication of the proposed rule in the Federal Register.

(b)(1) The Secretary of Transportation may not prescribe any amended standard which increases the maximum allowable energy use, or decreases the minimum required energy efficiency, of a covered vehicle.

(2) Any new or amended vehicle energy efficiency performance standard prescribed by the Secretary under this section for any type (or class) of covered vehicle shall be designed to achieve the maximum improvement in energy efficiency which the Secretary determines is technologically feasible and cost-effective to the consumer through savings in gas amortized over the life of the vehicle at a 3 percent real discount rate.

(b) The Secretary of Transportation shall evaluate the economic justification of the standard, considering—

(1) the economic impact of the standard on the manufacturers and on the consumers of the products subject to such standard,

(2) the savings in operating costs throughout the estimated average life of the covered product in the type (or class) compared to any increase in the price of, or in the initial charges for, or maintenance expenses of, the covered products which are likely to result from the imposition of the standard,

(3) the total projected amount of energy savings likely to result directly from the imposition of the standard,

(4) any lessening of the utility or the performance of the covered products likely to result from the imposition of the standard,

(5) the impact of any lessening of competition, as determined in writing by the Attorney General, that is likely to result from the imposition of the standard, or in a change in foreign trade,

(6) the need for reducing carbon dioxide emissions to mitigate the global greenhouse warming, as well as reducing other environmentally damaging energy-related pollutants,

(7) the need for national energy conservation, and

(8) other factors the Secretary considers relevant.

For purposes of paragraph (5), the Attorney General shall make a determination of the impact, if any, of any lessening of competition likely to result from such standard and shall transmit such determination, not later than 60 days after the publication of a proposed rule prescribing or amending a vehicle energy efficiency performance standard, in writing to the Secretary, together with an analysis of the nature and extent of such impact. Any such determination and analysis shall be published by the Secretary in the Federal Register.

INCREASES IN RATES APPLICABLE TO GAS GUZZLER TAX

SEC. 318. (a)(1) Subsection (a) of section 4064 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(A) by striking paragraphs (1) through (6);

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (7) as paragraph (1);

(C) in paragraph (1), as so redesignated, by striking "a 1986 or later model year automobile" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "an automobile of any model year after 1988 and before 1991"; and

(D) by adding after paragraph (1), as so redesignated, the following new paragraphs:

"(2) In the case of a 1991 model year automobile:

"If the fuel economy of the model type in which the automobile falls is:	The tax is:
At least 23.5	0
At least 22.5 but less than 23.5	$500
At least 21.5 but less than 22.5	650
At least 20.5 but less than 21.5	850
At least 19.5 but less than 20.5	1,100
At least 18.5 but less than 19.5	1,400
At least 17.5 but less than 18.5	1,750
At least 16.5 but less than 17.5	2,150
At least 15.5 but less than 16.5	2,600
At least 14.5 but less than 15.5	3,100
At least 13.5 but less than 14.5	3,600
At least 12.5 but less than 13.5	4,100
Less than 12.5	4,600

"(3) In the case of a 1992 model year automobile:

"If the fuel economy of the model type in which the automobile falls is:	The tax is:
At least 24.5	0
At least 23.5 but less than 24.5	$500
At least 22.5 but less than 23.5	650
At least 21.5 but less than 22.5	850
At least 20.5 but less than 21.5	1,100
At least 19.5 but less than 20.5	1,400
At least 18.5 but less than 19.5	1,750
At least 17.5 but less than 18.5	2,150
At least 16.5 but less than 17.5	2,600
At least 15.5 but less than 16.5	3,100
At least 14.5 but less than 15.5	3,600
At least 13.5 but less than 14.5	4,100
At least 12.5 but less than 13.5	4,600
Less than 12.5	5,100

"(4) In the case of a 1993 model year automobile:

"If the fuel economy of the model type in which the automobile falls is:	The tax is:
At least 25.5	0
At least 24.5 but less than 25.5	$500
At least 23.5 but less than 24.5	650
At least 22.5 but less than 23.5	850
At least 21.5 but less than 22.5	1,100
At least 20.5 but less than 21.5	1,400
At least 19.5 but less than 20.5	1,750
At least 18.5 but less than 19.5	2,150
At least 17.5 but less than 18.5	2,600
At least 16.5 but less than 17.5	3,100
At least 15.5 but less than 16.5	3,600
At least 14.5 but less than 15.5	4,100
At least 13.5 but less than 14.5	4,600
Less than 13.5	5,100

"(5) In the case of a 1994 model year automobile:

"If the fuel economy of the model type in which the automobile falls is:	The tax is:
At least 26.5	0
At least 25.5 but less than 26.5	$500
At least 24.5 but less than 25.5	650

At least 13.5 but less than 14.5	7,700
Less than 13.5	8,200.".

(2) Paragraph (3) of section 4063(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) MODEL TYPE.—The term 'model type' means each vehicle configuration as defined in the rules which were prescribed by the EPA Administrator for the purposes of section 501 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 2001) and which were in effect on January 1, 1988.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to 1989 and later model year automobiles (as defined in section 4064(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986).

TAX INCENTIVES FOR PURCHASE OF FUEL EFFICIENT VEHICLES

SEC. 319. Subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to foreign tax credit, etc.) is amended by adding at the end of the following new section:

"SEC. 30. FUEL EFFICIENT PASSENGER VEHICLES.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year the amount determined under subsection (b) for each qualified passenger vehicle by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

"(b) AMOUNT OF CREDIT PER VEHICLE.—The amount determined under this subsection for any qualified passenger vehicle is the amount determined under the following tables:

"(1) MODEL YEARS 1992 AND 1993.—In the case of a vehicle of model year 1992 or 1993:

"If the perentage by which the fuel economy of the vehicle exceeds the fuel economy of the model type in which such vehicle falls is:		The amount of credit for the vehicle is:
At least	Less than
15	20	$250
20	25	400
25		750.

"(2) MODEL YEARS 1994 THROUGH 2000.—In the case of a vehicle of model year 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, or 2000:

"If the percentage by which the fuel economy of the vehicle exceeds the fuel economy of the model type in which such vehicle falls is:		The amount of credit for the vehicle is:
At least	Less than
20	25	$400
25	30	750
30	50	1,000
50	75	1,500
75		2,000.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED PASSENGER VEHICLE.—The term 'qualified passenger vehicle' means any passenger automobile (as defined in section 501 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act) the original use of which begins with the taxpayer.

"(2) FUEL ECONOMY, MODEL TYPE, MODEL YEAR.—The terms 'fuel economy', 'model type', and 'model year' have the respective meanings given such terms by section 4064.

"(d) APPLICATION WITH OTHER CREDITS.—The credit allowed by subsecton (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(1) the regular tax for the taxable year reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under subpart A and sections 27, 28, and 29, and

"(2) the tentative minimum tax for the taxable year.".

(b) The table of sections for such subpart B is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"30. Fuel efficient passenger vehicles.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1990.

TITLE IV—ACID DEPOSITION DAMAGE MITIGATION PROGRAM

SEC. 401. STATE PLANS AND FEDERAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) RESTORATION PROGRAM.—Any State may prepare, and submit to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency for approval and to the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service for comment—

(1) a survey of water quality deterioration in such State which has resulted from acid deposition;

(2) a proposal for research on mitigating the effects of acid deposition on terrestrial and acquatic ecosystems; and

(3) proposed methods and procedures to restore the quality of water in such State which has deteriorated as a result of acid deposition.

(b) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—From the fund established under section 196 of the Clean Air Act, the Administrator, after consultation with the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, shall provide financial assistance to States in order to carry out methods and procedures for restoration which have been approved by the Administrator under this section.

(2) 80 PERCENT LIMIT.—The amount granted under this section to any State for any fiscal year shall not exceed 80 percent of the funds expended by such State in such year for carrying out approved methods and procedures under this section.

(3) APPORTIONMENT AMONG STATES.—The Administrator shall provide for an equitable distribution of sums appropriated under this section among States with approved methods and procedures. Such distribution shall be based on the relative need of each such State for the restoration of water quality which has deteriorated as a result of acid deposition. The amount of any grant to a State under this section shall be in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other Federal financial assistance.

THE NATIONAL ACID RAIN CONTROL ACT OF 1989 AND THE MOTOR VEHICLES FUEL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1989

PURPOSE

The National Acid Rain Control Act will amend the Clean Air Act to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by 12 million tons per year and nitrogen oxide emissions by 3 million tons per year by 2000 in the 48 contiguous states and the District of Columbia. These reductions will lessen the damage to public health and the environment from acid deposition caused by these pollutants.

CONTROL OF SULFUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS

Section 181

Sulfur dioxide reductions will be achieved through; (1) direct federally mandated reductions; (2) state plans which provide for additional reductions; and (3) implementation of a program which subsidizes the capital costs of control technologies to mitigate any potential economic impacts and loss of coal mining jobs.

Section 191

The EPA Administrator will compute each state's share of the reduction using the best available data or the inventory of remissions developed in the Memorandum of Intent on Transboundary Air Pollution signed by the U.S. The state's share depends on boiler emissions greater than 1.0 lbs. SO_2 MMBTU heat input and excess process emissions.

STATE CONTROL PLANS

Section 192

Each of the 48 contigious states and the District of Columbia must submit a plan to the EPA Administrator which describes how emissions reductions will be achieved. The state plan must call for a phased reduction so that 7/12 of the state's share of reductions will be achieved before 1995, and the entire share by 1999. The state may allow a source to substitute emissions of NO_x for SO_2 at a ratio of 2:1.

REQUIREMENTS FOR STATES WHICH DO NOT HAVE APPROVED REDUCTION PLANS

Section 193

In any state which does not submit, receive approval, or implement their plan, major stationary sources will have to comply with an emission limitation equal to 1.0 lbs. of SO_2 per million Btu's of heat input.

ACID DEPOSITION CONTROL FUND

Section 196

A trust fund will be established in the U.S. Treasury into which fees collected from owners or operators of fossil fuel fired electric utility generating plants within the 48 contiguous states will be deposited. Payments from the fund will be used for the following purposes: (1) payment for capital costs incurred by these facilities in meeting reduction requirements at a rate of $147 per ton of SO_2 emission reduced; (2) payment of $10 million per year for accelerated research on cleaner burning industrial processes; and (3) payment of $25 million per year for acid deposition mitigation programs. These payments will be used to reduce electric rate increases payable by customers of the utility.

Section 197

The Administrator will apply the following fee schedule: 1982 State average sulfur dioxide emission rate:

Fees:

Less than or equal to 1.0 pounds per million Btu's—0.50 mills per kilowatt hour.

Greater than 1.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input but less than 2.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input—1.0 mills per kilowatt hour.

Greater than 2.0 pounds per million Btu's of heat input—1.6 mills per kilowatt hour.

ACCELERATED RESEARCH ON CLEANER BURNING INDUSTRIAL PROCESSES

Section 198

Beginning in 1990, $10 million will be authorized for 5 fiscal years for research which develops industrial processes to lower levels of SO_2 and NO_x.

Section 201

Revises performance standards for emission of nitrogen oxides from electric utility steam generating as follows: prohibits emission of NO_x at a rate of more than 0.30 lbs/mill. Btu's of heat input using sub-bituminous coal; and 0.40 lbs/mil Btu's of heat input using bituminous coal.

Section 202

After 1987, emissions from light-duty trucks weighing less than 8,500 lbs cannot exceed 1.2 g/vehicle mile for gross vehicle weight not in excess of 6,000 pounds and 1.7 g./vehicle mile for gross vehicle weight in excess of 6,000 pounds. For trucks exceeding 8,500 lbs. NO_x emissions may not exceed 4.0 g/brake horsepower-hour.

ACID DEPOSITION DAMAGE MITIGATION PROGRAM

States will be reimbursed 80 percent of funds used for mitigation measures to restore aquatic and terrestrial resources.

TITLE III—MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1989

Establishes new national vehicle energy efficiency performance standards based on percentage improvements for each manufacturer's vehicle fleet-anticipated to increase new light car mileage to 45 mpg and new light trucks to 35 mpg by 1999.

Steadily raises federal vehicle fleet average fuel economy, requiring federal fleet to achieve 45 mpg for light cars and 37 mpg for light trucks by 1999.

Steadily raises gas-guzzler tax on inefficient light vehicles through 1999.

Provides tax rebates to consumers for purchase of fuel efficient vehicles-ranging from $250 if at least 15 percent more efficient than average model for each size class, to $2000 if more than 75 percent efficient.

Requires the manufacturer who exceeds the applicable average fuel economy standard, to pay a fine into the vehicle fuel conservation fund with 50 percent payable to the fund to develop new fuel efficiency technologies; and 50 percent payable to the general fund to reduce the deficit.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself and Mr. GORTON):

S. 58. A bill to amend the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 to improve the Enterprise Zone Development Program, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide tax incentives for investments in enterprise zones, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

ENTERPRISE ZONE IMPROVEMENT ACT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Enterprise Zone Improvements Act of 1989, to strengthen and improve the Enterprise Zone Program included in the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987.

My bill has a long history. I first introduced the enterprise zone concept here in the Senate over 8 years ago, during the 96th Congress. At that time, this country was facing a severe recession with high unemployment. Eight years later, our economy is in the midst of the longest continuous recovery in the postwar era—but there are still areas of the country which have not participated fully in this recovery.

Now, more than ever, we need to strengthen the enterprise zone concept to target economic development assistance to depressed areas—particularly those areas which are experiencing structural unemployment—where jobs have been lost to changing industries.

My Urban Jobs and Enterprise Zone Act of 1980, and the House companion bill introduced by my good friend Jack Kemp, then a Congressman from New York, where the seed from which the enterprise zone concept grew.

In 1981, my enterprise zone legislation was first debated on the Senate floor, and as a result, some important modifications were made. In 1982, my bill was cleared by the Finance Committee, but unfortunately there was not time to act on it before adjournment. The full Senate first passed my enterprise zone bill the following year, in 1983. It was passed again by the full Senate in 1984. Both times, it was included in conference committee negotiations, but was dropped from the legislation being considered. In 1984, however, the conferees came very close to accepting a compromise on enterprise zones.

Then, in 1987, the Housing and Community Development Act was enacted into law. Title VII of the act provides for the establishment of 100 enterprise zones, one-third of them in rural areas.

These enterprise zones are distinct areas—a rural county or an inner-city neighborhood, for example—which can receive special tax or financial advantages to encourage business development and job creation. Title VII of the 1987 Housing Act allows the Secretary of HUD to designate zones. It allows HUD to waive some regulatory restrictions, and lets local and State governments transfer money from other sources to these zones. But it does not provide any Federal incentives to complement local initiatives. We now need to provide these Federal incentives to ensure the program's success.

That is why today, Mr. President, I am introducing legislation to improve the enterprise zone provisions in title VII of the Housing and Community Development Act. My legislation will provide tax credits for employers and employees in a designated enterprise zone. It will create investment tax incentives for businesses which locate and develop in the zone. It will encourage Federal procurement and construction in the zones. And it will allow for greater regulatory flexibility.

Today, with the lowest unemployment figures in over 14 years, enterprise zones that target pockets of unemployment are more necessary than ever. As the economy has turned around in the last 8 years, more and more Americans are going back to work. But the need for enterprise zones has become increasingly evident in areas of structural unemployment—where jobs have been lost to difficult local problems rather than to a sagging national economy.

In simple terms, the problem of structural joblessness in our inner cities and rural areas can be viewed like this: There are not enough jobs in depressed areas because there is not enough economic opportunity. My legislation would encourage job creation and business development in designated zones by providing Federal tax and regulatory relief to supplement State and local initiatives.

I recently received a letter from a teenager in Madelia, a small town in southern Minnesota, which explains the problem well. It reads:

I am concerned about job opportunities for teenagers. There should be more variety of jobs in the rural areas. We are so limited in Madelia because of lack of industries and transportation. I am concerned about jobs in the future because of the lack of work experience.

The 1987 Housing and Community Development act establishes criteria for selecting Federal enterprise zones—but it does not provide any Federal tax or financial incentives. To qualify for designation as an enterprise zone, State or local governments must do things like reducing tax rates, increasing public services, simplifying regulatory requirements, and providing other specified incentives. These governments can divert money from other federally funded programs to finance incentives in the zone—but no funding is provided directly by the Federal Government.

In my judgement, it is essential that local incentives be combined with Federal ones. Local contributions already required by title VII of the Housing Act should be matched by Federal tax breaks—the reduction of capital gains taxes for business investment in the area, significant reductions in income taxes, and tax credits for wages paid to previously unemployed workers. By creating incentives for business development in depressed areas, enterprise zones can enlist the help of the private sector, local and State governments, and the Federal Government in a productive and cooperative venture.

State and local governments have already exhibited remarkable enthusiasm for the enterprise zone concept. At last count, 36 States and the District of Columbia have adopted enterprise zone programs. Additional States are considering implementing enterprise zone programs in the near future. State and local governments have displayed considerable creativity in their efforts to encourage business development in their depressed and disadvantaged areas.

My Enterprise Zone Improvements Act will strengthen these efforts. It not only provides an important and necessary complement to such State and local activities, but acts as a synergistic ingredient in the mix of activities that will make enterprise zones successful. This is an excellent opportunity to demonstrate both intergovernmental and public/private partnerships in action. This is a fresh, promising approach to dealing with problems of structural unemployment and revitalizing distressed areas in our Nation's cities and rural towns.

Mr. President, I ask that my bill be included in its entirety in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 58

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Enterprise Zone Improvements Act of 1989".

TITLE I—HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. EVALUATION AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

Section 702 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11502) is amended—

(1) by inserting before "Not" the following: "(a) REPORTS BY HUD.—"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) REPORTS BY OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Not later than the close of the 4th calendar year after the year in which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development first designates areas as enterprise zones, and at the close of each 4th calendar year thereafter, each Federal agency (as defined in section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code) that provides any special assistance pursuant to section 703(c), or any waiver or modification of a rule pursuant to section 704, shall prepare and submit to the Congress and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development a report identifying the nature and extent of the assistance, waivers, and modifications provided.".

SEC. 102. ASSISTANCE BY FEDERAL AGENCIES.

(a) FUNDING OF COURSE OF ACTION.—Section 701(d)(2) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11501(d)(2)) is amended by striking "program" and all that follows through "1949" and inserting "Federal program".

(b) SPECIAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 703 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11503) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) SPECIAL ASSISTANCE.—To the extent permitted by law and consistent with its primary mission, each Federal agency (as defined in section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code) shall seek to provide areas designated as enterprise zones under section 701 with special assistance, including expedited processing, priority funding, program set-asides, and technical assistance. The head of each Federal agency, after consultation with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, shall issue any regulations necessary to carry out this subsection.".

SEC. 103. WAIVER OR MODIFICATION OF FEDERAL AGENCY RULES IN ENTERPRISE ZONES.

(a) APPLICABILITY TO ALL FEDERAL AGENCIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 704(a) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504(a)) is amended by striking "the Secretary" the first place it appears and all that follows through "Agriculture)" and inserting "each Federal agency".

(2) SUBMISSION OF REQUESTS.—Section 704(c) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504(c)) is amended by striking "the Secretary of Agriculture" and inserting "a Federal agency other than the Department of Housing and Urban Development".

(3) DEFINITIONS.—Section 704(j) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504(j)) is amended—

(A) by striking paragraph (2);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (1) as paragraph (2); and

(C) by inserting after "section:" the following new paragraph:

"(1) FEDERAL AGENCY.—The term 'Federal agency' has the meaning given the term in section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code.".

(4) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 704 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504) is amended by striking "Secretary" each place it appears (other than in subsection (c)) and inserting "Federal agency".

(b) ADDITIONAL OBJECTIVES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsections (a) and (c) of section 704 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504) are each amended by inserting "affordable housing, law enforcement," after "community development,".

(2) CONSIDERATION OF REQUESTS.—Section 704(d) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504(d)) is amended by inserting "creation of affordable housing, law enforcement," after "community development," each place it appears.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) SECTION HEADING.—The heading of section 704 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11504) is amended by striking "HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT" and inserting "FEDERAL AGENCY".

(2) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents in section 1 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 is amended by striking the item relating to section 704 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 704. Waiver or modification of Federal agency rules in enterprise zones.".

SEC. 104. APPLICABILITY.

The amendments made by this title shall apply with respect to any area designated as an enterprise zone under section 701 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 11501), including any area designated before the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE II—FEDERAL INCOME TAX INCENTIVES

SEC. 200. AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

Except as otherwise provided, whenever in this title an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Subtitle A—Credits for Employers and Employees

SEC. 201. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYERS.

(a) CREDIT FOR INCREASED ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT AND EMPLOYMENT OF DISADVANTAGED WORKERS.—Subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to foreign tax credit, etc.) is amended by inserting after section 29 the following new section:

"SEC. 30. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) 10 percent of the qualified increased employment expenditures of the taxpayer for the taxable year, and

"(2) the economically disadvantaged credit amount of the taxpayer for such taxable year.

"(b) LIMITATIONS BASED ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the regular tax for the taxable year reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under subpart A and sections 27, 28, and 29, over

"(B) the tentative minimum tax for the taxable year.

"(2) CARRYBACK AND CARRYOVER OF UNUSED CREDIT.—

"(A) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—If the amount of the credit determined under this section for any taxable year exceeds the limitation provided by paragraph (1) for such taxable year (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'unused credit year'), such excess shall be—

"(i) an enterprise zone employment credit carryback to each of the 3 taxable years preceding the unused credit year, and

"(ii) an enterprise zone employment credit carryover to each of the 15 taxable years following the unused credit year, and shall be added to the amount allowable as a credit by this section for such years. If any portion of such excess is a carryback to a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1989, this section shall be deemed to have been in effect for such taxable year for purposes of allowing such carryback as a credit under this section. The entire amount of the unused credit for an unused credit year shall be carried to the earliest of the 18 taxable years to which (by reason of clauses (i) and (ii)) such credit may be carried, and then to each of the other 17 taxable years to the extent that, because of the limitation contained in subparagraph (B), such unused credit may not be added for a prior taxable year to which such unused credit may be carried.

"(B) LIMITATION.—The amount of the unused credit which may be added under subparagraph (A) for any preceding or succeeding taxable year shall not exceed the amount by which the limitation provided by paragraph (1) for such taxable year exceeds the sum of—

"(i) the credit allowable under this section for such taxable year, and

"(ii) the amounts which, by reason of this paragraph, are added to the amount allowable for such taxable year and which are attributable to taxable years preceding the unused credit year.

"(c) QUALIFIED INCREASED EMPLOYMENT EXPENDITURES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified increased employment expenditures' means the excess of—

"(A) the qualified wages paid or incurred by the employer during the taxable year to qualified employees with respect to all enterprise zones, over

"(B) the base period wages of the employer with respect to all such zones.

"(2) LIMITATIONS AS TO QUALIFIED WAGES TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—

"(A) DOLLAR AMOUNT.—The amount of any qualified wages taken into account under paragraph (1) for any taxable year with respect to any qualified employee may not exceed 2.5 times the dollar limitation in effect under section 3306 (b)(1) for the calendar year with or within which such taxable year ends.

"(B) APPLICATION WITH ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED CREDIT AMOUNT.—Qualified wages shall not be taken into account under paragraph (1) if such wages are taken into account in determining the economically disadvantaged credit amount under subsection (d).

"(3) BASE PERIOD WAGES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'base period wages' means, with respect to any enterprise zone, the amount of wages paid to employees during the 12-month period preceding the date on which the enterprise zone was designated as such under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act, or the date on which the enterprise zone is designated under State law, enacted after January 1, 1981, if earlier, which would have been qualified wages paid to qualified employees if such designation had been in effect for such period.

"(B) RULES OF SPECIAL APPLICATION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) subsection (f)(1) shall be applied by substituting '12-month period' for 'taxable year' each place it appears, and

"(ii) the dollar limitation taken into account under paragraph (2) in computing qualified wages shall be the amount in effect for taxable year for which the amount of the credit under subsection (a) is being computed.

"(d) ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED CREDIT AMOUNT.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'economically disadvantaged credit amount' means the sum of the applicable percentage of qualified wages paid to each qualified economically disadvantaged individual.

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'applicable percentage' means, with respect to any qualified economically disadvantaged individual, the percentage determined in accordance with the following table:

If the qualified wages are paid for services performed during:	The applicable percentage is:
The first 3 years after starting date	50
The 4th year after the starting date	40
The 5th year after the starting date	30
The 6th year after the starting date	20
The 7th through 20th year after the starting date	10
The 21st year after the starting date or later	0

"(3) STARTING DATE; BREAKS IN SERVICE.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) STARTING DATE.—The term 'starting date' means the day which the qualified economically disadvantaged individual begins work for the employer within an enterprise zone.

"(B) BREAKS IN SERVICE.—The periods described in the table under paragraph (2) (other than the first such period) shall be extended by any period of time during which the individual is unemployed, and by any period of time during which the individual is employed by a taxpayer in an enterprise zone designated under State law enacted after January 1, 1981, if such designation occurs prior to the designation of the enterprise zone under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act.

"(e) QUALIFIED WAGES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the term 'qualified wages' has the meaning given to the term 'wages' by subsection (b) of section 3306 (determined without regard to any dollar limitation contained in such section).

"(2) REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN FEDERALLY FUNDED PAYMENTS.—For purposes of this section, the wages paid or incurred by an employer for any period shall not include the amount of any Federally funded payments the employer receives or is entitled to receive for on-the-job training of such individual for such period.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR AGRICULTURAL AND RAILWAY LABOR.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of section 51(h) shall apply with respect to services described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 51(h)(1).

"(f) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE DEFINED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified employee' means an individual—

"(A) at least 90 percent of whose services for the employer during the taxable year are directly related to the conduct of the employer's trade or business located in an enterprise zone, and

"(B) who performs at least 50 percent of his services for the employer during the taxable year in an enterprise zone.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH RESPECT TO WHOM CREDIT IS DETERMINED UNDER SECTION 51(a).—The term 'qualified employee' shall not include an individual with respect to whom any credit for the employer is determined under section 51(a) for the taxable year (relating to targeted jobs credit).

"(g) QUALIFIED ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUAL.—

"(1) For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified economically disadvantaged individual' means an individual—

"(A) who is a qualified employee,

"(B) who is hired by the employer during the period a designation under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act is in effect for the area in which the services which qualify such individual as a qualified employee are performed, and

"(C) who is certified as—

"(i) an economically disadvantaged individual,

"(ii) an eligible work incentive employee (within the meaning of section 51(d)(9)), or

"(iii) a general assistance recipient (within the meaning of section 51(d)(6)).

"(2) ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'economically disadvantaged individual' means any individual who is certified by the designated local agency as being a member of a family that had a combined family income (including the cash value of food stamps) during the 6 months preceding the month in which such determination occurs that on an annual basis, was equal to or less than the sum of—

"(i) the highest amount which would ordinarily be paid to a family of the same size without any income or resources in the form of payments for aid to families with dependent children under the State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act for the State in which such individual resides, plus,

"(ii) the highest cash value of the food stamps to which a family of the same size without any income or resources would be paid aid to families with dependent children under such State plan in the amount determined under clause (i).

Any such determination shall be valid for the 45-day period beginning on the date such determination is made.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR FAMILIES WITH ONLY 1 INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of clause (i) of subparagraph (A), in the case of a family consisting of only one individual, the 'highest amount which would ordinarily be paid' to such family under the State's plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act shall be an amount determined by the designated local agency on the basis of a reasonable relationship to the amounts payable under such plan to families consisting of two or more persons.

"(3) CERTIFICATION.—Certification of an individual as an individual described in paragraph (1)(C) shall be made in the same manner as certification under section 51.

"(h) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICATION TO CERTAIN ENTITIES, ETC.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of section 52 (other than subsection (b) thereof) and section 41(f)(3) shall apply.

"(2) PERIODS OF LESS THAN A YEAR.—If designation of an area as an enterprise zone under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act occurs, expires, or is revoked on a date other than the first or last day of the taxable year of the taxpayer, or in the case of a short taxable year—

"(A) the limitation specified in subsection (c)(2)(A), and the base period wages determined under subsection (c)(3), shall be adjusted on a pro rata basis (based upon the number of days), and

"(B) the reduction specified in subsection (e)(2) and the 90 percent and 50 percent tests set forth in subsection (f)(1) shall be determined by reference to the portion of the taxable year during which the designation of the area as an enterprise zone is in effect.

"(i) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), in determining the amount of the credit for a taxable year under subsection (a) with respect to qualified wages paid or incurred for services performed in an enterprise zone—

"(A) the following percentages shall be substituted for '10 percent' in subsection (a)(1):

"(i) 7.5 percent in the earlier of—

"(I) the taxable year which includes the date which is 21 years after the date on which such enterprise zone was designated under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act, or

"(II) the taxable year which includes the date which is 4 years before the date (if any) on which such enterprise zone ceases to be a zone under section 701(b)(1)(B) of the Enterprise Zone Act,

"(ii) 5 percent in the next succeeding taxable year,

"(iii) 2.5 percent in the second next succeeding taxable year, and

"(iv) zero thereafter, and

"(B) the amount determined under subsection (a)(2) shall be reduced by—

"(i) 25 percent in the case of the taxable year described in paragraph (1)(A),

"(ii) 50 percent in the next succeeding taxable year,

"(iii) 75 percent in the second next succeeding taxable year, and

"(iv) 100 percent thereafter.

"(2) REVOCATION OF DESIGNATION.—If the designation of an area as an enterprise zone is revoked under section 701(b)(2) of the Enterprise Zone Act, such area shall continue to be treated as an enterprise zone for the period of 3 taxable years beginning after the date of such revocation except that only the allowable percentage of the amount of the credit which would (but for this paragraph) be allowable under this section for such a year shall be allowed. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'allowable percentage' means the amount determined in accordance with the following table:

"If the taxable year beginning after the revocation is:	The allowable percentage is:
The first such year....	75
The second such year.....	50
The third such year..	25.

"(j) EARLY TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT BY EMPLOYER IN CASE OF QUALIFIED ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS, ETC.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary, if the employment of any qualified economically disadvantaged individual with respect to whom qualified wages are taken into account under subsection (a) is terminated by the taxpayer at any time during a 270-day period beginning on the date such individual begins work for the employer, the tax under this chapter for the taxable year in which such employment is terminated shall be increased by an amount (determined under such regulations) equal to the credit allowed under subsection (a) for such taxable year and all prior taxable years attributable to qualified wages paid or incurred with respect to such employee.

"(2) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY IN CERTAIN CASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to—

"(i) a termination of employment of an employee who voluntarily leaves the employment of the employer,

"(ii) a termination of employment of an individual who, before the close of the period referred to in paragraph (1), becomes disabled to perform the services of such employment, unless such disability is removed before the close of such period and the employer fails to offer reemployment to such individual,

"(iii) a termination of employment of an individual, if it is determined under the applicable State unemployment compensation law that the termination was due to the misconduct of such individual, or

"(iv) a termination of employment of an individual due to a substantial reduction in the trade or business operations of the employer.

"(B) CHANGE IN FORM OF BUSINESS, ETC.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the employment relationship between the employer and an employee shall not be treated as terminated—

"(i) by a transaction to which section 381(a) applies, if the employee continues to be employed by the acquiring corporation, or

"(ii) by reason of a mere change in the form of conducting the trade or business of the taxpayer, if the employee continues to be employed in such trade or business and the employer retains a substantial interest in such trade or business.

"(3) SPECIAL RULE.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit allowable under subpart A.

"(k) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section, including regulations to prevent the abuse of such purposes by denying the credit allowable under this section to employers which relocate their businesses in an enterprise zone while displacing former employees or which otherwise conduct their businesses so as to take advantage of the credit allowable by this section without furthering such purposes."

(b) NO DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—Section 280C (relating to disallowance of deductions for certain expenses for which credits are allowable) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) RULE FOR SECTION 30 CREDITS.—No deduction shall be allowed for that portion of the wages or salaries paid or incurred for the taxable year which is equal to the amount of the credit allowable under section 30 (relating to the employment credit for enterprise zone businesses). This subsection shall be applied under a rule similar to the rule under the last sentence of subsection (a)."

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS RELATED TO CARRYOVER AND CARRYBACK OF CREDITS.—

(1) CARRYOVER OF CREDIT.—

(A) Subsection (c) of section 381 (relating to items of the distributor or transferor corporation) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(26) CREDIT UNDER SECTION 30.—The acquiring corporation shall take into account (to the extent proper to carry out the purposes of this section and section 30, and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary) the items required to be taken into account for purposes of section 30 in respect to the distributor or transferor corporation."

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 383(a) is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as subparagraphs (B) and (C), respectively, and by inserting before subparagraph (B) (as so redesignated) the following new subparagraph:

"(A) unused enterprise zone employment credit under section 30,".

(2) CARRYBACK OF CREDIT.—

(A) Subparagraph (C) of section 6511(d)(4) (defining credit carryback) is amended by inserting "and any enterprise zone employment credit under section 30(b)" before the period at the end thereof.

(B) Subsection (a) of section 6411 (relating to tentative carryback and refund adjustments) is amended—

(i) by inserting "enterprise zone employment credit carryback," after "section 172(b)," in the first sentence, and

(ii) by striking so much of the second sentence as follows "the return for the taxable year" and inserting the following: "of the net operating loss, net capital loss, unused enterprise zone employment credit, or unused business credit from which the carryback results and within a period of 12 months after such taxable year (or, with respect to any portion of an enterprise zone employment credit carryback, or business credit carryback attributable to a net operating loss carryback or a net capital loss carryback from a subsequent taxable year, within a period of 12 months from the end of such subsequent taxable year or, with respect to any portion of a business credit carryback attributable to a research credit carryback or an enterprise zone employment credit carryback from a subsequent taxable year within a period of 12 months from the end of such subsequent taxable year) in the manner and form required by regulations prescribed by the Secretary".

(C) Subsections (a)(1) and (b) of section 6411 are each amended by inserting "unused enterprise zone employment credit," after "net capital loss,".

(d) DEFINITIONS.—Subsection (a) of section 7701 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(47) ENTERPRISE ZONES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'enterprise zone' means any area designated as an enterprise zone under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act.

"(B) ENTERPRISE ZONE ACT.—The term 'Enterprise Zone Act' means title VII of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (as in effect on the day after the date of the enactment of the Enterprise Zone Improvements Act of 1989)."

(e) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 29 the following new item:

"Sec. 30A. Credit for enterprise zone employment."

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

SEC. 202. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to credits allowable), as amended by section 201, is amended by adding after section 30 the following new section:

"SEC. 30A. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYEES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a qualified employee, there is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 5 percent of the qualified wages for the taxable year.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE.—The term 'qualified employee' means an individual—

"(A) who is described in section 30(f)(1), and

"(B) who is not the employee of the Federal Government or any State or subdivision of a State.

"(2) QUALIFIED WAGES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified wages' has the meaning given to 'wages' under subsection (b) of section 3306, attributable to services performed for an employer with respect to whom the employee is a qualified employee, in an amount which does not exceed 1½ times the dollar limitation specified in such subsection.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—The term 'qualified wages' does not include any compensation received from the Federal Government or any State or subdivision of a State.

"(c) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—In determining the amount of the credit for the taxable year under subsection (a) with respect to qualified wages paid to qualified employees for services performed in an enterprise zone, the following percentages shall be substituted for '5 percent' in subsection (a):

"(1) 3¾ percent in the taxable year in which occurs the date which is—

"(A) 21 years after the date on which such enterprise zone was designated under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act, or

"(B) if earlier, the date 4 years before the date the zone designation is to expire;

"(2) 2½ percent in the next succeeding taxable year;

"(3) 1¼ percent in the second next succeeding taxable year; and

"(4) zero thereafter.

"(d) APPLICATION WITH OTHER CREDITS.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(1) the regular tax for the taxable year reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under subpart A and sections 27, 28, 29, and 30, over

"(2) the tentative minimum tax for the taxable year."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 30 the following new item:

"Sec. 30A. Credit for enterprise zone employees."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years after December 31, 1989.

Subtitle B—Credits for Investment in Tangible Property in Enterprise Zones

SEC. 211. INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT FOR NEW ENTERPRISE ZONE CONSTRUCTION PROPERTY.

(a) SECTION 38 PROPERTY.—Paragraph (1) of section 48(a) (defining section 38 property) is amended by striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (F), by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (G) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and by adding after subparagraph (G) the following new subparagraph:

"(H) new enterprise zone construction property (within the meaning of subsection (t)) which is not otherwise section 38 property."

(b) AMOUNT OF CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 46 (relating to amount of investment tax credit) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) in the case of new enterprise zone construction property, the enterprise zone percentage."

(2) ENTERPRISE ZONE PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—Subsection (b) of section 46 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) ENTERPRISE ZONE PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The enterprise zone percentage is 10 percent.

"(B) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT AS ENTERPRISE ZONE ENDS.—Subparagraph (A) shall be applied by substituting the following percentages for 10 percent:

"(i) For the taxable year described in section 30(i)(1)(A)(i), 7.5.

"(ii) For the next succeeding taxable year, 5.

"(iii) For the second next succeeding taxable year, 2.5.

"(iv) For any subsequent taxable year, zero."

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 48(o) (defining certain credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) ENTERPRISE ZONE CREDIT.—The term 'enterprise zone credit' means that portion of the credit allowed by section 38 which is attributable to the enterprise zone percentage."

(c) DEFINITIONS.—Section 48 (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by redesignating the subsection relating to cross references as subsection (u) and by inserting after subsection (s) the following new subsection:

"(t) NEW ENTERPRISE ZONE CONSTRUCTION PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'new enterprise zone construction property' means any section 1250 property which is—

"(A) located in an enterprise zone,

"(B) used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone, and

"(C) either—

"(i) the construction, reconstruction, rehabilitation, renovation, expansion, or erection of which is completed by the taxpayer during the period the designation as a zone is in effect under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act, or

"(ii) acquired during such period if the original use of such property commences with the taxpayer and commences during such period.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A)(i) The term 'new enterprise zone construction property' shall not include property acquired (directly or indirectly) by the taxpayer from a person who is related to the taxpayer (determined as of the time the property is acquired by the taxpayer).

"(ii) For purposes of clause (i), a person (hereinafter in this clause referred to as the 'related person') is related to any other person if—

"(I) the related person bears a relationship to such other person specified in section 267(b) or 707(b)(1), or

"(II) the related person and such other person are engaged in trades or businesses under common control (within the meaning of subsections (a) and (b) of section 52).

For purposes of subclause (I), '10 percent' shall be substituted for '50 percent' in applying sections 267(b)(1) and 767(b)(1). In the case of the acquisition of any property by any partnership which results from the termination of another partnership under section 708(b)(1)(B), the determination of whether the acquiring partnership is related to the other partnership shall be made immediately before the event resulting in such termination.

"(B) In applying section 46(c)(1)(A) in the case of property described in paragraph (1)(C)(i), there shall be taken into account only that portion of the basis which is properly attributable to construction or erection during such period.

"(3) REAL ESTATE RENTAL.—For purposes of this section, ownership of residential, commercial, or industrial real property within an enterprise zone for rental shall be treated as the active conduct of a trade or business in an enterprise zone."

(d) LODGING TO QUALIFY.—Paragraph (3) of section 48(a) (relating to property used for lodging) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (C),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and," and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) new enterprise zone construction property."

(e) RECAPTURE.—Subsection (a) of section 47 (relating to certain dispositions, etc., of section 38 property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10) SPECIAL RULES FOR NEW ENTERPRISE ZONE CONSTRUCTION PROPERTY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If, during any taxable year, property with respect to which the taxpayer claimed an enterprise zone credit is disposed of the tax under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by the amount described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) AMOUNT OF INCREASE.—The increase in tax under subparagraph (A) shall equal the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed under section 38 by reason of section 46(a)(4) for all prior taxable years which would have resulted solely from reducing the expenditures taken into account with respect to the property by an amount which bears the same ratio to such expenditures as the number of taxable years that the property was held by the taxpayer bears to the applicable recovery period for earnings and profits under section 312(k)."

(f) BASIS ADJUSTMENT TO REFLECT INVESTMENT CREDIT.—Paragraph (3) of section 48(q) (relating to basis adjustment to section 38 property) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR QUALIFIED REHABILITATION AND ENTERPRISE ZONE EXPENDITURES.—In the case of any credit determined under section 46(a) for—

"(A) any qualified rehabilitation expenditure in connection with a qualified rehabilitated building other than a certified historic structure, or

"(B) any expenditure in connection with new enterprise zone construction property (within the meaning of section 48(s)(1)), paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection and paragraph (5) of subsection (d) shall be applied without regard to the phrase '50 percent of'."

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods after December 31, 1988, under rules similar to the rules of section 48(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Subtitle C—Nonrecognition of Qualified Enterprise Zone Capital Gain Where Acquisition of Enterprise Zone Business Property

SEC. 221. NONRECOGNITION OF QUALIFIED ENTERPRISE ZONE CAPITAL GAIN WHERE ACQUISITION OF ENTERPRISE ZONE BUSINESS PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter O of chapter 1 (relating to nontaxable exchanges) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1043. NONRECOGNITION OF CAPITAL GAIN WHERE ACQUISITION OF ENTERPRISE ZONE BUSINESS PROPERTY.

"(a) NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN.—If—

"(1) any property is sold and there would (but for this section) be recognized gain with respect to such sale,

"(2) within the 1-year period beginning on the date of such sale qualified replacement property is acquired by the taxpayer, and

"(3) the taxpayer elects the application of this section with respect to such sale, such gain from such sale shall be recognized only to the extent that the amount realized from such sale exceeds the cost to the taxpayer of such replacement property.

"(b) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PROPERTY.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified replacement property' means—

"(A) any tangible personal property used predominantly in an enterprise zone in the active conduct of a trade or business within such enterprise zone,

"(B) any real property located in an enterprise zone used predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within such enterprise zone, and

"(C) any interest in a corporation, partnership, or other entity if, for the 3 most recent taxable years of such entity ending before the date of the purchase of such interest, such entity, was a qualified business.

"(2) QUALIFIED BUSINESS.—The term 'qualified business' means any person—

"(A) which is actively engaged in the conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone during each of the 3 most recent taxable years of such entity ending before the date of sale of the interest,

"(B) with respect to which at least 80 percent of such person's gross receipts for the taxable year are attributable to the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone, and

"(C) with substantially all of its tangible assets located within an enterprise zone.

"(3) REAL ESTATE RENTAL.—Ownership of residential, commercial, or industrial real property within an enterprise zone for rental shall be treated as the active conduct of a trade or business in an enterprise zone.

"(c) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EXCHANGE TREATED AS SALE.—An exchange by the taxpayer of property for other property shall be treated as a sale of the first property, and the acquisition of any qualified replacement property on the exchange of property shall be treated as a purchase of such replacement property.

"(2) SECTION NOT TO APPLY TO ORDINARY INCOME.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any gain to the extent such gain is treated as ordinary income under any provision of this chapter.

"(d) REDUCTION IN BASIS.—Where the purchase of any qualified replacement property results under subsection (a) in the nonrecognition of gain on the sale of any other property, the basis of such replacement property shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount of gain not so recognized on the sale of such other property. Where the purchase of more than 1 qualified replacement property is taken into account in the nonrecognition under subsection (a) of gain on the sale of a property, the preceding sentence shall be applied to each such replacement property in the order in which such properties are purchased.

"(e) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If the taxpayer during any taxable year sells any property at a gain, then—

"(1) the statutory period for the assessment of any deficiency attributable to any part of such gain shall not expire before the expiration of the 3-year period beginning on the date the Secretary is notified by the taxpayer (in such manner as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe) of—

"(A) the taxpayer's cost of purchasing any qualified replacement property which the taxpayer claims results in nonrecognition of any part of such gain,

"(B) the taxpayer's intention not to purchase any such investment within the 1-year period described in subsection (a), or

"(C) the failure by the taxpayer to purchase any such replacement property within such period; and

"(2) such deficiency may be assessed before the expiration of such 3-year period notwithstanding the provisions of any other law or rule of law which would otherwise prevent such assessment."

(b) HOLDING PERIOD.—Section 1223 (relating to holding period of property) is amended by redesignating paragraph (14) as paragraph (15) and by inserting after paragraph (13) the following new paragraph:

"(14) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held any qualified replacement property the acquisition of which resulted under section 1043 in the nonrecognition of any part of the gain realized on the sale or exchange of any other property, there shall be included the period for which the property sold or exchanged had been held as of the date of such sale or exchange."

(c) BASIS ADJUSTMENT.—Subsection (a) of section 1016 (relating to adjustments to basis) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (24), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (25) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(26) in the case of any qualified replacement property the acquisition of which resulted under section 1043 in the nonrecognition of gain on the sale or exchange of other property, to the extent provided by section 1043(d)."

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections of part III of subchapter O of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1043. Nonrecognition of qualified enterprise zone capital gain where acquisition of enterprise zone business property."

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to sales and exchanges after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after such date.

Subtitle D—Deduction for Purchase of Enterprise Stock

SEC. 231. DEDUCTION FOR PURCHASE OF ENTERPRISE STOCK.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part VI of subchapter B of chapter 1 (relating to itemized deductions for individuals and corporations) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 197. DEDUCTION FOR PURCHASE OF ENTERPRISE STOCK.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—At the election of the taxpayer, there shall be allowed as a deduction the aggregate amount paid during the taxable year for the purchase of enterprise stock on the original issue of such stock by a qualified issuer.

"(b) MAXIMUM DEDUCTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The maximum amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a) to a taxpayer for the taxable year shall not exceed $100,000.

"(2) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the taxpayer and all persons who are related persons with respect to the taxpayer shall be treated as 1 person, and the $100,000 amount in paragraph (1) shall be allocated among the taxpayer and such persons in proportion to their respective purchases of stock during the taxable year for which credit is allowable by this section.

"(3) ALLOCATION OF DEDUCTION WHERE MORE THAN $100,000 OF STOCK PURCHASED.—If the amount of stock purchased by any person exceeds the limitation under this subsection with respect to such person, the deduction allowed under this section shall be allocated pro rata among the stock so purchased in accordance with the purchase price per share.

"(c) DISPOSITIONS OF STOCK.—

"(1) GAIN TREATED AS ORDINARY INCOME.—If any enterprise stock with respect to which a deduction was allowed under this section is disposed of by the taxpayer, then the lesser of—

"(A) the excess of—

"(i)(I) in the case of a sale or exchange, the amount realized, or

"(II) in the case of any other disposition, the fair market value of the stock, over

"(ii) the adjusted basis of such stock, or

"(B) the amount of the deduction allowed under this section with respect to such stock, shall be treated as ordinary income. Such gain shall be recognized notwithstanding any other provision of this subtitle.

"(2) INTEREST CHARGED IF DISPOSITION WITHIN 3 YEARS OF PURCHASE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If any enterprise stock is disposed of before the end of the 3-year period beginning on the date such stock was purchased by the taxpayer, the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year in which such disposition occurs shall be increased by the enterprise stock recapture amount.

"(B) ENTERPRISE STOCK RECAPTURE AMOUNT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'enterprise stock recapture amount' means an amount equal to the amount of interest (determined at the rate applicable under section 6621) which would accrue—

"(i) during the period beginning on the date such stock was purchased by the taxpayer and ending on the date such stock was disposed of by the taxpayer,

"(ii) on the aggregate decrease in tax of the taxpayer resulting from the deduction allowed under this section with respect to the stock so disposed of.

"(d) TREATMENT WHERE ISSUER CEASES TO BE QUALIFIED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) any qualified issuer with respect to the stock of which any taxpayer has made an election under this section ceases to meet the requirements of subsection (e)(2)(A) (i), (iii), or (iv), and

"(B) such cessation occurs at any time before the close of the 5th taxable year ending after the date such stock was issued, the tax treatment described in paragraph (2) shall apply to the taxable year of the taxpayer in which such cessation occurs.

"(2) TAX TREATMENT OF TAXPAYER.—The tax treatment described in this paragraph for any taxable year is—

"(A) the taxpayer shall include in income as ordinary income the amount of the deduction allowed under this section with respect to such stock,

"(B) the tax imposed by this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by an amount equal to the amount of interest (determined at the rate applicable under section 6621) which would accrue—

"(i) during the period beginning on the date such stock was purchased by the taxpayer and ending on the disqualification date,

"(ii) on the aggregate decrease in tax of the taxpayer resulting from the deduction allowed under this section with respect to the stock.

"(3) DISQUALIFICATION DATE.—For purposes of paragraph (2), the term 'disqualification date' means the earlier of—

"(A) the date of the issuance by the qualified issuer (or any related person with respect to such issuer) of any regulated security, or

"(B) the last day of the taxable year of the qualified issuer in which the requirements of subsection (e)(2)(A) (i) or (iv) ceased to be met.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) ENTERPRISE STOCK.—The term 'enterprise stock' means common stock issued by a qualified issuer but only if the proceeds of such issue are used by such issuer in the conduct of a qualified business (as defined in section 1043(b)(3)(B)).

"(2) QUALIFIED ISSUER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified issuer' means any C corporation which, at the time of issuance of the stock involved—

"(i) is conducting a qualified business described in section 1043(b)(3)(B),

"(ii) does not have a net worth (either before or immediately after the issuance of the stock involved) exceeding $2,000,000,

"(iii) has not had at any time during the 5-year testing period any outstanding regulated securities issued by such corporation, and

"(iv) has derived during the testing period more than 50 percent of its gross receipts during such period from sources other than royalties, rents (other than rents from real estate described in section 1043(b)(3)(C)), dividends, interest, annuities, and sales and exchanges of stock or securities.

"(B) RELATED PERSONS TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN CERTAIN CASES.—For purposes of clauses (ii) and (iii) of subparagraph (A), the issuer and all persons who are related persons with respect to such issuer shall be treated as 1 person.

"(C) TESTING PERIOD.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'testing period' means the period beginning on the first day of the 5th taxable year beginning before the issuance of the stock involved and ending on the date of such issuance.

"(3) REGULATED SECURITIES.—The term 'regulated securities' means any security—

"(A) registered on a national exchange under section 12(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or

"(B) registered (or required to be registered) under section 12(g) of such Act (determined without regard to section 12(g)(2) of such Act).

"(4) RELATED PERSON.—A person is a related person to another person if—

"(A) such persons are treated as a single employer under subsections (a) and (b) of section 52, or

"(B) in the case of individuals, such persons are husband and wife.

"(f) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) AMOUNT PAID AFTER CLOSE OF TAXABLE YEAR.—An amount paid after the close of the taxable year for the purchase of enterprise stock shall be treated for purposes of subsection (a) as paid during such year if—

"(A) such amount is so paid not later than the time prescribed by law for filing the return for such taxable year (including extensions thereof), and

"(B) the taxpayer was under a binding contract as of the close of such taxable year to purchase such stock.

"(2) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF DEDUCTION.—If—

"(A) any enterprise stock is issued in exchange for property,

"(B) the basis of such stock in the hands of the taxpayer is determined by reference to the basis of such property, and

"(C) the adjusted basis (for determining gain) of such property immediately before the exchange exceeded its fair market value at such time, then the deduction under this section, and such adjusted basis, shall both be reduced by the excess described in subparagraph (C).

"(g) BASIS ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of this subtitle, if a deduction is allowed under this section with respect to the purchase of any stock, the basis of such stock (without regard to this subsection) shall be reduced by the amount of the deduction allowed with respect to the purchase of such stock."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Subsection (a) of section 1016 (relating to adjustments to basis), as amended by this Act, is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (25), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (26) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(27) to the extent provided in section 197(g), in the case of stock with respect to which a deduction was allowed under section 197."

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part VI of subchapter B of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 197. Deduction for purchase of enterprise stock."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to stock purchased after December 31, 1988.

Subtitle E—Rules Relating to Private Activity Bonds

SEC. 241. PRIVATE ACTIVITY BONDS.

(a) LIMITATION ON ACCELERATED COST RECOVERY DEDUCTION NOT TO APPLY TO ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—Subparagraph (C) of section 168(g)(5) (relating to limitations on property financed with tax-exempt bonds) is amended to read as follows:

"(C) EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any which is placed in service—

"(i) in connection with any qualified residential rental project (within the meaning of section 142(a)(7)), or

"(ii) as new enterprise zone construction property (within the meaning of section 48(t))."

(b) TERMINATION OF SMALL ISSUE EXEMPTION NOT TO APPLY.—Paragraph 12 of section 142(a) (relating to termination of small issue exemption) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—This paragraph shall not apply to any obligation which is part of an issue substantially all of the proceeds of which are used to finance facilities within an enterprise zone if such facilities are placed in service while the designation as such a zone is in effect under section 701 of the Enterprise Zone Act."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to obligations issued after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after such date.

Subtitle F—Ordinary Loss Deduction for Securities of Enterprise Zone Business Which Become Worthless

SEC. 251. ORDINARY LOSS DEDUCTION ALLOWED FOR SECURITIES OF ENTERPRISE ZONE BUSINESS WHICH BECOME WORTHLESS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (g) of section 165 (relating to losses) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) SECURITIES OF ENTERPRISE ZONE BUSINESS.—If any security of a qualified business (as defined in section 1043(b)) which is a capital asset becomes worthless during the taxable year—

"(A) paragraph (1) shall not apply, and

"(B) the loss resulting therefrom shall, for purposes of this subtitle, be treated as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of the taxable year, of property which is not a capital asset."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to losses sustained after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after such date.

Subtitle G—Increase in Research Credit for Research Conducted in Enterprise Zones

SEC. 261. INCREASE IN RESEARCH CREDIT FOR RESEARCH CONDUCTED IN ENTERPRISE ZONES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 41 (relating to credit for increasing research activities) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) INCREASE IN CREDIT FOR RESEARCH CONDUCTED IN ENTERPRISE ZONE.—Subsection (a)(1) shall be applied by substituting '37½ percent' for '20 percent' with respect to the lesser of—

"(1) the excess described in subsection (a)(1), or

"(2) the excess which would be described in subsection (a) if only research conducted in enterprise zones were taken into account.

For purposes of paragraph (2), an area shall be treated as an enterprise zone for a base period with respect to a taxable year if such area is designated as an enterprise zone for such taxable year."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988, and to base periods with respect to such taxable years.

Subtitle H—Sense of the Congress With Respect to Tax Simplification

SEC. 271. TAX SIMPLIFICATION.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of the Treasury should in every way possible simplify the administration and enforcement of any provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 added to, or amended by, this Act.

Subtitle I—Regulations

SEC. 281. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the amendments made by this title not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES IN ENTERPRISE ZONES

SEC. 301. FOREIGN-TRADE ZONE PREFERENCES.

(a) PREFERENCE IN ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES IN REVITALIZATION AREAS.—In processing applications for the establishment of foreign-trade zones pursuant to an Act entitled "To provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 998), the Foreign-Trade Zone Board shall consider on a priority basis and expedite, to the maximum extent possible, the processing of any application involving the establishment of a foreign-trade zone within an enterprise zone designated pursuant to section 701 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987.

(b) APPLICATION PROCEDURE.—In processing applications for the establishment of ports of entry pursuant to an Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and fifteen, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. 609), the Secretary of the Treasury shall consider on a priority basis and expedite, to the maximum extent possible, the processing of any application involving the establishment of a port of entry which is necessary to permit the establishment of a foreign-trade zone within an enterprise zone.

(c) APPLICATION EVALUATION.—In evaluating applications for the establishment of foreign-trade zones and ports of entry in connection with enterprise zones, the Foreign-Trade Zone Board and the Secretary of the Treasury shall approve the applications to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with their respective statutory responsibilities.

TITLE IV—FEDERAL CREDIT AND PROCUREMENT ASSISTANCE

SEC. 401. ENTERPRISE ZONE REVOLVING FUNDS.

Title VII of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 707. GRANTS TO CAPITALIZE REVOLVING FUNDS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to State and local governmental agencies and public-purpose nonprofit corporations, including agencies and corporations formed to serve consortia of local governments, to capitalize revolving loan funds to support private sector business development in an enterprise zone.

"(b) RECIPIENT CONTRIBUTION.—The Secretary shall require grant recipients to contribute to the capitalization of the revolving loan funds.

"(c) AMOUNT OF CONTRIBUTION.—Contributions shall be made in amounts directly proportional to the degree of economic distress in the zone, as determined by the Secretary.

"(d) LIMITATION.—The Secretary shall not require a contribution greater than the amount of the Federal grant.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $50,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993.".

SEC. 402. ENTERPRISE ZONE SET-ASIDES IN FEDERAL FORMULA FUNDING.

In the case of each program under which funds are allocated by an executive agency to States or political subdivisions of States, or both, under a formula established by Federal law or regulation, the head of the agency shall—

(1) require the agency to work with the Secretary to develop methods for assisting enterprise zones in participating in, and benefiting from, Federal procurement (civilian and defensive oriented), research projects, and federally funded construction projects;

(2) provide flexibility to States or political subdivisions of States, or both, in the administration of the program to provide the greatest possible benefits and assistance in such zones;

(3) in each fiscal year, identify the goods and services to be procured by such executive agency during such fiscal year that may be procured from one or more commercial sources located primarily in a zone; and

(4) in each fiscal year, identify the amount of Federal funds and grants that are to be expended on or awarded to colleges, universities, or research firms, for research and development activities during that fiscal year.

SEC. 403. PRIORITY FOR ENTERPRISE ZONES IN CERTAIN CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS.

The Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"PRIORITY FOR ENTERPRISE ZONES IN CERTAIN CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

"SEC. 26. (a) Under regulations prescribed by the Administrator, the head of each executive agency shall each fiscal year, in determining the location of new Federal buildings and activities related to their construction, give equal consideration to enterprise zones.

"(b) Subsection (a) shall apply without regard to any other provision of law.".●

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today I join my colleague Senator BOSCHWITZ in introducing the Enterprise Zone Improvement Act of 1989 to strengthen the title VII enterprise zone section of the 1987 Housing Act. Senator BOSCHWITZ and I were original cosponsors of enterprise legislation in 1982 that was passed by the Senate in 1983, and again in 1984. This was a great concept then and still is. Our legislation will provide businesses with incentives to locate and expand in designated rural and urban enterprise zones. While my colleague has mentioned the 100 urban and rural enterprise zone designations, the importance of the 33 rural enterprise zones authorized by Congress under title VII cannot be emphasized enough.

In States such as mine—the State of Washington—the full set of incentives and support we are proposing are particularly needed to encourage regional revitalization and renewal. In my State and others similarly situated across this country, State constitutional restraints limit the fiscal incentives that the State may directly provide to stimulate the location and expansion of businesses. To alleviate this burden, this legislation targets Federal assistance to enterprise zones so that they can participate in and benefit from existing Federal programs, as well as Federal procurement contracts, research and construction projects.

Washington State is concerned about the Federal trade deficit, and already has done something about it—Tacoma, WA, has the largest free trade zone in the Nation. However, we can do more. The application process is slow, usually taking about 2 years, this discourages businesses who need the benefit of foreign trade zones in more timely fashion. I have proposed that the application be processed and completed within 180 days, and appeals processed in the subsequent 180 days. This will help attract businesses that are interested.

Two distressed areas in Washington State, Yakima and Ellensburg, have or will be applying soon, and many more desperately need enterprise zone designation. I will make every effort to stimulate economic prosperity through this vital program.

I must give my very special thanks to Senator BOSCHWITZ of Minnesota, who has been very receptive and concerned about provisions that will spread the benefits of enterprise zones to rural areas in the State of Washington and elsewhere throughout our vast Nation. I look forward to working with many of you to make economic prosperity a reality in all our communities.●

S. 59. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income the gain on certain sales of lands subject to ground leases; to the Committee on Finance.

EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN LAND SALES FROM GROSS INCOME

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income, profits on lease fee conversions of residential properties. This exemption, available until 1995, would provide an incentive for landowners to sell their fee simple interests to those persons currently leasing the land. It specifically addresses the situation involving condominium and co-op owners who are currently leasing the land on which their buildings or houses are situated.

This bill would increase the chances of residential and condominium-owners, who currently lease their land, to become homeowners in the true sense of the word by purchasing the land on which they live.

The impact of this bill would be tremendous. In Hawaii, an estimated 70,000 people would be affected by this legislation. Much of the land in Hawaii is owned by a few large estates. Allowing these estates to sell some of their fee simple interests would benefit the State and its residents by increasing the number of landowners and thereby redistributing the wealth.

The large landholding estates in Hawaii would welcome this legislation as an opportunity to dispose of some of their land. The current system addresses the goal of broadening the number of landowners by mandatory conversions. This is a costly procedure requiring government condemnation of the land as part of the transfer. This bill would create an incentive for voluntary lease fee conversions. This would effectively remove the need for the Government's involvement in this process.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill be placed in the RECORD following this statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 59

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) part III of subchapter B of chapter I of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by redesignating section 135 as section 136 and by inserting after section 134 the following new section:

"SEC. 135. GAIN ON CERTAIN SALES OF LAND SUBJECT TO GROUND LEASE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Gross income shall not include any gain on a qualified sale of land.

"(b) QUALIFIED SALE.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified sale' means any sale or exchange of land if—

"(1) such land was subject to a ground lease on the date of the enactment of this section and at all times thereafter before the date of such sale or exchange,

"(2) such sale or exchange is to the lessee under such ground lease,

"(3) the only buildings on such land are residential buildings (or appurtenant structures), and

"(4) such sale or exchange is on or before December 31, 1995.

"(c) RESIDENTIAL BUILDING.—For purposes of this section, the term 'residential building' means—

"(1) any single-family house, and

"(2) any building containing 2 or more dwelling units (as defined in section 167(k)(3)(C)) if 80 percent or more of such building (other than common areas) consists of dwelling units (as so defined)."

(b) The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 135 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 135. Grain on certain sales of land subject to ground lease.

"Sec. 136. Cross references to other Acts."

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply to sales or exchanges after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.●

S. 60. A bill concerning the naturalization of natives of the Philippines through active-duty service in the Armed Forces during World War II; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATURALIZATION OF PHILIPPINE NATIVES IN WORLD WAR II

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill that would enable Filipino war veterans, who served in the United States Armed Forces during World War II, to be naturalized as United States citizens.

Congress previously recognized the contributions made by the Filipino veterans during World War II. In March 1942, Congress amended the Nationality Act of 1940 allowing the naturalization of Filipino noncitizens who served honorably in our armed services during World War II. The law expired on December 31, 1946. Many veterans, however, were precluded from taking advantage of the naturalization process for 9 months as a result of a decision made by the Attorney General to remove the naturalization examiner from the Philippines. This action was taken at the request of the Philippine Government, based on its concern over the large number of Filipinos emigrating to the United States.

This 9-month absence of a naturalization examiner during the filing period was the basis for numerous lawsuits by Filipino war veterans. The common claim raised in these cases was the naturalization eligibility under the terms of the 1942 act. After a prolonged 21 year legal battle, the Supreme Court, on June 17, 1988, ruled in INS versus Pangilinan, that the Filipino veterans has no statutory right to citizenship under the expired provisions of the Nationality Act of 1940. As a result of the Court's decision in Pangilinan, the Immigration and Naturalization Service denied all pending petitions and is rejecting any new applictions it receives from these veterans.

Approximately 1,000 Filipino veterans have been allowed to reside in the United States pending the disposition of their applications. I understand that some of these veterans were able to obtain permanent resident status under the amnesty provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. However, there are others who were ineligible to apply for permanent status. While the Service will continue to allow these veterans to remain, they are without an immigration status. Many are old and frail. It would be a tragedy if they passed on without becoming U.S. citizens.

Congress was generous in enacting legislation for illegal immigrants. It seems only fair that it extend the same privileges to the brave Filipino veterans who risked their lives to protect our Nation's principles of liberty and democracy. In an effort to fulfill an American promise to our Filipino allies, who served to protect our country, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill be placed in the RECORD following this statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 60

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding Section 329 (8. U.S.C. 1440) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "Any" and inserting "Except as provided in subsection (e), any"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) shall not apply to the naturalization of any person—

"(1) who was born in the Philippines or who was otherwise a noncitizen national of the United States residing in the Philippines before the service described in paragraph (2);

"(2) who served honorably in an active-duty status in the military, air, or naval forces of the United States at any time during the period beginning September 1, 1939, and ending December 31, 1946;

"(3) who is otherwise eligible for naturalization under this section; and

"(4) who applies for naturalization not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act.●

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of this much needed and long overdue legislation to provide for the naturalization of a very heroic, but mostly forgotten group of veterans of the Second World War.

The first call upon a nation is that it honor its just obligations. And yet, Mr. President, the legislation we are introducing today calls upon this Nation to honor a commitment, making good on a 40-year-old promise to Filipino veterans who fought for the freedom of this Nation.

During the spring of 1942, when the United States faced one of its darkest hours in the Pacific, President Franklin Roosevelt sent out a call to arms to foreign nationals, offering the reward of U.S. citizenship to those who would take up arms and fight alongside our own forces. The Congress agreed with President Roosevelt and put that promise into law. Filipinos joined guerrilla units by the thousands, courageously fighting in that long campaign that ultimately led to an allied victory in the Pacific.

However, Mr. President, these same Filipinos veterans were denied that reward of U.S. citizenship because, by executive decision, the United States removed its only naturalization office from the Philippines in October 1945, allowing it to be reopened 9 months later in August 1946. The law insuring U.S. citizenship for these brave veterans expired at the end of 1946—their window of opportunity closed.

The war won and security secured, everyone suddenly turned their backs on the Filipino veteran. Since that time, they have fought for this lost right to citizenship. Ironically, and in light of their brave and selfless contributions to that victory in the Pacific so many years ago, this plight of the Filipino veterans has been overlooked.

Overlooked, that is until now, Mr. President, because along with the other sponsors of this legislation and, in particular, Senator INOUYE of Hawaii, who has been very eloquent advocate on behalf of the Filipino veteran, I am committed to insuring that that promise made by this Government over 40 years ago is not left unfulfilled. Our commitment to those whose defense and dedication to freedom of democracy can no longer be forgotten, and for this reason I urge timely action on this legislation.●

S. 61. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to permit schools offering degrees in social work to obtain grants for training projects in geriatrics; to the Committee on Labor and Human Services.

TRAINING PROJECTS IN GERIATRICS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to authorize schools of social work to apply for grants under the title 7 U.S. Public Health Service geriatric training initiatives. Our Nation's clinical social workers have long been working closely with the elderly and in my judgment have been in the forefront in developing innovative home health care programs and day care services. Accordingly, I feel that we should facilitate their training institutions applying for these important Federal funds.

S. 62. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to give the Director of the National Center for Nursing Research certain authorities commensurate with those of the directors of the National Research Institutes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DIRECTOR OF NATIONAL CENTER FOR NURSING RESEARCH

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing technical legislation in order to provide the Director of the National Center for Nursing Research certain authority commensurate with those of the other directors of the various national research institutes and to provide the Center with construction grant authority similar to that which several of the other institutes already possess.

It is my understanding that the Department has no objection to the first part of this legislation and that this will facilitate the ability of the National Institutes of Health to ensure that nursing expertise becomes truly incorporated into our Nation's behavioral and biomedical health endeavors.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 63. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide independence to clinical social workers with respect to services furnished at a comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facility; to the Committee on Finance.

CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKERS SERVICES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to authorize the autonomous functioning of clinical social workers within the Medicare comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facility program.

In my judgment, it is truly unfortunate that programs such as this currently require the clinical supervision of one element of our Nation's health delivery system and do not allow each of the various health professions to truly function to the extent of the various State practice acts. In my judgment, Mr. President, it is especially appropriate that those who need the services of outpatient rehabilitation facilities have access to a wide range of social and behavioral science expertise.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

By Mr. SYMMS:

S. 65. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to eliminate a reduction of the apportionment of Federal-aid highway funds to certain States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

REPEAL OF SPEED LIMIT COMPLIANCE PROVISONS

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to reintroduce this bill to eliminate the highway funding sanctions and speed compliance requirements associated with the national maximum speed limit law. Approval of this measure will end a Federal compliance process which forces many States to choose between saving money and saving lives. I firmly believe enactment of this bill will save lives and reduce the number of injuries occurring annually on our Nation's highways.

Currently, States must report to the Secretary of Transportation speed monitoring data on highways posted at 55 mph, and they are considered in compliance if at least 50 percent of the vehicles on those highways are traveling at or below the speed limit. A State found to be out of compliance is subject to the loss of up to 10 percent of its primary, secondary, and urban highway funds. The compliance requirements and funding sanctions are supposed to enhance highway safety by ensuring that States are enforcing "55."

Unfortunately, the combination of compliance requirements and sanctions often detracts from highway safety, rather than enhancing it. Here's how: Although interstates are the safest highways in the country, most high-speed travel occurs on the Interstate System. States with speed data approaching the 50 percent noncompliance mark often choose to beef up traffic patrols on interstate highways in order to stay in compliance and avoid the loss of highway funds; putting more troopers on interstate speed control duty detracts from drunk driving enforcement, speed control, and other safety enforcement programs on the far more dangerous noninterstate highways. The result is more highway fatalities and injuries, not less. The cause is this federally imposed program of compliance requirements and funding sanctions.

My bill repeals only the compliance criteria and the sanction for noncompliance. It does not repeal the speed monitoring and reporting requirements. In fact, it extends those requirements to cover highways posted above 55. Congress and the administration will still have an opportunity to review speed data regularly and judge the effectiveness of State enforcement efforts.

Last year, Congress enacted a 1-year moratorium on sanctions against the three States—California, New York, and North Dakota—that were out of compliance for fiscal year 1987. I was pleased to participate in that effort to provide some temporary relief to those States. Clearly, however, Congress needs to review the compliance and sanctions program before the end of the current fiscal year.

The preliminary compliance statistics for fiscal year 1988 are being reviewed at the Federal Highway Administration. They indicate that two States—California and New Hampshire—are out of compliance for that year. If those numbers bear out, New York and North Dakota will no longer be subject to the loss of highway funds for noncompliance in 1987. However, California remains in trouble, New Hampshire is now at risk, and there is a string of States within 3 percentage points of noncompliance for the last fiscal year.

It is time to enact a permanent correction. I believe this bill is the proper response to a program that does not reduce driving speed, does not encourage better traffic enforcement programs, but does produce more highway fatalities and injuries. I invite my colleagues' cosponsorship of the bill and will seek to move it forward as quickly as possible.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Subsection (c) of section 154 of title 23, United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Secretary shall not approve any project under section 106 in any State that fails to certify to the Secretary by January 1 of each calendar year (1) that any public highway within the State posted at a maximum speed limit of fifty-five miles per hour or higher and constructed with Federal-aid highway funds has been designed and constructed to standards applicable at the time of construction which are appropriate for the speed permitted on such highway, and (2) that the State has been enforcing, during the one-year period ending on September 30 of each calendar year, the speed limits on public roads within the State posted at fifty-five miles per hour or higher. Such certification shall include a statement certifying that the posted maximum speed limits on public highways in the State do not exceed the speed limits allowed under subsection(a).".

(b) Section 154 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking out subsections (e), (f), (g), and (h).

SEC. 3. Each State shall report to the Secretary speed monitoring data on any public highway with speed limits posted at fifty-five miles per hour or higher in the same manner and in the same form as such data on public highways with speed limits posted at fifty-five miles per hour was submitted to the Secretary for the fiscal year immediately preceding the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. Section 109 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding subsection (p) as follows:

"(p) The Secretary shall not approve plans and specifications for any proposed highway project on a Federal-aid system which is to be posted at a maximum speed limit of fifty-five miles per hour or higher if such plans and specifications fail to provide for a facility designed and constructed for a speed limit equal to or greater than that to be posted upon completion: Provided, That nothing in this subsection is intended to prohibit or restrict the use of advisory speed signs in accordance with accepted practices.".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 66. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to permit schools of nursing to obtain grants for training projects in geriatrics; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NURSE TRAINING IN GERIATRICS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation which would authorize our Nation's schools of nursing to apply for support under title VII of the Public Health Service Act's geriatric initiatives. I fully understand the concerns that some might have in crossing title VII and title VIII programs, however, given the truly pressing that we have in providing quality geriatric care at this time, I feel such an amendment would be appropriate.

I ask unanimous consent that the test of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 66

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. GERIATRICS TRAINING PROJECTS.

Section 788(d)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 295g-8(D)(1)) by inserting a comma and "schools of nursing (as such term is defined in section 853(2))," after "701(8)".●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 67. A bill to establish a temporary program under which parenteral diacetylmorphine will be made available through qualified pharmacies for the relief of intractable pain due to cancer; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE COMPASSIONATE PAIN RELIEF ACT

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which is directed to relieving the suffering of a small but significant number of our citizens; patients who are terminally ill with cancer and whose pain has not been effectively mitigated with currently available medications.

For many years, the thought of cancer and its accompanying pain have sent chills of fear through all of us; likewise, the thought of heroin and its addictive qualities produces similar fears. In my judgment, we are in a position now where we can make a logical and thoughtful decision to legalize the therapeutic use of heroin for the terminally ill cancer patient suffering intractable pain while at the same time safeguarding against the diversion of the drug into illicit channels.

The legislation I am introducing today is supported by thousands of Americans and is identical to that which was sponsored by 13 of my colleagues during the 99th Congress. Furthermore, I am pleased to report that to a great extent, it reflects the evolution and thinking of our Nation's health care system as evidenced by the editorial in the January 14, 1982, issue of the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine, which urged more flexibility in the use of addictive drugs in the treatment of pain. This thinking is also present in an official statement made by the American Psychiatric Association which endorses the "principle that the effectiveness of relief of pain in terminal cancer patients should take priority over a concern about 'addiction' of the terminal cancer patient and should take priority over a concern about medication diversion to addicts." A later article in the New England Journal of Medicine of August 23, 1984, by Dr. Allen Mondzac, reviewed the unique characteristics of heroin and its valuable clinical role where it is available.

The need for this legislation is dramatic. Although over the past two decades a great deal of progress has been made in treating cancer, each year an estimated 800,000 Americans are diagnosed as having cancer, and over 400,000 die from the disease. Most of these individuals will have received competent and compassionate medical care, and many will receive adequate relief of pain. Unfortunately, the reality is also that a certain number of cancer patients do not obtain relief of pain from the current available analgesic medication—even the strongest narcotics. An NIH panel that convened in May 1986, heard testimony that 50 to 60 percent of patients with cancer pain lived the last part of their lives with unrelieved severe pain. As a minimal figure, it has elsewhere been estimated that about 20 percent of terminal cancer patients suffer significant pain.

Of this 20 percent, it has been estimated that 10 percent do not obtain relief with presently prescribed medications. In human terms, these percentages mean that as many as 8,000 Americans may die in agony this year because of the intractable pain associated with terminal cancer. I have been assured by my medical colleagues that in many cases this pain can be alleviated with the therapeutic use of heroin, making the last weeks, months, or days of these patients more bearable. These dying patients are not now given the option of dying with dignity because of our Nation's continued and overriding fear of the term heroin. In my judgment, this fear alone has prevented us, the lawmakers of our Nation, from making clear and rational decisions regarding the limited use of this long-proven and already available substance.

Heroin has been proven effective with a number of patients in relieving pain. Research completed at Georgetown University's Vincent T. Lombardi Cancer Research Center has found heroin to be an effective analgesic for the control of cancer-related pain. In particular, it has been reported to be more potent than morphine in relieving cancer pain. Less than half of the dose of heroin produces the same pain relief as a dose of morphine. In the terminal phase of cancer, many patients cannot take medication by mouth, and may require injections. As the disease progesses, individuals may require higher doses at more frequent intervals, to provide relief. This is when it would be desirable to have the option of using heroin in treating pain, since heroin is more potent and more soluble than morphine salts, and an effective dose can be administered in considerably smaller volumes. Thus, doctors have informed me that it is less painful to have such an injection—an important consideration in the emaciated patient with little tissue mass remaining.

Further, the onset of action of the heroin is also more rapid than morphine because of its solubility, giving relief of pain and a sense of well-being sooner. It is most unfortunate that the use of heroin for these patients has not been allowed up to this date. This legislation will enable physicians to treat the dying cancer patient who suffers from intractable pain with a proven, effective medication.

The time has now come to address the issue of why the heroin should not be readily available as a therapeutic medication for our Nation's physicians in very specific situations when we have dying cancer patients who are suffering extreme pain. William Buckley has described our irrational maintenance of the prohibition against such uses of heroin in very real terms. As he pointed out:

> The irony is that anybody in a major city can acquire the knowledge necessary to buy heroin from a dirty little drug pimp, but licensed doctors may not administer the identical drug to men and women—and children—literally dying from excruciating pain.

Our colleagues on the House Subcommittee on Health and the Environment held hearings on a similar bill on September 4, 1980. At that time, a number of practicing physicians and others asked that the Federal controls on heroin be eased to permit the prescription of heroin for patients for whom more conventional pain killers were inadequate. It was further pointed out that in Great Britain, heroin has been used for years for these patients and that it has been shown to be particularly effective for those 10 percent of terminal cancer patients who require injected medication. British physicians consider heroin to be an indispensible potent narcotic analgesic in the treatment of advanced cancer. Use of heroin in specific situations is also permitted in Belgium, New Zealand, China, and many other civilized nations.

Since this information was made public in the House hearings the editorial writers of our country have taken up the issue, as reflected in supportive statements by, among a number of others, the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Washington Times, the Los Angeles Times, the San Francisco Chronicle, the San Francisco Examiner, the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, the Honolulu Advertiser, the Chicago Sun-Times, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Rocky Mounty News, and the Richmond Times-Dispatch. Both National Review and the New Republic have backed the proposal. The American Nurses' Association has come out strongly endorsing this merciful action. Within the past year, as a result of widespread support among physicians and the general public, heroin has become available in Canada for terminal cancer patients.

The bill I am introducing today will give a very high priority to relief from intractable pain for terminal cancer patients. It authorizes the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to establish demonstration programs which will permit the use of heroin by terminally ill cancer patients only, when suffering from pain which is not effectively treated with currently available analgesic medications.

My bill has more than adequate safeguards to prevent the drug from being introduced to the general public. For example, a diagnosis must be made by the attending physician that his or her patient is ill with cancer and is suffering from pain which is not being effectively treated with other available analgesic medications. This diagnosis must be reviewed and approved by a medical review board of the hospital which will dispense the heroin. The heroin used in the program will be from that supply now confiscated under current laws. The Secretary of Health and Human Services is further authorized to establish additional regulations for the safe use and storage of heroin, to prevent its diversion into illicit channels. This program will be in force for a 5-year period and periodic reporting is required of the Secretary on the activities under the bill.

I strongly believe that this proposal will provide substantial benefits to those who are in intractable pain from terminal cancer and I am hopeful that my colleagues on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee will give this measure their prompt and most serious consideration.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill and attached relevant articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 67

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Compassionate Pain Relief Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) cancer is a progressive, degenerative, and often painful disease which afflicts one out of every four Americans and is the second leading cause of death;

(2) in the progression of terminal cancer, a significant number of patients will experience levels of intense and intractable pain which cannot be effectively treated by presently available medication;

(3) the effect of such pain often leads to a severe deterioration in the quality of life of the patient and heartbreak for the patient's family;

(4) the therapeutic use of parenteral diacetylmorphine is not permitted in the United States but extensive clinical research has demonstrated that it is a potent, highly soluble painkilling drug when properly formulated and administered under a physician's supervision;

(5) making parenteral diacetylmorphine available to patients through controlled channels as a drug for the relief of intractable pain due to terminal cancer is in the public interest;

(6) diacetylmorphine is successfully used in Great Britain and other countries for relief of pain due to cancer;

(7) the availability of parenteral diacetylmorphine for the limited purposes of controlling intractable pain due to terminal cancer will not adversely effect the abuse of illicit drugs or increase the incidence of pharmacy thefts;

(8) the availability of parenteral diacetylmorphine will enhance the ability of physicians to effectively treat and control intractable pain due to terminal cancer; and

(9) it is appropriate for the Federal Government to establish a temporary program to permit the use of pharmaceutical dosage forms of parenteral diacetylmorphine for the control of intractable pain due to terminal cancer.

SEC. 3. PARENTERAL DIACETYLMORPHINE PROGRAM.

(a) REGULATIONS.—

(1) ISSUANCE.—Not later than three months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall issue regulations establishing a program under which parenteral diacetylmorphine may be made available to hospital pharmacies and other such pharmacies as may be prescribed by the Secretary for dispensing pursuant to written prescriptions of physicians to individuals for the relief of intractable pain due to terminal cancer (hereinafter in this section referred to as "the program").

(2) TERMINAL CANCER.—For purposes of the program, an individual shall be considered to have terminal cancer if there is histologic evidence of a malignancy in the individual and the individual's cancer is generally recognized as a cancer with a high and predictable mortality.

(3) INTENT OF CONGRESS.—It is the intent of Congress that the Secretary primarily utilize hospital pharmacies for the dispensing of parenteral diacetylmorphine under the program, but Congress recognizes that humanitarian concerns might necessitate the provision of parenteral diacetylmorphine through pharmacies other than hospital pharmacies in cases in which a significant need is shown for such provision and in which adequate protection is available against the diversion of parenteral diacetylmorphine.

(b) MANUFACTURING.—The Secretary shall provide for the manufacture of parenteral diacetylmorphine for dispensing under the program using adequate methods in, and adequate facilities and controls for, the manufacturing, processing, and packing of such drug to preserve its identity, strength, quality, and purity.

(c) AVAILABILITY TO PHARMACIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Under the program parenteral diacetylmorphine may only be made available, upon application, to pharmacies registered under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act that also meet such qualifications as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

(2) APPLICATION.—An application for parenteral diacetylmorphine shall—

(A) be in such form and submitted in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe; and

(B) contain assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that—

(i) the applicant meets such special requirements as the Secretary may prescribe respecting the storage and dispensing of parenteral diacetylmorphine; and

(ii) parenteral diacetylmorphine provided under the application will be dispensed through the applicant upon the written prescription of a physician registered under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act to dispense controlled substances in schedule II of such Act.

(d) ILLICIT DIVERSION.—Requirements prescribed by the Secretary under subsections (b) and (c)(2)(A) shall be designed to protect against the diversion into illicit channels of parenteral diacetylmorphine distributed under the program.

(e) PRESCRIPTION BY PHYSICIANS.—A physician registered under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act may prescribe parenteral diacetylmorphine for individuals for the relief of intractable pain due to terminal cancer. Any such prescription shall be in writing as prescribed by the Secretary by regulations.

(f) FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT.—The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and titles II and III of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 shall not apply with respect to—

(1) the importing of opium,

(2) the manufacture of parenteral diacetylmorphine, and

(3) the distribution and dispensing of parenteral diacetylmorphine, in accordance with the program.

SEC. 4. REPORTS.

(a) BY THE SECRETARY.—

(1) IMPLMENTATION AND ACTIVITIES.—Not later than the second month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act and every third month thereafter until the program is established under section 3, the Secretary shall report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate on the activities undertaken to implement the program. Each year after the program is established and while the program is in effect, the Secretary shall report to such committees on the activities under the program during the period for which the report is submitted.

(2) PAIN MANAGEMENT.—The Secretary shall transmit a report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act that—

(A) describes the extent of research activities on the management of pain which have received funds through the National Institutes of Health;

(B) describes the ways in which the Federal Government supports the training of health personnel in pain management, and

(C) contains recommendations for expanding and improving the training of health personnel in pain management.

(b) BY THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—On the expiration of 56 months after the date on which the program is established, the Comptroller General of the United States shall report to the committees referred to in subsection (a)(1) on the activities under the program during such 56-month period.

SEC. 5. MODIFICATION AND TERMINATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may at any time 6 months after implementation of the program modify or terminate the program if in the judgment of the Secretary the program is no longer needed or if modifications or termination is needed to prevent substantial diversion of the diacetylmorphine.

(b) FINAL TERMINATION.—The program established under section 3 shall terminate on the expiration of 60 months after the date the program is established.

AN ACT OF MERCY

Chances are that Congress won't accomplish much in this presidential election year, but there is one piece of business that it should not fail to complete. It should pass legislation—with an impressive and growing bipartisan list of sponsors in both houses—that would legalize the carefully controlled use of heroin in the treatment of cancer patients dying in intractable pain.

One of the curiosities of medical practice in this country is that hundreds of billions are spent to prolong life, but relatively little attention is paid to making sure that patients survive in a tolerable degree of comfort and alertness. Modern medicine keeps promising better painkillers, and new methods of administration may offer patients more continuous relief from currently available drugs. But—as experts testifying recently before Chairman Henry Waxman's health subcommittee strongly asserted—many patients now die in needless agony because they are denied access to heroin, the one drug that could relieve their pain.

Heroin has come into increasing use as a painkiller in Great Britain in recent years because of its demonstrated superiority in treating certain cancer patients. Heroin acts faster than morphine and other widely used painkillers, and it can also be administered in smaller doses—an important consideration in treating emaciated patients. Moreover, unlike other potent drugs, it does not make the patient comatose, depressed, nauseous or hallucinatory. As a result, patients are able to remain alert, communicate with other family members and, because anxiety and depression are relieved, may also live longer.

Heroin was banned from medical practice in this country in 1924 because of fears that it would be diverted to illegal street use—an unwarranted fear that still motivates opponents of the proposed legislation. Since only very small quantities of the drug would have to be kept by hospitals—most cancer patients do not suffer intractable pain—the same precautions used to guard other street-valuable drugs would be adequate to prevent misuse. To be on the safe side the proposed legislation adds still further controls.

Right now hundreds, perhaps thousands, of cancer patients are racked with pain while their families watch in despair. In testifying before the Waxman committee, Dr. Allen Mondzac, chairman of the D.C. Medical Society's Cancer Committee, noted that "right now, in America, we know of a drug which is the most potent, effective, soluble and rapidly active narcotic ever created. It is not available. I do not understand this." Neither do we.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Nov. 9, 1983]

RELIEF FOR THE TERMINALLY ILL

Abhorrence of heroin and the national commitment to eradicate its abuse have led to an unreasonable resistance to legislation that would permit the use of this drug in the one justifiable form—to relieve the agony of terminally ill cancer patients. There is now an opportunity to correct that and to open to hundreds of Americans a relief from the terrible pain that responds to no other analgesic.

Senator Daniel K. Inouye (D-Hawaii) has taken the lead with the support of 15 other senators, Republicans and Democrats, brought together by the overwhelming evidence that doctors require this added tool if they are to relieve the otherwise intractable pain of many cancer patients. One of the group, Sen. Dennis DeConcini (D-Ariz.), is now planning to offer the proposal as an amendment to the National Institutes of Health reauthorization act. It deserves the support of all members of Congress.

Under present regulations, doctors must rely on morphine in controlling pain. It has proved effective in most cases. Tests in the United States, reported last year in scientific journals, found the two drugs of equal effectiveness. But many patients develop a tolerance to morphine over a prolonged period, and the drug loses its effectiveness, Heroin has proved effective in these cases. In Great Britain, where doctors have the option of morphine or heroin, the use of heroin is increasing rapidly because of its demonstrated superiority in certain cases. Forty-seven nations now permit the medical use of heroin.

One advantage of heroin is its potency. "A small subgroup of patients requiring large, intramuscular injections could benefit from heroin because it is more water-soluble as well as more potent than morphine," it was reported in Medical News. In cases of this sort, more massive injections of morphine forced into the emaciated bodies of the dying patient can be a source of additional severe pain.

Nothing in the proposed legislation can address a fundamental problem in the United States. That problem is the failure of many physicians to comprehend pain control, now a highly developed specialization in the medical profession. Ignorance of new techniques and reliance on programs geared to timetables rather than to the comfort of patients have left many people unnecessarily in intractable pain, according to experts.

The proposed legislation would limit heroin to terminal cancer patients in licensed hospitals, with peer review required for any doctor's decision to use it. That may prove unreasonably restrictive, particularly because it would deny applications in the home-oriented hospice program how being funded by Medicare. But it is a start. And Inouye's staff is convinced that the understandable horror of heroin abuse precludes going farther at this time.

"We have to take whatever we can get," according to Judith H. Quattlebaum, president of the National Committee on the Treatment of Intractable Pain. To do less would be a cruel rejection of this additional tool for controlling acute suffering.

THE VALUE OF HEROIN

Heroin is a curse for otherwise healthy addicts. But it is also a potent analgesic, valued by many physicians in treating the pain of terminally ill cancer patients. That is why Representative Henry Waxman's bill authorizing strictly limited use in hospitals and hospices deserves support.

First synthesized in Britain in 1874, heroin replaced morphine as the most popular injectable painkiller. It was legally used—and abused—in the United States until 1924, when Congress outlawed its import and manufacture.

Since then, dozens of other powerful analgesics have been synthesized, most of them addicting. But in Britain, heroin remains the painkiller of choice whenever addiction risk is a secondary consideration, and for good reason.

According to Dr. Allen Mondzac, director of the Warwick Cancer Clinic at George Washington University, heroin's high potency combined with its solubility make it the most efficient drug for controlling pain in extremely ill patients. In addition, the euphoric effect that so attracts addicts counteracts the depression experienced by chronic users of other painkillers.

The Reagan Administration, fearing that the drug would be diverted to the illegal market, opposes Government manufacture of heroin and distribution through hospital and hospice pharmacies. There is undoubtedly some risk that a trickle of Government heroin would be added to the river of illegally imported narcotics. But as long as physicians believe that heroin is better than any other drug for easing the trauma of dying cancer patients, that risk ought to be worth taking.

[From the News American, Baltimore, Md., Mar. 25, 1982]

HEROIN FOR THE TERMINALLY ILL

(By William F. Buckley, Jr.)

Finally, somebody has got around to introducing an amendment to the Controlled Substances Act, designed to make it possible to administer heroin to some patients dying of cancer. The hero in the case is Sen. Daniel Inouye of Hawaii, and the word "hero" is not used flippantly, because inevitably there will be those who accuse the senator of adding to the drug problem. A little thought, and a little patience, will dispose of these charges, but not everyone is willing to give a little thought, or to show a little patience, in discussing the problem of heroin. What would be ideal is to bring together the critics of Mr. Inouye's bill and some human beings who, as I write, are screaming (I do not use a metaphor) with pain.

Here are some interesting figures brought out by Sen. Inouye in his speech introducing S. 2013. There are 400,000 Americans alive today who within the next 12 months will die of cancer. Eighty thousand of those condemned will suffer "significant" pain. And of these, 8,000 will experience agony that is not mitigated by such prescriptions as are currently allowed. After a while, morphine just doesn't work with some people.

Why it took so long to come through with a medically reliable experiment is something to wonder about, inasmuch as the use of heroin has been outlawed since 1924. Anyway, thanks to the Vince Lombardi Cancer Research Institute of Georgetown, an experiment was conducted. Forty-eight cancer patients suffering serious pain were injected, one-half with heroin, one-half with morphine, by nurses who did not know which substance they were administering. It transpired that the patients rated heroin as two and one-half times more effective than morphine in bringing relief.

This experiment, together with accumulated testimony from Great Britain and from 37 other countries that tolerate carefully supervised use of heroin brought an endorsement from the New England Journal of Medicine and subsequently from the American Psychiatric Association.

Senator Inouye's bill, backed now by 15 members of the Senate, an ideologically uncolored coalition ranging from left (Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich.) to right (Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho), is cautious in several wholly understandable respects. The medical doctor in charge of a patient for whom the use of heroin might be appropriate must first himself recommend the drug's use and then submit his recommendation to a medical review board. If the recommendation is there sustained, the hospital will dispense the heroin from supplies made available by the Department of Health and Human Services from the abundant heroin now confiscated under current laws.

A strict accounting is envisioned, so that the amount of heroin released must correspond with the amount administered. Moreover, Senator Inouye's bill calls for reconsideration of the program after five years. It is difficult to think of anything he left out, save possibly a provision that anyone receiving the heroin and not dead within 90 days must be given an overdose.

It is difficult, Mr. Inouye having stepped forward and broken the taboo, to imagine Congress not acting favorably on this proposal. If it does so, although the legislative credit goes to Mr. Inouye, the moral credit goes to Mrs. Judith Quattlebaum, the president of the National Committee on the Treatment of Intractable Pain (9300 River Road, Potomac, Md. 20854).

She has fought for this bill for five years. During that period, 40,000 Americans have died in needlessly aggravated pain. She has dogged legislators, accumulated scientific evidence, written to newspapers (the bill has received a number of editorial endorsements, including a most vigorous one from the Detroit News and the Federal Times).

Almost every week, an additional senator steps forward to associate himself with the Inouye bill. So will it prove, I think, popular in the House.

It has been remarked that nothing is easier to get used to than other people's pain. This is unahappily correct, and perhaps necessarily so, because if one were as much involved in mankind as John Donne said we should be, there could be no happiness, ever. With Mrs. Quattlebaum we'll be entitled to such happiness as is due to those helpful in relieving the misery of others.

IN DEFENSE OF THE REINTRODUCTION OF HEROIN INTO AMERICAN MEDICAL PRACTICE AND H.R. 5290—THE COMPASSIONATE PAIN RELIEF ACT

(By Allen M. Mondzac, M.D.)

Heroin has been in continuous use since its creation in England by Wright in 1874. The drug was synthesized by acetylating morphine and is therefore a semisynthetic narcotic. Its chemical name is diacetylmorphine, or diamorphine. It was named heroin by the Bayer Company of Germany, which first marketed it widely, in 1898. The drug met with great success and was used as a narcotic analgesic, antitussive, and antidyspnea agent. Heroin was widely prescribed, and many users became addicted. This result was inevitable since little was understood about narcotics and drug addiction.

In what can be described as a panic reaction of the federal government to curb the growing problem of opiate addiction in America, the manufacture and importation of heroin was banned in the United States by the Harrison Narcotics Act of 1924. The legislation was intended to supplant the 1914 Harrison Act, which restricted the use of cocaine and opiates to medical purposes and required a license physician's prescription to obtain the drugs. After passage of the 1924 law, although use was not prohibited, it dropped off considerably. In 1956 all hospitals and private physicians who had retained heroin had to relinquish it. Jefferson Hospital in Philadelphia obtained permission from the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs to keep its supply, which it had used judiciously since 1924, until it relinquished the remainder in 1960. Since that time there has been no legal heroin in the United States. It should be noted that in Britain the medical use of heroin continued despite the American legislation and has increased, especially for pain control. In 1970 Congress passed Public Law 91-513, which gave the Office of the Attorney General power to move heroin from schedule I to schedule II, if it so desired.

Since 1974 a grass-roots movement led by the National Committee for the Treatment of Intractable Pain, headed by its founder, Judith Quattlebaum, has been trying to make heroin available again in the United States for pain control. The Compassionate Pain Relief Act (H.R. 5290), introduced by the Honorable Henry Waxman in February 1984, is the culmination of 10 years of work by the committee. The bill provides a mechanism for the reintroduction of heroin into American medicine.

I would like to discuss the chemical and pharmacologic properties of heroin that makes it unique, and then the benefits of H.R. 5290 and how its passage into law will help American society.

Heroin has been studied very little, considering that it has been used for 100 years. Scientists have seemed afraid to tamper with this strong opiate. Most studies have compared it with morphine.[13] They have shown that diacetylmorphone has an earlier onset of action than morphine, causes less nausea and vomiting, and induces more sedation.[4] When heroin is given orally it is rapidly and completely absorbed and deacetylated promptly in the liver to morphine and 6-alpha-mono-acetylmorphine. It acts as a pro-drug for morphine.[3] Most researchers consider oral heroin to be the same as morphine, although the pharmacokinetics of an important metabolite of heroin, 6-acetylmorphine, have never been studied in human beings.[3] The absorption of oral heroin is 1.5 times greater than that of morphine, and the potency of heroin is 2.5 times greater. Increasing the dose of oral morphine can abolish this difference in potency, but it is assumed that the increased dose will be tolerated. These facts have not been addressed in the literature. Furthermore, in the most widely cited study comparing oral heroin and morphine and showing them to be equal, both treatment groups received other medications for pain (steroids, phenothizines, antidepressives, and benzodiazepines).[1] The author of this study [1] questioned his findings and suggested that other results might be obtained if the narcotics were used in a purely single-drug study. This observation has been ignored by workers who have used these data to demonstrate the similarity of heroin to morphine. Therefore, oral heroin, which has not been adequately studied, may be more than just pro-drug for morphine and may yet have an important role in pain relief.

When given perenterally, heroin is markedly different from morphine. Both heroin and acetylated morphine are detectable in the blood after injections.[3] The rapid organ clearance and uptake by the brain, limited only by blood flow, allow high levels of heroin to be reached in the brain, where the drug is hydrolyzed to 6-acetylmorphine and morphine and where these metabolites are retained. This phenomenon is undoubtedly due to the chemical structure of heroin and to plasma binding and lipid solubility.[5] These data irrefutably distinguish heroin from morphine kand account for the unique and superior properties of parenteral heroin: rapidly of onset, power to sedate, lack of nausea, increased potency (2.5 times greater than morphine),[4] and high potential for addiction.

Although trials comparing long-term oral heroin administration with long-term oral morphine administration have been carried out,[1] such studies have not been performed with parenteral heroin and morphine. Twycross, who reportedly showed the similarity of the two oral drugs in his self-admittedly flawed study,[1] denies the feasibility of a similar comparison of the parenteral drugs. He states "it has never been suggested that morphine is better than dismorphine (heroin) and . . . results would still leave diamorphine with the practical advantage of being more soluble." [4] This high solubility is one of heroin's other unique chemical properties; up to 120 mg can be given in an injection of 0.2 ml, and the average therapeutic dose can be dissolved in less than 0.1 ml. Because of the limited solubility of morphine, doses including equivalent analgesia would require a 20-ml injection—an unwieldy and painful procedure if the injection is given subcutaneously or intramuscularly. Twycross estimates that, excluding patients who receive heroin for less than 24 hours, 10 to 19 percent of cancer patients in a hospice setting may need the drug, when only solubility and injection size are used as criteria for need.[4] The solubility of heroin, combined with its rapid onset, short duration of effect, little or no induction of nausea, and high analgesic potency make it the drug of choice when parenteral narcotics are needed.

Unfortunately research in the United States that compares parenteral morphine with parenteral heroin has been limited to single-dose studies in postoperative patients [3] or patients with chronic pain.[3 0] These widely cited studies show no clinical difference between parenteral morphine and heroin. This conclusion is very misleading because these studies have no relation to the repeated use of heroin for chronic pain. There has been no study in cancer patients that has evaluated regular use of parenteral heroin for chronic pain.

Because of the unique properties that heroin possesses, one can easily agree with researchers in the field who state that even with the present, limited knowledge of narcotics actions, there is a group of patients who will require heroin because of its solubility [4] and unique properties [7] and becuase of the biovariability in response to narcotics that may exist among patients with cancer.[6 9]

Because of its solubility, Dilaudid (hydromorphone) has been proposed as a substitute for heroin.[7 10] A new ultrasoluble form of hydromorphone, called Dilaudid-HP, has been marketed by Knoll Pharmaceuticals. Although Dilaudid has been shown to be more potent than morphine, there are unfortunately no studies comparing Diludid or Dilaudid-HP with heroin in clinical situations. The one available study, which compares single-dose Dilaudid with heroin for preoperative patients, indicated that Dilaudid has more side effects and less analgesic efficacy than heroin.[11] Because of the well-recognized individual variations in drug tolerance and analgesic response, the place of Dilaudid-HP in the analgesic armamentarium is unclear. It is not acceptable as a substitute for heroin at present.

H.R. 5290—The Compassionate Pain Relief Act—provides a means to reintroduce heroin into American medicine. If this measure becomes law, American doctors will join with British colleagues in having a choice about the right analgesic for their patients. Physicians in this country will be given the freedom and responsibility to provide heroin to patients who need it—those who are not helped by the available drugs for pain.

The Waxman bill provides a comprehensive and intelligent system for distributing heroin. Since all evidence seems to point to the superiority of parenteral to oral heroin, the bill provides for the availability of the parenteral form only, H.R. 5290 also states specifically that heroin would be available only to patients with cancer in "situation where conventional analgesics are ineffective or contraindicated," which would limit the number of potential users and the amount of heroin that would be in circulation or in any pharmacy at a given time. Fear of criminal diversion of even this limited amount of heroin to addicts has clouded the thinking of the Department of Health and Human Services, the American Medical Association, and the American College of Physicians. All these institutions are opposed to reintroducing heroin into medical practice because of this fear. In the light of the pioneer work of Beaver [7] and Twycross,[12] the fear of addiction and dependency among patients should no longer be an issue. In fact, the widely accepted narcotics Dilaudid and morphine have a potential for addiction that is identical to that of heroin.

The Waxman bill as amended and approved in March 1984 by the Committee on Energy and Commerce would allow distribution of heroin by prescriptions written by physicians registered under Section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act, and then only through hospice or hospital pharmacies. This would drastically limit the number of pharmacies that would stock heroin, and should quiet the fears of those who say that there will be widespread thefts of legal heroin. Hospital pharmacies have always stocked morphine, Dilaudid, barbiturates, and amphetamines. Indeed, some now stock marijuana (delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol) tablets for nausea, which are distributed through hospital pharmacies under a program of the National Cancer Institute and the Drug Enforcement Administration. Data from the Drug Enforcement Administration for 1982 show that robberies at retail pharmacies accounted for 96 percent of robberies for drugs, but that robberies of hospital pharmacies represented only 3 percent of robberies in the same period.[13] In the United Kingdom, where heroin consumption for pain is rising (from 51 kg in 1971 to 150 kg in 1982),[14] theft from pharmacies is not a problem. Chief Inspector H. B. Spear of the Home Office (Great Britain) submitted testimony to the Waxman committee, stating that "the lawful availability of heroin poses no greater security threat than for other similar drugs." He also noted that when thefts did occur, they involved the whole stock of drugs, not just heroin. In the Waxman bill, the rules for physicians writing prescriptions for heroin would be more stringent than those in effect in Britain, since British doctors can prescribe both oral and parenteral forms for the treatment of any medical condition except addiction (for which only specifically appointed doctors may prescribe).

Since one could argue that the crimeridden, lawless, frontier-style, gun-slinging amoral United States is not like well-behaved, decorous Great Britain, opponents of the bill believe that criminal diversion would occur here in spite of police surveillance of hospital and hospice pharmacies stocking heroin. Professor Arnold Trebach, a noted criminologist, has pointed out some interesting data in his testimony before the Waxman committee, on the projected impact of such criminal division. Taking the ratio of morphine use to heroin use in Britain (7:3) and applying it to the use of morphine in the United States in 1982, he estimated that the amount of heroin that might be used under the Waxman bill would be 228 kg per year. After quoting estimates by government agencies that 4 to 10 metric tons of illegal heroin come into the United States every year, he assumed that if through some disaster the 228 kg of legal heroin were diverted by criminals and added to the amount on the street, it would account for only 4 percent of the total amount of illegal heroin in the United States. This startling statistic indicates how unimportant the problem of criminal diversion is as compared with actual heroin use. Furthermore, it shows that under controlled distribution, the Waxman bill would not cause any major increase in existing addiction problems, pharmacy thefts, or criminal activities.

The bill wisely calls for a review of heroin use every three months by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the House Health Subcommittee and also sets up a trial period of four years. These provisions would allow ongoing review to provide guidelines for the future.

Since I have stated what the bill would not do, I will not state its most important effects and why I am in favor of it. (1) It would give American doctors a wider choice of analgesics to use. (2) It would remove from American doctors the stigma and the terror laid on the profession by the 1924

Harrison Narcotics Act, which held that doctors could not safely and prudently prescribe a potent narcotic like heroin. (3) It would end the antiquated posture of the drug-enforcement bureaucracy, which prevents cancer patients from receiving a narcotic that they may need medically. (4) It would allow creative researchers of pain relief to stop trying to prove that heroin is not good and to discover why it is good and to use that knowledge constructively. It would enable them to understand why during the largest evaluation of heroin in vivo—the British experience since 1874—doctors gave heroin to 30 percent of all cancer patients in hospices. (5) Finally, the bill shows that the government would accept addicting and potent narcotics and trust physicians and patients with them. In this atmosphere, new ideas, new drugs, and new approaches would develop.

The "heroin movement" created in 1974 by the National Committee for the Treatment of Intractable Pain has fostered the atmosphere that now exists in the United States, where pain research, terminal care, and studies on the comfort of patients are beginning. Now, pain control is discussed openly on rounds; nurses and doctors are starting to be concerned, not about addiction, but about giving enough of the right narcotic to the suffering patient. American medicine is ready to have heroin again.

ROLLIN/SHAPIRO TO AID NCTIP

Betty Rollin is the author of Last Wish, a book about her mother—dying, slowly, in great pain, of cancer—and about Betty's wrenching emotions as she helped her mother have her last wish: to die with dignity, by suicide, before losing control of her life to the unrelenting pain.

Ms. Rollin responded to a NCTIP query about possible common goals and efforts enthusiastically, and met twice with Judy Quattlebaum, Barbara DeMarneffe, and Selma Shapiro, a New York public relations professional. The crucial point where their efforts overlapped was that the terrible decision about suicide might not face cancer patients if preventing terminal cancer pain were given a high enough priority and heroin were available.

A public relations plan has been fashioned, built around Betty's September nationwide tour to introduce the paperback edition of Last Wish. She will mention NCTIP's work when possible in her public and television appearances.

Selma Shapiro has devoted her professional career to public relations in the literary world. She now has established her own firm but was previously vice president of publicity and public relations at Random House.

NCTIP thanks these two compassionate and generous women for their encouragement and support.

MAJOR ARTICLE ON HEROIN APPEARS IN HEALTH LAW JOURNAL

Congress, rather than the courts, must act to legalize the medicinal use of heroin, according to a recent article in The Journal of Contemporary Health Law and Policy. "It is time for Congress to mitigate the law enforcement message of the past decades and offer a new perception of a compassionate, balanced, and hopeful drug policy for this nation," concludes author Suzanne Marcus Stoll.

WHY NOT HEROIN? THE CONTROVERSY SURROUNDING THE LEGALIZATION OF HEROIN FOR THERAPEUTIC PURPOSES

(By Suzanne Marcus Stoll)

INTRODUCTION

"Right now, in America, we know of a drug which is the most potent effective, soluble, and rapidly active narcotic ever created, it is not available. I do not understand this." [1]

A noted oncologist testified before a House Subcommittee to encourage the legalization of heroin for the purpose of easing the pain experienced by many terminally ill cancer victims. [2] The issue is an emotionally charged one in which medical, legal, ethical, personal, and societal values collide. Proponents of limited legalization of heroin are led by the relatives of cancer victims and their legal and medical advocates. [3] Among them are many distinguished members of the medical and research communities who maintain that heroin is the most soluble and potent narcotic for pain relief, [4] that is clearly works for some patients for whom all else fails, [5] and that therapeutic use presents no appreciable risk to the community. [6]

Legal advocates of heroin's therapeutic use contend that the judicially recognized constitutional right of privacy extends to the relevant medical decision, [7] that the prohibition of heroin for therapeutic purposes represents a deprivation of due process for cancer victims, [8] and that, in some instances, the common law defense of necessity justifies the use of illicit drugs. [9]

Opponents are equally vocal. They include the institutional regulators of licit and illicit drugs: the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) and its specialized arm, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), and the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), which is responsible for categorizing drugs into one of five levels of abuse potential. [10] Upon recommendation from HHS, the DEA scheduled heroin into Schedule I. This is the most restrictive class, and prohibits all use except for closely controlled research.

Official government sources now maintain that heroin is not preferable to morphine for pain relief [11] and that the advent of new synthetic narcotics makes the heroin issue moot. [12] Representatives of the medical profession, including the American Medical Association, report that more efficacious drugs exist for the same purpose and that ineffective pain management techniques are the problem for cancer patients, rather than the prohibition of a pain-killing drug. [13] Finally, law enforcement officials as well as pharmacists and many citizens are fearful that heroin will be diverted from the pharmacy to the street. [14]

The American debate over the medicinal use of heroin has raged for over sixty years, but its current focus is more refined than ever before: Should heroin be available in hospital and hospice pharmacies to provide analygesic alternatives for patients experiencing severe pain from terminal cancer? [15] It is estimated that eight thousand to forty thousand Americans suffer every year from pain so profound that no currently available medication is effective. [16] For them, the modern link between cancer and heroin may be the avenue to relief. For others, the cancer-heroin association ironically pairs America's most feared disease with its most feared drug of abuse.

Because the heroin dilemma strikes a nerve in the American public, the legalization of heroin for therapeutic purposes has become a focal point in the lay press [17] as well as for legal and medical experts. Americans are acutely aware that one of every four people will be afflicted with some form of cancer during his lifetime and that nearly everyone will be affected by the impact of the disease on family members or friends. In this context, congressional initiatives to legalize heroin for specific therapeutic purposes have sparked greater public interest than similar bills in the past. The Compassionate Pain Relief Act was, however, defeated during the closing days of the 98th Congress. [18]

This note will demonstrate a two-pronged approach to the legalization of heroin for therapeutic purposes. The first approach requires a more favorable judicial interpretation of the right of privacy as inclusive of the medical choice to take unauthorized or illicit drugs to alleviate intractable pain in dying patients. Parallels to the laetrile controversy offer guidence as to how heroin will fare in the courts: the choice to elect heroin therapy as a function of the right of privacy is likely to fall victim to compelling state interests. Still, the right of privacy is the best judicial ground upon which to establish a basis and seek future inroads.

The second and more promising approach is through congressional action. Public policy demands that all available effective cancer treatments be part of the physician's armamentarium to fight the disease. Congress can bypass the administrative logjam of the FDA's "new drug" procedures and provide for limited access for those patients whose conditions justify the use of heroin.

Furthermore, this note will trace the history of heroin's prohibition in this country and the medical issues at stake in the current controversy. It will proceed to explore the constitutional basis for legalizing heroin on a limited basis. Finally, it will focus on congressional efforts to provide a compassionate response to a profoundly human dilemma and conclude that the advocates of heroin's medical use still face major obstacles in their efforts to gain limited legal status for the controversial drug.

THE HISTORY

In 1914, the Harrison Narcotics Act banned the recreational use of heroin in the United States in conjunction with an international initiative to stem the growing number of opium addicts.[19] While the Act specifically prohibited the recreational use of the drug, it left the door open for the prescription of heroin by doctors "in good faith" and "in the legitimate practice of (the) profession."[20]

The physician's right to prescribe heroin, however, was soon proscribed by two significant Supreme Court decisions. In 1918, the Court held in Webb v. United States[21] that it was never appropriate for a doctor to prescribe heroin to addicts. In the United States v. Behrman,[22] four years later, doctors were held strictly liable for prescriptions which "could only result in the gratification of a diseased appetite for those pernicious drugs."[23] While the statute in question in Behrman specifically excluded physicians from its prohibition against drug dealing, the government charged "facts sufficient to show that the accused was not within the exception."[24] The Court concluded that the defendant physician was in violation of the Act because he indiscriminately prescribed the drug to a known addict.

In 1924, the House Ways and Means Committee held hearings to amend the Harrison Act, whose intent was to further restrict the importation of opium for exclusively medicinal purposes.[25] Public concern about growing addiction problems and criminal conduct associated with the drug fanned the furor in favor of the simply worded amendment: "Provided, that no crude opium may be imported for the purpose of manufacturing heroin."[26] Testimony from the American Medical Association (AMA) and the then United States Surgeon General illustrated the low regard into which heroin had fallen. The Surgeon General alleged that the drug erased all moral sense while the physicians speaking for the AMA indicated that codeine was a good substitute for heroin.[27] In short, the medical testimony was more sensational than it was substantive[28] and the ban on heroin reflected its growing disrepute in the medical community.

The diversion question was also confused by the emotion and tenor of the testimony. While evidence was introduced that, of ten thousand addicts in New York State, only two percent could trace their addiction to medical treatment, the momentum to outlaw all heroin use was underway. Testimony that seventy-six thousand ounces of heroin were sold on New York's black market, while only fifty-eight ounces were prescribed by all of the physicians in the state during the same period, was disregarded by those calling for the complete abolition of the drug.[29]

One commentator has suggested that the 1924 hearings were a miscarriage of justice resulting in a deprivation of due process for many Americans from that time until the present. In testimony before the House Subcommittee on Health and the Environment in 1984, Arnold Trebach, author of The Heroin Solution, said of the early hearings, "No original or empirical evidence was introduced to demonstrate that there was a connection between the creation of addicts and the presence of this drug in medical practice."[30]

In 1970, Congress passed the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act which repealed the Harrison Narcotics Act and provided a new framework of drug enforcement. Title II of the new Act mandated the establishment of five schedules of drugs based on degree of abuse potential, known effects, harmfulness, and level of accepted medical use.[31] Heroin was classified in Schedule I, the most restrictive category, and has remained there despite congressional attempts to reschedule it to allow more latitude in testing and medical use.[32]

Schedule I criteria are identified as follows:

1. The drug or other substance has a high potential for abuse.

2. The drug or other substance has no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States.

3. A lack of accepted safety precautions for use of the drug or other substance under medical supervision.[33]

During the 1980 hearings by the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, the scheduling dilemma of substances such as heroin and specifically marijuana (also Schedule I) was dramatized in a dialogue between Congressman Stephen Neal and a panel of cancer researchers:

Mr. NEAL. Well, just for the record, it's my understanding . . . that the assumption for a drug to be in Schedule I is that it has no medical use. And just for the record, I want to make it clear that you all, the three of you, are saying there are very definite medical uses for these substances.

Dr. SALLAN. Most definitely.

Dr. GARB. Sir, I would add there are a lot more than three of us. . . .

Mr. NEAL. Well, now, would you say this about THC only, or about THC and marijuana?

Dr. SALLAN. I would say it about both, but I have much less certainty about marijuana because it doesn't have the same scientific rigor in the study at this time.

Mr. NEAL. Well, then, we need more study, but to get the study, we need a substance available to you to study, but as long as it's under Schedule I, it will not be available, because the assumption will be that there is no medical use. It's a Catch-22 situation, it seems to me.[34]

While Congressman Neal fairly characterized the "no medical use" irony, the United States government did make accommodations for two testing situations to analyze the effectiveness of heroin in medical use. These two studies, the Memorial Sloane Kettering Study and the Georgetown Study, will be discussed in the following section.

The United States experience with heroin contrasts sharply with that of the United Kingdom. Over ninety-five percent of all licit heroin is prescribed in England where the drug has been widely used in hospices for pain control.[35] Currently, heroin is used in a 3:7 ratio with morphine. Its status as the medication of choice in severe pain situations has increased over the decades.[36]

In addition to England, twenty-six nations specifically allow for medical channeling of heroin by qualified physicians.[37] Eleven more apply the same restrictions to heroin use as other narcotics analgesics and ten more nations have given specific government approval to the use of heroin.[38] The United States, however, allows morphine a relatively favorable Schedule II classification in spite of its heroin-like narcotic properties while classifying marijuana as a Schedule I drug along with heroin. Clearly, the United States maintains a model of drug control more suited to law enforcement than to medical concerns. In spite of the positive experience of doctors and patients in twenty-seven other nations, many American lawmakers, doctors, and citizens still fear that the controlled introduction of heroin into medical practice would undermine the American system of drug enforcement and implicitly condone drug production and trafficking on an international scale.[39]

THE MEDICAL CONTROVERSY

Pain as a symptom involves at least fifty per cent of cancer victims and may become a serious management problem for at least fifteen to twenty per cent of those individuals.[40] It is this proportion of cancer patients for whom heroin would provide an essential pain-killing alternative. Dr. William Beaver, who conducted the most recent government-sponsored study of heroin's therapeutic value at Georgetown Medical Center, noted: "There will be individual patients who respond better to heroin for reasons we do not understand."[41] Since no two analgesics have properties that are identical, patients with different reactions may tolerate one analgesic and not another. "This fact alone justifies a variety of alternative drugs available."[42]

Comparisons between heroin, morphine, and other analgesics usually break down into several distinct categories:

1. Potency—Heroin is highly potent (2.7 times more potent than morphine) thus allowing smaller doses to be administered to produce equivalent pain relief. This consideration is extremely important when administering a drug to patients with wasted muscle mass.[43] Those who oppose heroin's use cite a new strong form of Dilaudid as being equally effective.[44]

2. Onset—Heroin's action is rapid and produces relief quicker than other drugs. Again, critics maintain that more effective pain management would offset this advantage.[45]

3. Attitude—Heroin produces euphoric feelings in most patients rather than the depression and anxiety that often follow morphine intake. Mood elevation differences, however, were not perceived as significant in the latest two studies of the drug.[44]

In the Beaver study, conducted at Georgetown University Vincent T. Lombardi Cancer Research Center, fifty-two patients with incurable cancer received one injection of heroin and another of morphine to combat pain. The results indicated heroin to be more potent, more soluble, and faster acting.[47]

The Sloane Kettering study, conducted by Dr. Raymong Houde, treated post-operative pain in cancer patients.[48] Results indicate that heroin was about twice as potent as morphine, that it provided a peak effect earlier than morphine, that doses with equal analgesic effects provided comparable improvements in various elements of mood, but that the peak arrived sooner with heroin. Furthermore, pain relief and mood improvement were less sustained after heroin at equal doses and in the researcher's opinion, heroin had no unique advantage for the relief of pain in patients with cancer.[49]

It is clear that the medical controversy over heroin's therapeutic use would not exist but for the criminal aspects of heroin's identity. Even its detractors find that heroin is neither more advantageous nor disadvantageous than other legal alternatives for the relief of pain. Where the issue of addiction is moot, as in the case of terminally ill patients, unwillingness to include heroin as a therapeutic option is a reaction to its character as a potentially addicting drug.

According to oncologist Allen Mondzac, "With each patient, there is a potential for using up all of the existing drugs." [50] The availability of heroin would extend the physician's potential pain-killing remedies to one more effective therapy. Heroin's current outlaw status denies doctors and patients that alternative.

THE LEGAL ISSUES

The Right to Privacy—Griswold v. Connecticut

The decision to use heroin to mitigate the agony of cancer pain enjoys no explicit constitutional protection. The complicated interplay of personal autonomy, illicit drug use, human suffering, and medical necessity creates a legal paradox that is at once intensely intimate and starkly public in nature. The question is basic: whether a person's choice to use heroin should be fundamentally protected against coercion by law.[51] The answer lies in the developing right of privacy which has been held to encompass something beyond the issues of marital choice, procreation, conception, and child-rearing and to embrace "an interest in independence in making certain kinds of important decisions." [52] No decision can be more profound than that implicit in the heroin dilemma.

The right of privacy was first judicially recognized in Griswold v. Connecticut in 1965.[53] Griswold raised the question of whether a married couple living in Connecticut could be imprisoned for using birth control. Under the operative state statute, the use of any device to prevent conception was criminal. The Supreme Court struck down the statute, declaring that "marriage is . . . intimate to the degree of being sacred," [54] and is subject to constitutional protections under the privacy right "older than the Bill of Rights." [55] Justice Douglas, speaking for the majority, located substantive protection for marital intimacy in a "zone of privacy" created by several fundamental guarantees emanating from penumbras of the first, third, fourth, fifth, and ninth amendments.[56]

Justice Goldberg's Griswold concurrence identified the source of the privacy right in the ninth amendment and defined a test to determine whether a fundamental right worthy of constitutional protection exists. He directed judges to look to the "collective conscience of the people" to find whether a principle is so firmly rooted as to be ranked fundamental. The inquiry explored whether the right involved is of such a character that it cannot be denied without violating those "fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all of our civil and political institutions." [57] With the same breadth of philosophical conviction, Justice Harlan located the privacy right among those "basic values implicit in the concept of ordered liberty," [58] and suggested a fourteenth amendment due process analysis to determine whether such a right has been violated.

The Griswold Court concluded that a married couple's right to use contraceptives is fundamental and protected by the constitutional right of privacy, however abstract and circuitous the route to that protection. Seven years later, the same right was extended to unmarried persons in Eisenstadt v. Baird.[59]

As the court construes the right to privacy, its decisions rest on a recognition of values implicit in our way of life and philosophy as a nation, rather than on any strict construction of a concept. The celebrated Brandeis statement in Olmstead v. United States [60] conveyed the tone that would underlie so many future decisions.

"The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings and his intellect. They knew that only a part of the pain, pleasure and satisfactions of life are to be found in material things. They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions and sensations. They conferred, as against the Government, the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men."[61]

The distance between the subjective recognition of collective and natural values and a concrete source for the protection of those values led the Griswold Court to explore several constitutional constructions. It is that same distance, still untraveled, that deprives the current heroin issue of a humane solution.

Development of the Right of Privacy

The evolution of the privacy right continued in the famous "abortion cases" of 1973: Roe v. Wade[62] and Doe v. Bolton.[63] In Roe, the Court concluded that the right to personal privacy includes the right to an abortion but that "this right is not unqualified and must be considered against important state interest in regulation."[64] The balancing test of a fundamental right versus a compelling state interest became the hallmark of personal health and privacy decisions in the courts. In his Roe concurrence, Justice Douglas explicitly includes within the term "liberty" in the Fourteenth Amendment "the freedom to care for one's own health and person . . . subject to regulation on a showing of 'compelling state interest'." [65] His observation is a forerunner of the complex health and enforcement questions that characterize the heroin dilemma today.

The balancing test of Roe v. Wade is operative in Whalen v. Roe [66] four years later. Whalen clearly establishes the state's right to regulate dangerous drugs in the face of individual privacy interests. The Court upheld a New York statute requiring the registration of all medical prescriptions for addictive drugs to control abuse. The Court distinguished the state's interest in recordkeeping from the individual's right to decide what drugs to take: "within dosage limits . . . the decision to prescribe, or to use, if left entirely to the physician and the patient." [67] Yet, while acknowledging the "individual interest in avoiding disclosure of personal matters," [68] the Court nonetheless upheld the right of the state to maintain the names of those selecting certain substances. In the view of the Court, the state's interest in recordkeeping, while compelling disclosure, was justified and fell short of invading an individual's liberty right.[69] Thus, the Court recognized relative levels of intrusion into personal decision-making, further emphasizing the less than absolute nature of the fundamental right of privacy.

Choice of Treatment

The choice of treatment as an element of the right of privacy may be considered in three separate contexts. The first is the right to choose from among approved methods of treatment, a well-established legal right which threatens no state interest and implies informed consent on the part of the patient.

The right to refuse treatment is the second and more complex issue. It was tested as early as 1904 when a man named Jacobsen refused a smallpox vaccination on the basis of every man's right to control the sanctity of his body.[70] The Court held that the state's interest in preventing the spread of disease overrode Jacobsen's personal right to refuse treatment. The Court implied that the right to refuse treatment would be upheld only when the individual's choice is informed, and society's interest would not be harmed.

In In re Quinlan,[71] the court's focus was limited to the right to decline life-prolonging treatment when the patient has no realistic hope of returning to "any semblance of cognitive or sapient life." [72] The issue was further complicated by the patient's comatose state and her subsequent inability to represent her own interests before the court. The court held that her father could decide to cease life-prolonging activity in order to safeguard her right to die with dignity.[73] The constitutional law commentator Laurence Tribe pointed out the inherent irony in the court's decision: that given the vegetative state that alone justified the court's holding, "attributing 'rights' to the patient at all was problematic." [74] The decision more realistically concerned the desires of parents and society to allow freedom of medical decision-making when individuals without consciousness linger only through extraordinary life-prolonging means.[75] The Quinlan case did not confer the right to terminate care to those who are conscious and for whom death is not imminent. In effect, the court recognized that a balancing of state and individual interests in the context of life-prolonging medical care is affected by the degree of illness suffered by the victim and the fading hope of a cure.[76]

The third choice of treatment situation—the right to choose a medical treatment that is not approved by the state—has led to a number of decisions surrounding the drug laetrile [77] and has loomed at the center of the marijuana controversy.[78] Judicial resolution of this third category of decisionmaking may well determine the future of heroin as a therapeutic agent. The leading case in the area is Rutherford v. United States.[79]

Rutherford v. United States

In Rutherford, several terminally-ill cancer patients sued to enjoin the United States from interfering with their access to laetrile. The United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma issued an injunction against the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) on the basis that patients were denied freedom of choice and were deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.[80] The court held that the FDA's licensing requirements for new drugs made it virtually impossible for laetrile to become legally accessible.

On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit looked closely at FDA procedures and focused on the approval process for "new" drugs and the grandfather clause exemptions under the Food and Drug Act. Its inquiry raised the following questions: (1) Was laetriel marketed on October 9, 1962, as a cancer drug and was it then generally recognized as safe? (2) Was laetrile recognized or used as a cancer drug under the same conditions of present use during the period when the Food and Drug Act of 1906 was in effect from June of 1906 until June of 1938?[81] If either question could be answered affirmatively, laetrile would be exempt under the grandfather clause.[82]

The tenth circuit remanded the case to the Food and Drug Administration in order to produce an administrative record supporting its determination that laetrile was a "new" drug, though it did not explore the constitutionality of the "new" drug procedures. In 1977, in response to the court's order, the FDA released its findings that laetrile was not generally recognized as safe and effective or exempt under the 1962 grandfather clause.

On appeal, the district court ruled that the FDA's classification of laetrile as a "new" drug was "arbitrary, capricious, and an abuse of discretion, and, as a matter of law, unsupportable."[83] The judges note that laetrile had been used and sold commercially in the United States for over twenty-five years and had been generally recognized as safe.[84]

As to the constitutional aspects, the court looked to the "abortion cases"[85] for the premise that a right of privacy exists under the Constitution. As Douglas said in Doe, "that right has no more conspicuous place than in the physician-patient relationship."[86] The district determined that fundamental civil liberties were at issue in Rutherford, and that the choice to use laetrile, regardless of its correctness, should be the sole prerogative of the person whose body was being ravaged by disease.[87]

Again, the United States appealed the decision of the district court to the tenth circuit which sustained the district court's injunction, thus allowing the interstate sale and use of laetrile for terminally ill patients to continue.[88] The appeals court did not directly address the constitutional issue. On appeal to the Supreme Court, the tenth circuit was reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings on those issues.[89]

In its opinion, procedures and terminally ill patients. The Court held that the Congress could reasonably have intended to shield terminal patients from ineffectual or unsafe drugs, and that any other interpretation of the FDA regulations would substitute the opinion of the Court for that of Congress. "For the terminally ill, as for anyone else, a drug is unsafe if its potential for inflicting death or physical injury is not offset by the possibility of therapeutic benefit."[90] The Supreme Court did not address the privacy issue.

On remand, the Tenth Circuit revived the balancing test to weigh the "protected right" to select a medical treatment against the governmental interest in protecting public health. The court found that the state's interest outweighed such personal medical decisions. The constitutional conflict was thus temporarily resolved.[91]

Rutherford represents a weakening of the individual's privacy interest in choosing medical treatment. Unlike the early Jacobsen case,[92] no public danger existed in granting laetrile's commerce. Unlike the "abortion decisions," other lives would not be affected by an individual's choice of treatment. Only victims of cancer themselves would be affected by the prohibition on laetrile's use. The compelling state interest could be construed only as protecting terminally ill patients from their own informed choice. Thus, while it has been held that an individual can refuse treatment to sustain life, he is not yet free to select an unauthorized treatment in the face of death.

People v. Privatera

People v. Privatera,[93] a California Supreme Court decision, reaches the same conclusion. The California court determined that the right to use laetrile is not governed by the fundamental right of privacy because it is not among those decisions enumerated in the "privacy cases."[94] As such, the court had only to find a rational basis for the statute proscribing laetrile's use, which it fulfilled by citing a history of misleading representations about cancer cures.

In a dissent more remarkable than the decision, Chief Justice Rose Bird asserted that "choice of treatment is one of the most important decisions a person may ever make, touching intimately on his or her being."[95] Her opinion and that of the district court in Rutherford represent the eloquent dissent in a line of decisions that subordinate the individual's freedom of choice in medical decisions to the state's perceived goals.

Thus, the prevailing tone of judicial decisions leads to negative assumptions about the future of heroin therapy via the judiciary. Because heroin's status is not just unauthorized, but forbidden, the recognition of a fundamental right to use the drug for medical reasons would conflict with the state's interest in prohibiting its existence on nearly every occasion. Only a contention that the current prohibition is overbroad would prevent the state's interest from outweighing every personal consideration.

The Marijuana Connection

"It isn't absolutely necessary to be a masochist to do research on marijuana today, but it certainly helps."[96]

Marijuana, like heroin, is a Schedule I drug. Under federal law, it is deemed to have no medical usefulness while having high potential for abuse.[97] It is subject to the following restrictions:

The DEA has established quotas on lawful production of marijuana and its active ingredient THC.

The drug may be manufactured only by an individual or company registered with the DEA.

A researcher seeking to study the drug must obtain registration from the DEA.

The drug must be kept in a vault.

Record keeping is required.

Trafficking the drug is a felony.

The drug is available for research only and may not be prescribed.[98]

In addition, marijuana falls under FDA's "new drug" category and is subject to its regulatory provisions.

Marijuana and THC are currently being tested for their ability to relieve pain, insomnia, anxiety, asthma, epilepsy, glaucoma, and the side-effects of chemotherapy.[99] In addition, the National Cancer Institute's Division of Cancer Treatment now provides THC to physicians for use in controlled situations. As such, the Schedule I classification has become a contradiction in terms. The proven medical uses for marijuana are growing every day.

Hearings in Congress have focused on the subject of down-scheduling marijuana to conform with current knowledge about the drug's effectiveness.[100] Marijuana progress bears watching by advocates of heroin's legalization. While the public's response to marijuana continues to be volatile, public fear is less profound than with the use of heroin and the potential beneficiaries of therapeutic marijuana use are more numerous. Nevertheless, according to former FDA Chief Counsel Richard Cooper,

[t]he medical future of both THC and heroin is not entirely clear . . . A potential manufacturer will have to gather the relevant data and organize them into new drug applications that meet the FDA standards. It may turn out that the biggest obstacle to the therapeutic use of marijuana and heroin is the lack of interest in the drug on the part of drug companies.[101]

Medical Necessity Defense

Federal courts have consistently held that possession and sale of marijuana are not protected by the right to privacy.[102] However, the common law defense of necessity has been held to extend to medical necessity in the case of a Washington, D.C., man who used marijuana to treat his deteriorating glaucoma condition.[103]

In 1975, Bob Randall was arrrested and charged with unlawful possession of marijuana. He sought acquittal on the strength of a medical necessity defense. The District of Columbia Superior Court dismissed the charge, stating that a person whose use of marijuana is a matter of medical necessity is not criminally liable for its unlawful possession.[104] While the necessity defense historically depended on an immediate threat to life, a fear of deteriorating health was later considered to be a justifiable ground for the defense.[105]

The court stated that "necessity is the conscious, rational act of one who is not guided by his own free will. It arises from a determination by the individual that any reasonable man in his situation would find the personal consequences of violating the law less severe than the consequences of compliance."[106] The court noted that the defense is not available to one who has brought the circumstances upon himself.[107] Thus, a heroin addict who would argue the defense of necessity would be unlikely to prevail.[108] In addition, if there was a less stringent alternative, the defense would fall.[109] Finally, the harm avoided must be more serious than what it performed to escape it.[110]

The D.C. court's analysis focused on a balancing of interests between Randall's desire to preserve his sight and the government's interest in maintaining its regulations of marijuana. Noting "how far-reaching is the right of an individual to preserve his health and bodily integrity,"[111] the court concluded that blindness is a greater evil than breaking the prohibition on marijuana. In dismissing the case, the court also noted that no innocent party was injured and Randall had not brought his condition upon himself. The United States did not appeal.

The court's acceptance of Randall's defense is significant as a qualified affirmation of the right to protect one's health. Within the context of the case, an analogy between the use of marijuana and the use of heroin is a logical one. If the only means to combat intractable pain is heroin, then the medical necessity defense successfully employed by Randall might prevail for one who breaks the prohibition on heroin due to an advanced condition of cancer. However, the defense is limited to individuals caught in the medical-legal bind. It is no answer to the larger question of legalization that must be confronted by lawmakers if any true progress is to take place.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

While the courts have only addressed the heroin conflict by implication, Congress has squarely dealt with the issue. The Compassionate Pain Relief Act, H.R. 5290, was designed to establish a temporary program under which "parental diacetylmorphine (heroin) would be made available through qualified pharmacies for the relief of intractable pain due to cancer." [112] The bill was introduced by Congressman Henry Waxman of California, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. It was defeated by a vote of 355 to 55 on September 19, 1984, after several hours of passionate debate.[113] According to Congressman Waxman, the lopsided vote was a consequence of political timing:

"People were afraid to vote in any way, shape or form for anything that sounded like legalization of heroin. They were afraid they would be campaigned against on the issue.[114]

H.R. 5290 was not the first congressional attempt to deal with the availability of heroin for therapeutic purposes. In 1980, Congressman Waxman of California and Congressman Madigan of Illinois jointly and separately introduced legislation to make heroin available on a limited basis. Hearings were held before the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.[115] Again in 1983, Waxman introduced legislation which was the subject of more hearings and was subsequently reintroduced as the clear bill which the House defeated in September, 1984. Its Senate companion, S. 209, was introduced by Senator Inouye of Hawaii and never reached a vote on the Senate floor.

The Waxman bill was a model of qualified legalization. H.R. 5290 would have required the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish a temporary four-year research program during which heroin would be provided to terminally ill cancer patients through a limited number of pharmacies upon the written prescription of a licensed physician. The program would be monitored by the Government Accounting Office (GAO). An amendment by Congressman Hughes of New Jersey would have tightened the bill even further by requiring that the patient for whom heroin is prescribed would not respond to any other available drug, that a physician's decision to prescribe heroin be reviewed by a medical panel, and that the program be drawn into the system of regulation of the Controlled Substances Act. The Hughes Amendment was not passed.[116]

The politics of the Compassionate Pain Relief Act were unusual and embittered. The Reagan administration opposed the bill, stating that equally potent drugs were available and diversion was a real and present danger.[117] The American Medical Association opposed the bill while the American Nurses' Association favored its passage.[118] Rhetoric on the House floor volleyed between calls for compassion and warnings of dire consequences if the bill were to become law.[119] One opposing legislator even suggested that "we are going to have many pushers telling young kids, 'Look, this (heroin) cannot be that bad for you. After all, doctors and hospitals are using it all over the country.' " [120]

Opponents also decried the fact that H.R. 5290 bypassed the Food and Drug Administration's "new drug" approval process by providing for government manufacture and distribution of the drug. Advocates maintain that so few patients are potentially involved that no drug company is likely to undertake the major effort and expense to meet the FDA regulations, especially in light of heroin's unsavory reputation.[121]

It was the criminal identity of heroin and the threat of cross-over from pharmacy to "street" and from "street" back to the sick and dying that emerged as the focus of the debate in an election year. Chairman Rangel of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control led the opposition suggesting that "a lot of people . . . would openly advocate that we just take the profits out of heroin and just start legalizing the entire illicit drug manufacturing and transactions in the United States." [122] A letter from Secretary of Health and Human Services Margaret Heckler was quoted, emphasizing the Reagan administration position that legalizing would pose serious public safety, enforcement, and security problems and that health care professionals would be placed in jeopardy by the direct link to criminal activity.[123]

Chairman Dingell of the Energy and Commerce Committee that reported favorably on the bill disposed of the Administration's major objection metaphorically.

"Let us take a little bit of a look at the question of diversion: 4.3 tons of illegal heroin come into this country. That is the equivalent of two elephants in weight, if you were to take the entire amount of heroin that is going to be coming into this country under carefully controlled conditions to meet the needs of the hopelessly dying cancer patients, you would probably have the equivalent of a pimple on the posterior of one of those elephants." [124]

The fact that the illicit heroin supply would not be significantly increased even in the worst case analysis did not prove persuasive to a majority of voting members. The debate had an evangelical tenor that had less to do with facts than with the emotional impact of heroin on the American psyche. According to one Waxman staffer, the "all-out-attack" waged by the administration not only helped to create a fervor among the bill's detractors, but also cost the proponents five months that proved strategically devastating.[125] Allegations that the administration used illegal lobbying techniques to defeat the bill are now under investigation by the Office of the Inspector General.[126]

The lay press rallied behind the Compassionate Pain Relief Act. The Washington Post headlined its September 22d editorial Cruel Cowardice and commented that "demagoguery carried the day." [127] The New York Times editorialized that Congress preferred symbolic action, "no matter how cruel the effect on the dying." [128] Papers from The Fort Lauderdale News to the San Jose Mercury News had endorsed the measure in weeks and months preceding the vote.[129] In an acerbic commentary on the subject, Editor Smith Hempstone of The Washington Times wrote, "[t]he absolute medical ban on heroin makes about as much sense as denying a man about to be electrocuted a cigarette on the grounds that the Surgeon General has determined smoking is injurious to the health." [130]

Proponents of the Compassionate Pain Relief Act are hopeful that more favorable timing, public support, and an off-election year will improve prospects for the bill's passage during the 99th Congress.[131]

CONCLUSION

The forty-thousand Americans who could benefit today from heroin's legalization cannot afford to wait for a broader judicial interpretation of the right to privacy. Even as the courts affirm the fundamental nature of decisions affecting one's health and well-being, they qualify the conditions and circumstances under which these decisions may be made. The strict scrutiny accorded to fundamental-right analyses seems more easily satisfied in the privacy context than where other fundamental rights are concerned: the balancing test is slanted toward compelling state interest. The persistent judicial perception that the state's interest in drug regulation overrides individual fundamental rights assures that courts will continue to defer to the authority of the FDA and DEA in the scheduling and control of heroin's use in this country.

Only a re-evaluation of the government's interest could alter this judicial posture. A closer look at the actual dangers of heroin's diversion from pharmacy to street use would reveal an exaggerated fear of expanded illicit trade. A recognition that the addictive potential of heroin is no issue for the dying would undermine the contention that its use is deleterious to the target population. But the courts will not re-define the nature of the government's interest in the sweeping prohibition on heroin. The judicial system will not substitute its judgment for the will of Congress so clearly demonstrated in 60 years of legislative history.

The only imminent hope for cancer victims lies with the Congress and not the courts. The dramatic defeat of the Compassionate Pain Relief Act of 1984 is a major setback which, according to Judith Quattlebaum of the National Committee on the Treatment of Intractable Pain, is "impossible to explain to cancer patients."[132] Congressional advocates have, however, reintroduced the measure in the 99th Congress with an eye toward more advantageous timing.[133]

It is time for Congress to mitigrate the law enforcement message of the past decades and offer a new perception of a compassionate, balanced, and hopeful drug policy for this nation. The quality of American lives depends on it.

By Mr. ROTH (for himself, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. WARNER):

S. 68. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to establish an optional early retirement program for Federal Government employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' OPTIONAL EARLY RETIREMENT ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to establish an early retirement option for Federal employees. This is the third Congress that I have introduced legislation to establish an early retirement window, and I am optimistic that this bill will receive serious consideration during the 101st session of Congress. I would like to welcome my distinguished colleagues, Senators JOHN WARNER and STEVE SYMMS, as cosponsors of this year's bill.

As we move into the 1990's and the age of improved technology and better communications, the Federal Government is going to need a highly trained work force. This bill will help us make that transition. We must take advantage of advanced technology to improve productivity within the Government. The Federal work force of the future will require greater skills to work with computers, communication equipment, and new technology.

We must look toward the possibility of a smaller, more highly skilled work force to meet the missions of our agencies and the needs of the American people. By improving productivity, we will be in a better position to provide better compensation for our work force. This bill could help make that transition a less disruptive, more compassionate one.

The early retirement is an idea whose time has come. Utah, Alaska, and recently West Virginia initiated early retirement plans for their State employees. Last year the Committee on Governmental Affairs held a hearing on the early retirement proposal and received testimony from Dale Hatch, the director of the Office of Planning and Management for the State of Utah.

Mr. Hatch testified that the State of Utah has had a successful experience with their early retirement program and saved the State millions of dollars in personnel expenses. Finally, many corporations, including some of the largest in our country—General Motors and IBM, have instituted early retirement programs.

In fact, the catalyst for the early retirement legislation is the example set by many private companies that have offered such plans in order to prevent layoffs, provide promotion opportunities and job security for younger workers, and to cut costs in times of financial problems.

Under this proposal some 350,000 Federal employees would be newly eligible to retire, based on the same age and service rules that apply to involuntary retirement under current law in layoff situations, age 50 with 20 years of service or any age with 25 years of service. Another 100,000 would be eligible to retire under an expansion of the rules to include those age 55 with 15 years of service, or age 57 with 5 years of service. The retirement window will open for 60 days following a 30-day period after the start of a new fiscal year.

The proposal necessarily includes controls on replacement of those who retire, by reducing agency manpower ceilings. This method steers a middle course between imposing a total ban on hiring replacements, which could impair the Government's ability to carry out programs, and giving agencies free rein despite the need to act regarding the Federal deficit. We do not wish to micromanage the Government agencies, so the bill gives the executive branch limited authority to decide on the hiring of replacements.

The proposal has many advantages. First, it responds to the problem of the Federal deficit and the potentially devastating effects of layoffs or reductions in force under a Gramm-Rudman sequestration order. I cannot emphasize this point too strongly. With the current Federal deficit crisis, the ability of the Government to offer early retirement to its work force is a rational, voluntary, and humane method for reducing cost without harming the morale and efficiency of the Government. Unlike the re-active mechanism in current law for early retirements, this is an active plan to reduce the deficit.

Second, this proposal makes a voluntary offer of retirement that is far preferable to layoffs or reductions-in-force. It offers new opportunities to younger Federal employees—especially women and members of minority groups—who may be concerned about the shortage of career opportunities in the Federal Government. By providing older workers with the opportunity to retire, younger employees may now look forward to brighter and more secure Federal careers.

Third, this proposal takes advantage of a gap in Federal employee retirement rules to make eligible about 100,000 employees who lack the age and service needed under the early out requirements in current law, and who are within 5 years of current retirement. It provides these individuals with a degree of freedom they have never had before, to start a second career or coordinate their retirement plans with their spouse.

Fourth, this proposal could save the taxpayers huge sums of money. The hiring freeze will ensure that the Federal Government save money through less personnel expenses.

There has been a great deal of concern expressed that this bill would hurt the Government's ability to do its work—that we would lose the most skilled, experienced and productive members of our work force and that the hiring freeze would damage the ability of the Government to fulfill its mission. It is critical for the Government to retain certain occupations and efficiently continue projects that are critical to the missions of the agencies. In response to this concern, the President, or his designee, has the authority to exempt up to 25 percent of the agencies' eligible early retirees, by occupational category, project, or geographic location. Although every employee should be given the opportunity to retire early, certain activities are of extreme importance to ongoing Government functions.

To ensure a smooth transition of responsibilities, the legislation allows managers to hold over an employee who has elected early out, for up to 6 months, if the manager deems that the individual's skills are crucial to the job responsibilities or a work project. In addition, some positions will need to be refilled in order to permit the efficient working of the Federal Government. Therefore, the legislation permits the President to waive the freeze for positions that are determined to be vital to the performance of the agency's mission, or to allow rehiring where the costs of the program are borne by user fees.

While this optional early retirement window is brand new for the Government, it follows a trail blazed over the past 5 years by many of America's leading employers. In times of financial stress, this bill provides an efficient, yet compassionate way of reducing costs.

Some have hinted that the legislation will not pass. I am reminded of those who said the same thing about my proposal to reduce personal tax rates. I introduced the idea of personal tax rate reductions more than 5 years before it gained widespread support. It took hard work and persistence, but it paid off. And I will not give up this battle. I welcome the new year, the new administration, and a new environment for which to consider this bill.

I welcome the comments of my colleagues, administration officials, employee groups, and Federal workers with an interest in this idea, and I hope the Governmental Affairs Committee will meet soon on this legislation.

Mr. President, this legislation has a great deal to offer, both to Federal employees and to the Government. I hope that it will be given timely consideration by the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the "Summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD," as follows:

OPTIONAL EARLY RETIREMENT WINDOW

PURPOSE

To accommodate employees who are ready to retire but fall short of current age and service requirements.

To invite employees to accelerate their retirement to avoid possible adverse effects of budgetary decisions.

To provide job security and career opportunities for women, minorities, and younger workers.

To reduce civilian payrolls on a voluntary basis.

WINDOW PERIOD

Two month window beginning 30 days after the beginning of the fiscal year following enactment of the legislation.

ELIGIBILITY

Employees may qualify under any of the following 4 standards: Any age with 25 years of service; age 50 with 20 years of service; age 55 with 15 years of service; age 57 with 5 years of service.

Non-supervisory or administrative law enforcement agents, air traffic controllers, and firefighters, who currently have their own special early retirement rules, are excluded; also, Members of Congress and certain judges.

BENEFIT AMOUNTS

Employees retiring below age 55 take a benefit reduction of 2 percent for each year they are below age 55.

EXEMPTIONS

The President may exempt up to 25% of an agency's eligible early retirees. Exemptions shall be designated by occupational categories deemed to be critical to the mission of the agency. In addition, the President may exempt a particularly critical project or geographic location under the 25 percent rule.

HOLD-OVER AUTHORITY

Agency heads may hold over, for up to six months, an employee who has elected early retirement to ensure the continuous performance of a responsibility or project.

RESTRICTIONS ON RE-HIRING

No agency may replace a worker who retires during the 60 day window period for five years beginning at the start of the window period.

To assure the orderly continuation of government services, the President may waive hiring restrictions for occupations critical to an agency's missions or agencies whose services are financed through user fees. The Postal Service is exempt from the re-hiring restrictions. The agency cost of re-hiring may not exceed the cost savings resulting from the implementation of the legislation.

AUTHORITY

The President or his designee is in charge of the early out process for the executive branch.

SAVINGS

Savings from this legislation may not be used for other purposes. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall determine the amount equal to the savings resulting from the implementation of this act for each agency and shall notify the President. The President shall cancel an amount of the Budget Authority of each agency equal to the amount determined by the OMB Director. This will ensure that savings will result from enactment of this legislation.●

Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 69. A bill entitled the "Posse Comitatus Improvement Act of 1989", to the Committee on Armed Services.

THE POSSE COMITATUS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to authorize more direct involvement by the Armed Forces of the United States in drug interdiction. This bill, cosponsored by my good friend, Senator DECONCINI, recognizes that we are losing the war on drugs. In fact, we should not even call what we are engaged in a war. Real wars involve total national commitment, a comprehensive strategy, and enough resources to have a chance of winning.

This bill fills in many of the gaps in our commitment, strategy, and resources.

The Posse Comitatus Improvement Act contains several changes in the law, including drug arrest authority for the military, that Senator DeConcini and I supported last year. Although these changes passed the Senate by vote of 83 to 6 on May 13, 1988, they were deleted from the final version of the National Defense Authorization Act that became Public Law 100-456.

The following deletions from the National Defense Authorization Act are restored by the Posse Comitatus Improvement Act:

First. A clear statement of mission. The bill provides that "The transport of weapons, drugs, and other contraband, as well as terrorists, across the borders of the United States constitutes a threat to the national security" and that "a mission of the Armed Forces of the United States will be to assist Federal law enforcement agencies responsible for the interdiction of illicit drugs entering the United States";

Second. Arrest authority. Members of the Armed Forces assigned to duty on Navy vessels to which a member of the Coast Guard has been assigned may, outside the United States, arrest drug smugglers, and engage in searches and seizures to the same extent that members of the Coast Guard can;

Third. Increased radar coverage and pursuit aircraft for drug interdiction. The Defense Department is required to provide increased airborne radar surveillance support and pursuit aircraft for drug interdiction. This will mean at least 2,000 more flying hours for E-2C's and AWACS aircraft, dedicated to looking for drug smugglers. It will mean more flyng hours dedicated to drug interdiction along the southwest border until the aerostats now planned for installation are fully operational. It will also mean that more radar balloons and other surveillance assets will be provided by the Department of Defense to fill the gap that now exists from Texas all the way east to the Virgin Islands;

In addition to restoring language deleted from last year's defense authorization bill, the Posse Comitatus Improvement Act increases the involvement of the Defense Department in drug interdiction in the following ways:

Military Drug Interdiction Program established as part of the 5-year defense plan. The Secretary of Defense is required to create a new military drug interdiction program. The bill requires this new program's inclusion in the 5-year defense plan, the Department's principal programming and budgeting document.

Report on use of deadly force. The Secretary of Defense is directed to report to Congress on the current provisions of law and regulation which permit the use of deadly force during peactime by military personnel in the performance of their official duties. The report would also contain what changes, if any, would be necessary to these laws to permit the military to employ deadly force in specific drug interdiction circumstances.

Surveillance of Colombian drug air strips. The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is directed to prepare a plan to provide additional E-3A and E-2C flight hours for operations off the coast of Colombia. It is essential that the gap in radar coverage off the coast of Colombia be closed.

Ensuring future funding. Within 90 days of the date of enactment of this bill, the President shall submit a request to Congress for the amount of funds needed to continue operation of the program through fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991.

Mr. President, we know that interdiction alone will not win this war. We know that we must reduce demand through effective deterrence, education, prevention, and rehabilitation. But we must have stronger interdiction as well. Despite record seizures of drugs, the price of cocaine on our streets has been dropping, because those seizures have failed to reduce the supply.

The program proposed in this legislation can be implemented. It will close very large gaps in our present interdiction program. It represents a meaningful commitment of our national will and resources. By involving the military directly in the war on drugs, it says the United States of America is prepared to defend itself against the greatest threat to the health and well-being of its people that exists today.

I urge my colleagues to give this legislation their full support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Posse Comitatus Improvement Act be printed in its entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 69

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. (a) In this section—

(1) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Defense; and

(2) the term "United States" means the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and any other commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the transport of weapons, drugs, and other contraband, as well as terrorists, across the borders of the United States constitutes a threat to the national security;

(2) a mission of the armed forces of the United States shall be to assist Federal law enforcement agencies responsible for the interdiction of illicit drugs entering the United States by an aircraft or vessel;

(3) the additional resources and funds necessary to carry out this section should be made available to the Department of Defense; and

(4) activities under this section by members of the armed forces should be carried out in full consultation and cooperation with appropriate law enforcement agencies.

(c) DRUG INTERDICTION ASSISTANCE.—(1) Title 10, United States Code, section 379 is amended by inserting the following new subsections at the end thereof:

"(e) Under regulations jointly prescribed by the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Transportation in consultation with the Attorney General, members of the armed forces who—

"(1) are assigned to duty on vessels of the Navy to which a member of the Coast Guard has been assigned under this section;

"(2) have been provided with appropriate training in the drug law enforcement functions of the Coast Guard; and

"(3) have been designated by an authorized member of the Coast Guard to perform the drug law enforcement functions of the Coast Guard may, outside the United States, assist or perform any of the drug law enforcement functions of the Coast Guard under title 14, United States Code, section 89.

"(f) Upon motion by the Attorney General or his designees, any civil action, claim, or proceeding brought against any member of the armed forces arising from such member's performance of duties under this chapter shall be deemed an action exclusively against the United States, and the United States shall be substituted as a party defendant. The United States shall be entitled to all defenses otherwise available to an employee of the United States under state or federal law as well as defenses to which the United States is independently entitled.".

(d) RADAR COVERAGE.—(1) As soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall deploy additional radar surveillance aircraft in sufficient numbers to provide at least 2,000 more hours of military AWACS and E-2 flying time dedicated to drug interdiction for the year beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act than were provided in fiscal year 1987.

(2) An appropriate increase of flying hours shall be dedicated to such assistance along the Southwest border of the United States until such time as the aerostat radar surveillance systems that, as of the date of enactment of this Act, are planned for installation along such borders, are fully operational.

(3) The Department of Defense is directed to place specific radar surveillance and detection assets, including, but not limited to, aerostats, airships, E-3A, E-2C, P-3, and P-3 Airborne Early Warning aircraft (including any variant of the P-3 Airborne Early Warning aircraft), to fill the radar surveillance gap that exists from Brownsville, Texas, east to the Virgin Islands.

(e) PURSUIT AIRCRAFT.—The Department of Defense shall make available to the Coast Guard and Customs Service such rotary wing and fixed wing aircraft of the armed forces as are needed to be used by such agencies in the pursuit of aircraft or vessels involved in illegal drug operations.

(f) EXPENSES.—The expenses of carrying out this Act shall be borne by the Department of Defense.

(g) REQUEST FOR FUNDING.—Within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to Congress a request for—

(1) the amount of funds spent in the first ninety days as a result of the drug interdiction program required by this Act; and

(2) the amount of funds needed to continue operation of the program through fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991.

(h) BUDGET REQUESTS AND FIVE YEAR DEFENSE PLAN.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall create for the Military Drug Interdiction Program a major force program category for the Five Year Defense Plan of the Department of Defense. The Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel shall provide overall supervision of the preparation and justification of program recommendations and budget proposals to be included in such major force program category.

(2) Program and Budget Execution. To the extent that there is authority to revise programs and budgets approved by Congress for the Military Drug Interdiction Program, such authority may be exercised only by the Secretary of Defense.

(3) The President shall submit in his budget for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Defense a request for funds for the Military Drug Interdiction Program required by this act in the form of the major force program category established by subsection (h)(1) above.

(4) The Department of Defense is directed to include the Military Drug Interdiction Program in the Department of Defense Five Year Defense Plan (FYDP).

REPORT REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 2. (a) USE OF DEADLY FORCE.—The Secretary of Defense, after consultation with the Chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff, the General Counsel of the Department of Defense, the General Counsels of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, respectively, and the commanders of the combatant commands established pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 161(a), shall report to the Committees on Armed Services and the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives, to the Senate International Narcotics Control Caucus, and to the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control of the House of Representatives on—

(1) all current provisions of law and regulation permitting the use of deadly force during time of peace by United States military personnel in the performance of their official duties—

(A) within the territorial land, sea, and air of the United States, its territories and possessions; and

(B) outside the territorial land, sea, and air of the United States, its territories and possessions.

(2) changes, if any, that may be necessary to existing law and regulations to permit United States military personnel to employ deadly force under the following circumstances—

(A) to bring down a suspected drug smuggling aircraft which has refused or ignored instructions to land at a specified airfield for customs inspection after penetrating the territorial airspace of the United States;

(B) to halt a suspected drug smuggling vessel on the sea which has been ordered to heave to for inspection by a United States vessel or aircraft and has ignored or refused to obey the order;

(C) to halt a suspected drug smuggler who has crossed the land border of the United States illegally and who has refused to obey or ignored an order to stop for customs inspection; and

(3) deadline for submission of the report. The required report shall be submitted not later than ninety days after the enactment into law of this Act. The required report may be submitted in both classified and unclassified versions.

(b) AIR INTERDICTION DEFENSE-IN-DEPTH.—(1) The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall direct the preparation of a plan in consultation with the commanders of the combatant commands to provide sufficient additional E-3A and E-2C flight hours for operations off the coast of Colombia to successfully implement during the current fiscal year the defense-in-depth concept for air interdiction set forth in the National Air Interdiction Strategy section of Toward a Drug-Free America: The National Drug Strategy and Implementation Plans, 1988, issued by the National Drug Policy Board.

(2) The Secretary of Defense shall report to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, to the Senate International Narcotics Caucus, and to the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control of the House of Representatives not later than ninety days after the enactment of this Act into law on the specific details of the plan required by subsection (b)(1) above.

RULE OF CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 3. Nothing in this section or in the amendments made by this section shall be construed to limit the authority of the Executive branch in the use of Department of Defense personnel or equipment for law enforcement purposes otherwise authorized by law.●

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 70. A bill to control the spread of AIDS; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AIDS CONTROL ACT

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am today introducing the AIDS Control Act of 1989 which is a comprehensive bill designed to treat AIDS as the public health issue it is, rather than the civil rights issue it has become. I have no doubt that if we take this vital step, we will curb the spread of this lethal disease.

Mr. President, the AIDS Control Act of 1989 is similar, but not identical to, a bill I introduced on June 10, 1987. Since that date, three sections of that bill have become law. In December 1986, the Public Health Service began testing immigrants for the AIDS virus along with a host of other dangerous contagious diseases. In the spring of 1988, Veterans' hospitals began offering an AIDS test to all veterans being treated for sexually transmitted diseases or drug abuse. Pursuant to a congressional mandate, the D.C. Council has repealed a law which gave special preference to individuals infected with the AIDS virus concerning insurance coverage. That law will become effective this spring and residents of the District will once again be able to purchase insurance.

Other strides have been made as well, Mr. President. In the fall of 1987, Congress placed content restrictions on AIDS materials to ensure that hard-earned tax dollars were being used to end the AIDS epidemic, rather than promote sodomy. Although that measure had a legislative life of only 1 year, it certainly has heightened public awareness of how hard-earned Federal tax-dollars are being wasted in the name of AIDS education.

I am glad to see, Mr. President, that the 100th Congress did not enact a Federal confidentiality law. As most Senators know, the House tried to ramrod through the Senate legislation which, in effect, would have repealed all State confidentiality and right to know laws and replaced those laws with a draconian Federal confidentiality law. State laws requiring that health care workers be notified if they have been exposed to the deadly AIDS virus would have been repealed. State laws requiring that funeral directors be automatically notified if they have been exposed to the AIDS virus would have been repealed. State laws requiring that sexual partners be notified about their partner's infection with the AIDS virus would have been restricted. State laws requiring notification to spouses would have been restricted. State laws authorizing the AIDS testing of a defendant charged with rape would have been repealed. State laws prohibiting the knowing transmission of the AIDS virus would have been unenforceable because the physician who tested the defendant for the AIDS virus would have been prohibited from testifying in court. And the ramifications go on and on, Mr. President. While I believe that confidentiality has an appropriate place in AIDS policy, I also believe that it should be handled by State law, not Federal law. Furthermore, I do not think that concerns about confidentiality should supersede concerns about public health.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, this issue will be addressed again this Congress. I hope the 101st Congress will have the courage to refuse to enact this ill-conceived idea, just as it did in October of this past year.

So, we have made some progress, Mr. President. But those steps, while significant, seem miniscule when compared to the task that lies before us.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, our efforts to treat AIDS as a public health concern have been thwarted by a vocal, militant minority which has used the AIDS issue to promote a political agenda it has failed to achieve in its own right. Of course, I am referring to the homosexual lobby. Members of this militant movement have masterfully manipulated the American public into believing that they, the homosexuals, are innocent victims of the AIDS epidemic rather than its perpetrators. By feeding on America's compassion, they have turned the AIDS epidemic to their political advantage by using it to promote something they have never achieved before—homosexual rights.

Mr. President, just listen to a quote from an article entitled, "The Overhauling of Straight America," which appeared in the November 1987 issue of Guide Magazine:

> In any campaign to win over the public, gays must be cast as victims in need of protection so that straights will be inclined by reflex to assume the role of protector. If gays are presented, instead, as a strong and prideful tribe promoting a rigidly nonconformist and deviant lifestyle, they are more likely to be seen as a public menace that justifies resistance and oppression. For that reason, we must forego the temptation to strut our "gay pride" publicly when it conflicts with the Gay Victim image.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the AIDS issue has become the perfect tool to advance the political and social agenda of the homosexual lobby.

I commend some members of this movement for one thing, Mr. President. At least some admit they are using the AIDS issue to convert straight America. In an August 2, 1985 Washington Post article, Gary McDonald, executive director of the AIDS Action Council, summed it up this way:

> We have to wear down the old stereotypes, and it is a burning irony that it will take AIDS to do that . . . But after thousands of men like Rock Hudson, men you thought you knew, go on TV, it's going to get harder to tell those old faggot jokes about swishy limp-wristed men. I'm sorry it's going to take so many dead men to make that point.

Mr. President, any time one even suggests that traditional public health measures should be taken, such as testing and contact tracing, there are outcrys of homophobia. Even the Surgeon General's report has been attacked by the homosexual community as homophobic because it suggests abstinence from anal sex. How preposterous, Mr. President.

Mr. President, for the sake of the future of our children and grandchildren, we must begin treating AIDS as the public health concern it is. While some are using the AIDS issue to promote political and societal acceptance of an anti-Christian lifestyle, thousands of innocent Americans are dying. If current trends continue, it is estimated that by 1991 the total of those dead and dying from AIDS will exceed 270,000 Americans, which is more than all of the Americans who died in the Korean and Vietnam wars combined.

AIDS is no longer confined to the homosexual population. As of 1986, AIDS was the leading cause of death in New York City for women between the ages of 26 and 35. I recently read an article which reported one doctor's belief that by 1991, AIDS will be the leading cause of death for children under the age of 18. I can imagine no crueler punishment, Mr. President, than to discover that through no fault of your own, you have contracted a disease which could have been avoided but for the lustful endeavors of a vocal minority.

My bill, Mr. President, will move us in the right direction. It addresses five major areas: AIDS education and prevention, testing and contact tracing; recordkeeping on the prevalence of the HIV infection; protection of the organ, semen and blood supply; AIDS testing in the military, in prisons and federally operated hospitals.

Mr. President, let me now review in detail the provisions of my bill.

Section 2 would simply require the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] to keep records of those individuals infected with the human immunodeficiency virus. Currently the CDC records only individuals with AIDS.

The Public Health Service estimates that 30 percent of those individuals who are infected with the virus will develop AIDS. A few years ago, Dr. Roy Schwartz of the AMA reportedly stated, "As an immunologist, I do not see any reason not to see 100 percent" of those infected developing the disease.

Mr. President, by keeping records only of those individuals with AIDS and ignoring the numbers of those infected, we will never be able to grasp the magnitude of this epidemic. The Centers for Disease Control keeps track of all stages of syphilis. It should certainly do so for all stages of AIDS as well.

Section 3 requires all blood banks to test individuals for the AIDS virus. Mr. President, although I am sure that most blood banks are testing for the AIDS virus, it is not a condition of licensing. This section will simply ensure the highest standard of safety in our blood supply.

Mr. President, section 4 changes the rules for blood banks. All collectors and distributors of blood must be federally licensed. Under this provision, in order to obtain a license, the entity must provide the patient with the option of using his or her own blood for elective surgery and also provide the patient with the option of using a designated donor's blood.

Despite assurances from experts that the public has nothing to fear, Mr. President, many medical professionals are skeptical about the safety of the blood supply. In a survey of 4,000 doctors, nearly half—45 percent—of the doctors in private practice who responded to the survey said that if a family member were about to have elective surgery, they would shun publicly donated blood and would make arrangements to have their own blood or that of other family members used instead.

Mr. President, some blood banks and blood suppliers are openly opposed to autologous and directed blood donations. However, in high risk areas, such as San Francisco and New York City, some blood suppliers have bowed to public pressure and are now allowing autologous and directed blood donations. In San Francisco, the rate of individuals wanting autologous blood donations reached 13.5 percent in 1985. In Chicago, 10 percent of the elective surgery patients in 1985 chose to reserve a supply of their own blood. In New York City, officials at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center reported that the number of patients who asked to store their own blood jumped 50 percent in 1985.

In areas where the AIDS epidemic has not reached the proportions found in San Francisco or New York City, autologous or directed blood donations are much more difficult to obtain. According to an August 17, 1986, New York Times article, many blood banks discourage donations earmarked for specific patients and have refused to cooperate with clubs of blood donors. And some, especially in the South and Midwest, where AIDS cases are low, have discouraged autologous blood storing, alleging that it poses storage and bookkeeping problems.

The earlier opposition to autologous donations is now waning. The AMA and NIH have recently endorsed autologous blood donations. At a July 1986 symposium sponsored by NIH, an expert panel concluded that autologous blood is the safest form of transfusion therapy. Blood banks and blood centers should make this option available to all qualified healthy people. The panel did not take a position on directed blood donations.

The opposition to directed donations has deteriorated as well. In many institutions, however, directed donations are not encouraged and, in some cases, discouraged. Some State legislatures have legislatively counteracted this opposition. California, for instance, has enacted a bill mandating that all blood banks within California allow directed blood donations.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, it is my understanding that some blood banks still refuse to allow directed donations. I find it alarming that a person going into a hospital for elective surgery may not be able to take his wife's compatible blood, or his child's or his neighbor's. Individuals should have the freedom to choose whose blood they will receive and should not be held hostage by the blood banks.

Section 4, modeled after the California law, will allow patients to receive blood from a compatible donor of his or her choice.

Section 5 of the bill amends title X of the Public Health Service Act—the so-called family planning program—to require grantees of the title X program to notify clients about the risk of contacting AIDS and that contraceptives—including condoms—will not provide full protection against the AIDS Infection.

As of December 12, 1988, Mr. President, 1,291 children under the age of 13 had been reported as having AIDS and 1,616 under the age of 20 have been reported to have AIDS. Obviously, this is the tip of the iceberg since these figures represent children who have developed full-blown AIDS, not children who are infected with the AIDS virus.

It is a fact, Mr. President, over one-third of the title X clientele are sexually promiscuous teenagers. It is imperative that if the Federal Government is going to be involved in what some have called the safe sex business, we owe it to the recipients of these services to tell them the truth about how safe certain measures are.

Section 6 of the bill would require States who want to participate in the Federal venereal disease program or other programs for AIDS prevention, treatment, or counseling to take legislative or administrative action to require reporting of all cases of HIV infection to the State health officials.

Mr. President, in order to contain the spread of the HIV virus, it is imperative for States to treat HIV infection in the same manner that they treated the syphilis epidemic of the 1930's. At that time, because of public health concerns, States enacted laws to contain the spread of the disease including mandatory reporting of cases to the State public health departments and premarital testing.

The majority of States have mechanisms in place to require reporting of other venereal diseases and almost one half the states still require premarital testing for syphilis or rubella, both with adequate confidentiality laws. In light of the fatal nature and rapid spread of the AIDS virus, it is imperative that State take similar precautions with respect to AIDS.

The States can then send these figures to the Centers for Disease Control, giving the Federal Government better statistics on the growth of the epidemic.

Mr. President, section 7 would require that those states receiving moneys for AIDS education and prevention take legislative or administrative steps to ensure that spouses of individuals infected with the AIDS virus are promptly notified.

Mr. President, this section should sound familiar to most Senators. The language is similar to, but not identical, to language I proposed to be added to the fiscal year 1989 Labor/HHS Appropriations bill. As Senators will recall, that amendment failed by one vote.

Senators will recall the reason I proposed this amendment. During the summer of 1987 I received a call from a young woman whose mother wanted to come by and thank me for what I have done on the AIDS issue. As is the case with all Senators, I meet dozens of people each day, but the face to face meeting with that lovely lady and her daughter is something I will never forget as long as I live.

The meeting did not last long. After the usual amenities, the three of us began to discuss why this lady had come to see me. Tears began to well up in the woman's eyes as she began her painful story. She told me that she had AIDS and was dying. Her bisexual husband had infected her with the AIDS virus. He had not told her he was infected and State law prohibited his doctor from telling her.

Mr. President, we hear so much about protecting the confidentiality of the AIDS-infected patient. Yet, we hear nothing about the fatal consequences of ironclad confidentiality laws. We see the homosexuals march in Washington for their rights. Yet, we are blind to the rights of this woman and the thousands like her who through no fault of their own have become infected with the deadly AIDS virus.

As one Senator, I hear the cries of that woman and the thousands like her. She deserves to live. She has a right to know that she is exposing herself to the deadly AIDS virus.

Section 7 does not require States to initiate a spousal notification program. It simply says that if a State wants hard-earned tax dollars to combat the AIDS virus, that State must make a serious effort to protect a spouse from exposing himself or herself to the AIDS virus.

Section 8 would simply require States receiving Federal moneys to combat AIDS to close all homosexual bathhouses.

Mr. President, traditionally, this country's Federal and State health authorities have taken action to eliminate sources of contagion. Public health authorities routinely inspect restaurants, hotels, public swimming pools, beauty salons, barbershops and other facilities to make sure they are safe for public use. If they are found to be spreading a disease or there is evidence that they pose a serious health threat to patrons, they are shut down.

Mr. President, I agree with this traditional health measure. The health and safety of our Nation is paramount. Facilities which pose a health threat to patrons should be closed.

Closing bathhouses makes good sense, Mr. President. As of December 12, there were 80,538 cases of AIDS in this country. Almost 70 percent of those cases are among homosexual or bisexual men.

Many communities have closed bathhouses because of the health threat, Mr. President, but other cities have failed to shut down these breeding grounds of death. According to the local health departments, there are 8 to 12 bathhouses in Los Angeles; 2 in the Houston area; 2 in Dallas; and 4 in New York City.

This section will turn off the spigot, so to speak, Mr. President. Just as public health officials are quick to close other facilities which pose a health threat to the American people, we should not provide an exception for homosexual bathhouses.

Mr. President, I am not alone in wanting to close bathhouses; 65 percent of the American public surveyed in November 1986 by USA Today want massage parlors and other "centers for casual sex" closed. I, as one American, agree with the American people.

Section 9 would prohibit Federal dollars from being used for so-called needle exchange programs. Mr. President, before the 100th Congress adjourned, we made an around-the-clock effort to enact a bill intended to combat the drug war. For fiscal year 1989 alone, we have appropriated $336 million of hard earned tax dollars for drug treatment, drug enforcement and drug interdiction. During passage of that bill, Senators made strong proclamations that drugs are crippling our Nation and that we must eradicate drugs from our streets, our schools, and our schools, and our communities.

Yet, Mr. President, when we talk about the AIDS epidemic, the mood seems to change. As we saw in the debate in April of last year, some in this Chamber believed—and still do—that distributing clean needles in exchange for dirty ones is a good thing, despite the hard facts that such programs have not significantly reduced the spread of the AIDS virus.

Mr. President, a good example is the Amsterdam study. Lauded as the success story of the ages, close examination shows that it has not significantly reduced the spread of AIDS. In 1985, a researcher reported to the Third International AIDS Conference:

> In December 1985 an epidemiological study among drug addicts in Amsterdam was initiated. As of 15th October 1986, 243 drug users had entered the study of whom 80 percent were IV users . . . At entry into the study 66/243 or 27 percent were anti-HIV seropositive; 64/66 were IV users . . . Significant changes in lifestyle were found among participants toward a less risk behavior . . . However, among 50 HIV-seronegatives followed up, 4 HIV-seroconversions have [converted], indicating that till now prevention measures taken in Amsterdam have had only a limited influence on the speed with which HIV spreads among drugs users.

Mr. President, this section would ensure that hard-earned tax dollars are not used to fund illegal and deadly behavior.

Section 10 would prohibit Federal dollars from being used to distribute condoms or pay for printed, visual, or audio advertising recommending condom use.

Mr. President, despite what the self-proclaimed experts want you to believe, not a single study shows that condom use will prevent AIDS transmission. While condom use may reduce your chances of contracting the virus, it certainly is not 100 percent effective.

Mr. President, the condom's dismal record as a contraceptive should give the American public some cause for alarm. According to most studies condoms fail to prevent pregnancy 10 percent of the time. A woman can conceive a child only a few days each month. In contrast, a person can contract the AIDS virus every minute of every day of the every month. This fact suggests that condom failure is even higher in preventing the spread of the AIDS virus.

Advocating condom use has accomplished one thing, Mr. President. It has put this Government's stamp of approval on the anti-Christian ideals of the sexual revolution, a revolution that can be credited with family breakups, rising abortions, rising out-of-wedlock births, rising VD rates, and rising school dropout rates.

This section would prevent further Federal funding of this misdirected approach to the AIDS problem.

Section 11 would prohibit any Federal monies from being used to promote homosexuality and would require that all AIDS education emphasize abstinence from sexual activity outside a monogamous marriage.

Mr. President, this section is identical to an amendment which was enacted in 1987. Unfortunately, since that amendment was attached to the fiscal year 1988 appropriations bill, it lived for only 1 year.

Mr. President, despite what the homosexual lobby wants you to believe, there is absolutely no credible evidence showing that explicit, pornographic AIDS education has reduced the spread of the AIDS virus. Just like the condom campaign, the AIDS education campaign has pointed this Nation down the improper path of discarding a moral ethic in public health policy. Until we return to that ethic, we will never solve the AIDS epidemic.

Section 12 would require states receiving Federal monies for AIDS education and treatment to take administrative or legislative action to require premarital testing.

Mr. President, despite all the hemming and hawing to the contrary, mandatory premarital testing for a contagious disease is a good idea. Traditionally, States have required premarital testing for syphilis, rubella, tuberculosis, and so forth, especially during epidemic periods. About one-half the States still require testing for these diseases despite the fact that these diseases are no longer epidemics and there are now known cures. If we can test for these diseases, I see no reason why we shouldn't test for AIDS, a disease which is far deadlier for parents and for unborn children than any disease in history.

I do not think I am alone on this position, Mr. President. The American people want this Government, this Congress to take some action. A poll taken in April 1987 found that at least 70 percent of the American public favors pre-marital testing for AIDS infection. A more recent Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll shows that at least 82 percent of the American public favors premarital testing.

Even the Centers for Disease Control supports premarital testing in some instances. In their August 14, 1987 guidelines, page 512, the CDC recommends:

> Premarital testing in an area with a prevalence of HIV infection as low as .1 percent may be justified if reaching an infected person through testing can prevent subsequent transmission to the spouse or prevent pregnancy in a woman who is infected.

I hope to see this section enacted this Congress.

Section 13 addresses the problem of AIDS transmission through tainted organs, semen and blood. It would codify a 1985 recommendation by the Public Health Service that individuals who have AIDS or who are at high risk of contracting it should refrain from donating blood, semen or organs. My bill would simply insure compliance with this recommendation by imposing a fine of $10,000, a term of 10 years, or both for those at high risk or those with AIDS who donate or attempt to donate blood, semen, and organs.

Currently, Mr. President, blood banks and hospitals using the enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay [ELISA] test can identify most blood donations contaminated with human immunodeficiency virus. However, these tests, while accurate, detect only the antibody and not the virus. The National Academy of Sciences has warned that all infected donors are not detected by the current tests. It states in the report titled, Confronting AIDS:

> The small fraction of false-negative test results and the length of time between infection with the virus and the appearance of antibodies underscore the need for those who have engaged in high-risk behaviors to refrain from donations; even with available screening techniques, this is still of paramount importance.

Their warning has rung true, Mr. President. On February 26, 1988, the New England Journal of Medicine reported a number of cases of HIV transmission, despite AIDS virus testing of the blood units. In November 1985, a 31-year-old man donated blood which tested positive for HIV. Earlier in the year, he had donated blood in August 1985. When interviewed, he admitted to homosexual contacts. Two patients receiving this man's blood donation from August 1985 tested positive for the AIDS virus.

In 1986, a 20-year-old man donated blood after having been turned down by a plasma bank in 1984. The blood tested negatively for the AIDS virus. Two individuals, an infant and a 55-year-old man, received blood derivatives from this donation and subsequently tested positive for the AIDS virus. Upon investigation, it was learned that the donor had many anonymous homosexual partners 12 to 16 weeks before the donation and was dying of AIDS at the time of the interview.

Another man donated blood in July 1986. The blood tested negative. Six months later his blood tested positive. A woman receiving blood derivatives from the first donation tested positive in January 1987. Follow-up interviews indicated that he had had two- to five-male partners per year before the first donation and had donated to determine his HIV status.

Mr. President, the study further states that its worse case estimates that as many as 460 recipients of screened blood may become infected annually.

To make matters worse, Mr. President, researchers continue to find new viruses associated with AIDS, making the current testing procedures dismally inadequate to prevent future contamination of our Nation's blood supply. Dr. Essex of the Harvard School of Public Health, reportedly, has stated that the blood test used to detect antibodies against HTLV-III can only detect 60 to 92 percent of individuals with antibodies against LAV-II or HTLV-IV, in contrast to 99 percent of individuals with HTLV-III. Researchers at the Pasteur Institute in Paris believe that the rate of detection of LAV-II may be as low as 30 to 50 percent.

Until recently, experts believed that the HTLV-I virus, another virus affiliated with AIDS, had not reached American shores, but on July 1, 1987 Dr. Robert Gallo, one of the discoverers of the HTLV-III virus, told the International AIDS Conference that there are a "few million Americans" infected with the HTLV-I virus. The blood banks are not routinely testing for HTLV-I.

In May 1988, Prof. Ross Eckert, a professor at Claremont McKenna College, testified that HTLV-I has entered the U.S. blood supply. He stated:

> According to reports, the American Red Cross found HTLV-I in 10 out of more than 39,800 units of blood drawn from 8 cities. This is an alarming development. HTLV-II is the rare but lethal "hairy cell" leukemia virus that has also been found in the blood of drug addicts who have antibody to HIV-I.

A concern of blood transmission has prompted a National Institutes of Health panel to recommend to doctors that blood transfusions "be kept to a minimum."

The AIDS virus has also been transmitted through tissue donations. In February 1988, a bone transplant recipient was diagnosed with AIDS after being found positive for the AIDS virus. Investigators found that the recipient had no known risk of HIV infection other than the bone grafting procedure. Investigators also determined that the donor tested positive for the AIDS virus at the time of the interview and had not been tested prior to the donation. Furthermore, he admitted to IV drug use prior to the donation.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, other HIV transmissions have occurred through transplantation of kidney, liver, heart, pancreas, possibly by skin, and by artificial insemination.

Evidence of tissue transmission, Mr. President, has led the Public Health Service to recommend testing and screening for the AIDS virus of donors of all tissues and organs. Furthermore, the Public Health Service recommends that all donors be retested at least 90 days after tissue or organ donation.

In light of these facts, this country must do more to insure a safe blood, organ, tissue, breastmilk and semen supply. Imposing a criminal penalty on anyone who attempts to contribute to a blood, semen, breastmilk or organ bank when that individual knows he or she is infected with the human immunodeficiency virus or is at high risk of infection should deter such individuals from donating, and ultimately insure a safer blood, tissue, organ and semen supply.

Section 14 of my bill would impose mandatory testing in Federal prisons. Since 1981, there have been 67 reported cases of AIDS in Federal prisons.

Mr. President, there is reason to believe that these figures will continue to grow. Inmates in prisons include two populations which appear to be at the greatest risk of developing AIDS—intravenous drug users and homosexuals. Also, makeshift tattooing—a common practice in prisons from what I am told—raises additional risk of AIDS infection.

As more and more of these populations enter Federal penitentiaries, the virus will certainly spread. A 1984 study of homosexual activity and sexual assault in Federal prisons revealed that overall, 12 percent of those surveyed had engaged in homosexual activity while in prison. In penitentiaries, where more dangerous offenders have longer incarceration periods, 20 percent of the penitentiary inmates stated they had had a homosexual experience in their current Federal institution. In response to the question, "Have you had a homosexual experience in a prison as an adult?," 30 percent responded, "Yes."

The study also showed that some Federal inmates were victims of sexual assault. Nine percent responded positively when asked if anyone had forced or attempted to force the inmate to perform sex against his will while in a prison. Two percent of the Federal inmates were targets in a Federal institution; 0.6 percent of Federal inmates were forced to perform an undesired sex act in Federal prison; 0.3 percent of Federal inmates were sodomized in a Federal institution.

Currently, the Bureau of Prisons tests 10 percent of the incoming prisoners and all prisoners leaving prison. My bill would require testing upon entrance, annual testing thereafter, and at such other times as the Bureau of Prisons deems appropriate. Furthermore, my bill would prohibit those infected from being involved in prison blood services, dental services, medical services, or barber shops.

Section 15 of the bill would impose mandatory testing of members of the Armed Forces. Specifically, this provision would require testing prior to entrance and annual testing thereafter.

Mr. President, since I first proposed annual testing in the military two years ago, the Navy and the Marine Corps have begun yearly testing. The Army and the Air Force, unfortunately, test only every 2 years.

Mr. President, for the health and well-being of our Armed Forces, I believe it is imperative for all military personnel to be tested annually for infection with human immunodeficiency virus.

I am also concerned about blood transfusions in times of crises. In those situations, soldiers are assigned a blood partner and blood is not tested prior to transfusion. In cases where a member of the military is unaware that he is infected with the virus, he may be the recipient of blood tainted with the lethal AIDS virus.

Mr. President, we owe it to our soldiers, who risk their lives to protect our freedom, to protect them from the deadly AIDS virus.

Section 16 would require routine testing of all veterans under the age of 40 seeking inpatient treatment in VA hospitals.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the numbers of AIDS patients in the VA system have skyrocketed. As of November 1988, 5,260 people have been diagnosed with AIDS and cared for in 128 of the 172 VA medical centers. Approximately 180 new cases are diagnosed each month. Of course, this probably represents only the tip of the iceberg since these are people with AIDS rather than people infected with the AIDS virus.

AIDS testing is necessary for a number of reasons. First, it will ensure an accurate diagnosis. It gives the veteran an opportunity to obtain the most up-to-date care in AIDS treatment, and it will provide a valuable opportunity to educate the veteran about AIDS, whether or not he decides to be tested for the disease.

Mr. President, when certain AIDS-related infections attack the human body, they leave visible signs of their presence. These infections provide identifiable signs of the presence of AIDS, but other side effects are now being discovered which do not provide visible signs of their presence and could result in a missed or inaccurate diagnosis.

Mr. President, current research is showing alarming signs that AIDS patients and even asymptomatic patients are experiencing brain dysfunctions. In a study published in the Annals of Internal Medicine in December 1987, researchers found that about half of patients with AIDS who were studied were diagnosed as having severe inflammation of the brain. The researchers noted that of particular interest was the fact that upon examination, these patients had not aroused clinical suspicion of an underlying neurologic disease. Researchers further concluded that about one half the patients with AIDS-related complex have some sort of neurological impairment. The researchers found:

> Seven of the thirteen patients with AIDS-related complex had some evidence of cognitive impairment, and 5 of the 10 patients with AIDS-related complex who underwent MR imaging also had abnormal findings.

The most shocking information, in my opinion, Mr. President, concerned brain dysfunction among individuals simply infected with the AIDS virus. They stated:

> Perhaps most significantly, our data suggest that persons with asymptomatic HIV infections may have incipient central nervous system impairment.

Mr. President, dementia can strike in the early or late course of the disease. It can manifest itself in the form of a slight memory lapse, or an impulsive action, or slowness in thought, or a quickness to anger. Or the mind can be dissolved into what one writer has described as "a massive incapacitating dementia that from outward appearances looked very much like Alzheimer's disease."

Without knowing the presence of the AIDS virus, misdiagnosis can occur, Mr. President. And that is what led me to this amendment. The possibility of dementia alone warrants routinely testing veterans under the age of 40 seeking inpatient care.

Mr. President, I have also mentioned that the AIDS test will ensure optimum care for the veteran infected with the AIDS virus. Research suggests that early detection and treatment of individuals infected with the AIDS virus or those with AIDS-related complex [ARC] reap more favorable results than treatment of patients with full-blown AIDS. In a July 23, 1987 article appearing in the New England Journal of Medicine entitled "The Efficacy of * * * [AZT] in the Treatment of Patients With AIDS-Related Complex," researchers found that ARC patients on AZT for 12 months had a 94-percent survival rate compared with an 86-percent survival rate for AIDS patients taking AZT.

Furthermore, Mr. President, researchers have found that patients in the earlier stages of AIDS who are treated with AZT are less likely to experience certain adverse reactions to the drug than patients with full-blown AIDS. In a study reported in the July 23, 1987 edition of the New England Journal of Medicine entitled "The Toxicity of AZT and the Treatment of Patients with AIDS-Related Complex," Dr. Douglas Richman, the principal researcher reached this conclusion:

> Patients with more advanced disease (AIDS rather than AIDS-related complex) were more likely to have hematologic toxic effects, possibly because of reduced reserves of bone marrow. Patients who have had AIDS longer or who are more debilitated may be more susceptible to the toxic effects of AZT.

Routinely testing during an epidemic is nothing new, Mr. President. We did it during the syphilis epidemic and we should do it today with a disease which is far more lethal and spreading far more rapidly than the syphilis epidemic of the 1930's.

Furthermore, this bill would also require officials of the Veterans' Administration to notify all spouses and sexual partners discovered during counseling about their potential AIDS infection.

Section 17 would require routine testing of individuals seeking treatment for tuberculosis at federally funded tuberculosis centers.

Tuberculosis, Mr. President, is the latest of the known diseases associated with the AIDS epidemic. Unlike other opportunistic infections, however, it is an airborne virus and, as far as current research shows, is far more easily contracted than the other opportunistic infections associated with AIDS.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. President. Cases of TB have increased at alarming rates. In New York City tuberculosis incidence rates have increased 60 percent since 1980.

According to some research AIDS is largely to blame for the rise in TB. According to an April 1987 study by Dr. Arthur E. Pitchenik:

> Tuberculosis-infected patients who develop T-cell immunodeficiency are at increased risk of contracting tuberculosis, and this disease appears to occur with increased frequency among patients with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome.

Numerous other studies have found a direct correlation between AIDS and tuberculosis.

AIDS testing of patients suspected of having TB is wise health policy, Mr. President. It will guarantee an accurate diagnosis. A number of doctors, including the Public Health Service, have recommended dual testing because immunosuppression can result in a false negative test result.

An HIV positive test result can also change the recommended treatment for TB. The Public Health Service has stated:

> Testing for HTLV-III/LAV antibody is especially important for persons over 35 with asymptomatic tuberculosis infection because INH [a drug used in the treatment of tuberculosis-infected patients] would not be usually indicated for persons of this age group unless they are also HTLV-III/LAV seropositive.

Mr. President, routine AIDS testing for those infected with the tuberculin virus will ensure an accurate diagnosis and proper treatment for an individual infected with the tuberculin virus.

Section 18 requires routine testing in federally funded drug treatment centers.

Mr. President, intravenous drug use is the primary transporter of the AIDS virus into the heterosexual community. A 1986 U.S. News and World Report article estimated that at least 225,000 Americans were infected through intravenous drug use.

Intravenous drugs, Mr. President, are now being blamed for growing numbers of AIDS-related deaths. According to an October 22, 1987 New York Times article, AIDS-related deaths among intravenous drug users accounted for 53 percent of all AIDS-related deaths in New York City since the beginning of the epidemic.

The story is not much different in other areas, Mr. President, 20 percent of the AIDS cases in Massachusetts in 1987 were attributable to intravenous drug use.

The figures of intravenous drug users infected with the AIDS virus is much higher, Mr. President. For example, in New York City, some estimate that 50 percent of the drug users are infected with the AIDS virus. In San Francisco, the Department of Health estimates that 12.7 percent of the IV drug users are HIV positive.

Mr. President, I don't think there is any doubt that the AIDS virus has infiltrated the drug population. Section 18 would simply ensure that those receiving federally funded drug treatment will be given the most accurate information about their AIDS status so that they can begin to seek early treatment for their AIDS infection.

Section 19 would require that federally funded sexually transmitted disease centers to routinely test incoming patients for the AIDS virus.

Mr. President, it is no secret in public health circles that an alarming percentage of men and women attending STD clinics are also infected with the AIDS virus.

In a January 1988 article which appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine, researchers concluded:

> In particular, we are concerned by the equal rates of HIV infection in young heterosexual men and women, and the close association of HIV infection with sexually transmitted diseases such as syphilis, genital herpes, and genital warts.

Researchers are also finding that clinic attendees who are infected with the virus are not at high risk of contracting AIDS. In a report released by the National Institute for Allergies and Infectious Diseases, researchers stated:

> Among the most significant of the study's finding was that one-third of the infected men and one half of all the infected women were either unaware of or did not acknowledge behavior considered to be at high-risk for HIV exposure.

Realizing the strong correlation between an STD infection and infection with the AIDS virus, the Centers for Disease Control have recommended AIDS testing in STD centers. This section would require AIDS testing in all those centers receiving Federal dollars.

Section 20 would require annual AIDS testing of all pilots who fly for a commercial airline licensed by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, undoubtedly, the best kept secret in the public health research today is the mounting evidence showing the large percentage of AIDS patients who are afflicted with AIDS-related brain disorders. In the 1986 report of the Institute of Medicine and the National Academy of Sciences entitled, "Confronting AIDS," as many as 90 percent of the patients dying of AIDS-related conditions have tissue abnormalities of the nervous system at death and a majority of them had some manifestation of neurological disease sometime during their lifetime. Furthermore, according to the report, neurologic complaints are the first symptoms in about 10 percent of the patients infected with the AIDS virus.

Other studies corroborate the National Academy of Sciences' conclusion that dementia may be the first sign of AIDS. However, some researchers have found that AIDS dementia may be the only symptom of AIDS infection. A study in the January 1987 publication of the Archives of Neurology found the following:

> AIDS dementia complex may be the earliest, and at times, the only evidence of human immunodeficiency infection, and that its development in this context may present a diagnostic challenge, particularly in individuals in whom risk of infection by the AIDS virus is cryptic.

Later studies suggest that AIDS dementia is not confined to individuals who have full-blown AIDS but afflicts individuals merely infected with the virus.

In a study which appeared in the December 1987 Annals of Internal Medicine researchers commented:

> Perhaps most significantly, our data suggest that persons with asymptomatic HIV infections may have incipient central nervous system impairment. . . . Whatever the underlying pathogenesis might be, our data suggest a progression of brain involvement occurs in persons with HIV infection that can begin with rather subtle cognitive changes early in the natural history of this viral disease and end with gross dementia in some patients with AIDS.

Mr. President, concern about AIDS-related dementia has prompted the U.S. Air Force to ground pilots infected with the AIDS virus. It has also prompted some foreign airlines to test pilot applicants for the AIDS virus. It is my belief that growing evidence concerning AIDS-related dementia in AIDS patients, including those merely infected with the virus, warrants annual AIDS testing of domestic pilots.

As I stated at the outset of my remarks, Mr. President, I believe the AIDS issue should be addressed as a public health problem not as a civil rights one. Strides have been made in the right direction but a long journey lies ahead. Research to discover more about the virus and how it spreads is mandatory if we are ever going to discover a vaccine. Education and counseling are laudable efforts but more needs to be done. The government, State and Federal, should not be afraid to take steps to contain the AIDS virus. This bill serves as a vital first step.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 70

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "AIDS Control Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. RECORDKEEPING.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 318 (42 U.S.C. 247c) the following new section:

"SEC. 318A. RECORDKEEPING OF CASES OF ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME, ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY RELATED COMPLEX, AND HUMAN IMMUNODEFICIENCY VIRUS INFECTIONS.

"The Director of the Centers for Disease Control shall keep records of cases of individuals who are infected with the human immunodeficiency virus.".

SEC. 3. TESTING OF BLOOD.

Section 351(d) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 262(d)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the AIDS Control Act of 1989, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to require that, as a condition of receiving a license under this section, any entity that collects or distributes blood or blood components or derivatives shall test all donors of such blood for the presence of the human immunodeficiency virus prior to accepting a contribution of such blood.".

SEC. 4. PERMITTING DIRECTED AND AUTOLOGOUS BLOOD DONATIONS.

Section 351(d) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 262(d)) (as amended by section 3) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the AIDS Control Act of 1989, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to require that, as a condition of receiving a license under this section, any entity that collects or distributes blood or blood components or derivatives—

"(A) permit blood donations made by a donor to be used directly for blood transfusions for such donor or for an individual designated by the donor;

"(B) permit a donor of blood to direct that any blood donated by such donor be used in a blood transfusion for such donor or for an individual designated by such donor if the blood type of such donated blood is compatible with the blood type of such donor or the blood type of the designated individual, as the case may be, and the use of such donated blood is not contraindicated, as determined by the physician of such donor or such designated individual, as the case may be; and

"(C) permit blood donated in accordance with subparagraphs (A) or (B) to be used for an individual other than the donor or an individual designated by a donor, as the case may be, if—

"(i) the physician of such donor or such designated individual determines that there is a more immediate need for such blood; or

"(ii) the donor consents to the use of such blood for an individual other than the donor or such designated individual.

"(5) Regulations promulgated by the Secretary to carry out paragraph (4) shall provide that any entity to which such paragraph applies is only required to permit the donations of blood described in such paragraph during the normal business hours of such entity.".

SEC. 5. REQUIREMENTS FOR RECIPIENT OF SERVICES AUTHORIZED UNDER TITLE X OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT.

Section 1006 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300a-4) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) A grant may be made or a contract entered into under this title only after the intended recipient provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that such recipient of the grant or contract will, prior to providing to any individual any services with amounts appropriated under this title, inform the individual—

"(1) of the effectiveness of the particular contraceptive method provided to the individual by the recipient as a method to prevent infection with the human immunodeficiency virus and a comparison of such effectiveness with the effectiveness of sexual abstinence;

"(2) that many individuals who are infected with the human immunodeficiency virus will develop acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, which is a fatal disease; and

"(3) that the most effective way to avoid becoming infected with the human immunodeficiency virus is to abstain from homosexual relations, from heterosexual relations outside of a monogamous marriage, and from the sharing of needles used to administer intravenous drugs.".

SEC. 6. CONDITIONS ON GRANTS FOR THE PREVENTION, TREATMENT, AND CONTROL OF ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME.

Title XXV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART C—PROHIBITION ON AWARDING OF GRANTS

"SEC. 2531. PROHIBITION ON AWARDING OF GRANTS.

"The Secretary may not make a grant under this title to any State or political subdivision of any State to support a project for education, testing, or counseling concerning acquired immune deficiency syndrome unless the State has taken administrative or legislative action to require that—

"(1) any physician practicing in the State report to the appropriate State public health authorities the name and address of any individual residing in the State who is treated by such physician and known by such physician to be infected with the human immunodeficiency virus;

"(2) any physician or medical technician who analyzes the results of clinical tests performed in the State report to the appropriate State public health authorities the name and address of any individual residing in the State who is determined as a result of an analysis conducted by such physician or medical technician to be infected with the human immunodeficiency virus; and

"(3) reporting under the laws described in paragraphs (1) and (2) to be carried out in accordance with State laws regulating the confidentiality of records maintained by the State or individuals with sexually transmitted diseases.".

SEC. 7. SPOUSAL NOTIFICATION.

Part C of title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 6) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2532. SPOUSAL NOTIFICATION.

"(a) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS.—The Secretary may not make a grant under this title to any State or political subdivision of any State, nor shall any other funds made available under this Act, be obligated or expended in any State unless such State takes administrative or legislative action to require that, within 30 days of diagnosis, a good faith effort shall be made to notify a spouse of an AIDS-infected patient that such AIDS-infected patient is infected with the human immunodeficiency virus.

"(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to a State on January 1 of the calendar year following the first regular session of the legislative body of such State that is convened following the date of enactment of this section.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

"(1) AIDS-INFECTED PATIENT.—The term 'AIDS-infected patient' means any person who has been diagnosed by a physician or surgeon practicing medicine in such State to be infected with the human immunodeficiency virus.

"(2) STATE.—The term 'State' means a State, the District of Columbia, or any territory of the United States.

"(3) SPOUSE.—The term "spouse" means a person who is or at any time since December 31, 1976, has been the marriage partner of a person diagnosed as an AIDS-infected patient.".

SEC. 8. BATHHOUSES.

Part C of title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 6 and amended by section 7) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2533. BATHHOUSES.

"(a) PROHIBITION.—None of the funds made available under this title or under any other provision of this Act, shall be obligated or expended in any State if such State does not close all bathhouses where a pattern of continuous homosexual sexual activity or continuous illegal intravenous drug use occurs.

"(b) HOMOSEXUAL ACTIVITY.—The homosexual activity described in subsection (a) means any sexual activity between two or more males as described in section 2256(2)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

"(c) ILLEGAL DRUGS.—The illegal drug use described in subsection (a) means and includes any controlled substance as defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substance Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)).

"(d) BATHHOUSE.—the term 'bathhouse' means any business that charges a fee for admission and for that fee offers the use of one or more of the following—

"(1) a swimming pool;

"(2) a spa or whirlpool; or

"(3) a communal bath.

"(e) STATE.—The term 'State' means any State, the District of Columbia, or territory of the United States.

"(f) FAILURE TO ACT.—If on January 1 of the calendar year following the first regular session that is convened following the date of enactment of this Act, such State fails to take the action as described in subsection (a), it shall refund to the Federal Government by that date such sums as it received in accordance with this section.".

SEC. 9. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR NEEDLES AND SYRINGES.

Part C of title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 6 and amended by sections 7 and 8) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2534. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR NEEDLES AND SYRINGES.

"None of the funds made available under this title shall be used to provide individuals with hypodermic needles or syringes so that such individuals may use illegal drugs, or to distribute bleach for the purpose of cleansing needles for such use.".

SEC. 10. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR CONDOMS.

Part C of title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 6 and amended by sections 7, 8, and 9), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2535. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR CONDOMS.

"None of the funds made available under this title shall be used in any manner to provide persons with condoms. Furthermore, none of the funds made available under this Title shall be used to promote condoms as a method to prevent the spread of AIDS.".

SEC. 11. PROHIBITION ON PROMOTION OF HOMOSEXUAL ACTIVITY.

Part C of Title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 6 and amended by sections 7, 8, 9, and 10) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2536. PROHIBITION ON PROMOTION OF HOMOSEXUAL ACTIVITY.

"(A) IN GENERAL.—None of the funds made available under this Title shall be used to provide AIDS education, information, or prevention materials and activities that promote or encourage, directly or indirectly, homosexual sexual activities.

"(b) REQUIREMENT.—Education information, and prevention activities and materials paid for with funds appropriated under this Act shall emphasize—

"(1) abstinence from sexual activity outside a sexually monogamous marriage (including abstinence from homosexual sexual activities); and

"(2) abstinence from the use of illegal intravenous drugs.

"(c) HOMOSEXUAL ACTIVITY.—The homosexual activity referred to in subsection (b) includes any sexual activity between two or more males as described in section 2256(2)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

"(d) ILLEGAL SUBSTANCES.—The illegal drugs referred to in subsections (a) and (b) includes any controlled substance as defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substance Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)).

"(e) FAILURE TO COMPLY.—If the Secretary of Health and Human Services finds that a recipient of funds under this Act has failed to comply with this section, the Secretary shall notify the recipient, if the funds are paid directly to the recipient, or notify the State if the recipient receives the funds from the State, of such finding and that—

"(1) no further funds shall be provided to the recipient;

"(2) no further funds shall be provided to the State with respect to noncompliance by the individual recipient;

"(3) further payment shall be limited to those recipients not participating in such noncompliance; and

"(4) the recipient shall repay to the United States, amounts found not to have been expended in accordance with this section.".

SEC. 12. HIV TEST AND NOTIFICATION AS A CONDITION OF MARRIAGE LICENSES.

Part C of Title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 6 and amended by sections 7, 8, 9, and 10) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2535. HIV TESTING AND NOTIFICATION AS A CONDITION OF MARRIAGE LICENSES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—None of the funds made available under this Title shall be available for use in any State, the District of Columbia, or any territory of the United States unless such State, District or territory requires, as a condition for the granting of a marriage license, a test to determine whether the individuals applying for such a license are infected with the human immunodeficiency virus and that both individuals seeking such license shall be notified of each test result.

"(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to a State, District, or territory on January 1 of the calendar year following the first regular session of the legislative body of the State, District, or territory that is convened following the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 13. PROTECTING THE NATION'S BLOOD AND TISSUE SUPPLY.

SEC. 20. COMMERCIAL AIRPLANE AIRMEN.

Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall promulgate regulations requiring all airmen applying for certification to operate a commercial airplane to undergo annual testing for the human immunodeficiency virus. Any airmen who test positive for the human immunodeficiency virus shall be denied certification.

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 82. A bill to recognize the organization known as the 82d Airborne Division Association, Incorporated; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

82D AIRBORNE, INCORPORATED

● Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a bill to grant a Federal charter to the 82d Airborne Division Association. Identical legislation which I introduced last Congress passed the Senate with 55 cosponsors and went on to the House Judiciary Committee where no action was taken.

The 82d Airborne Division was activated initially as an infantry division which participated in three of the major campaigns of World War I: Lorraine, St. Michiel, Meuse-Argonne. On May 27, 1919, the 82d Airborne was inactivated. The division was reactivated on March 25, 1942, under the command of Maj. Gen. Omar Bradley and became the Army's first airborne division under the command of Maj. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway. Deployed to North Africa in 1943, the 82d made parachute and glider assaults on Sicily and Salerno. In a 2-year period during World War II, the regiments of the 82d saw action in Italy at Anzio, in France at Normandy, where I landed with them, and at the Battle of the Bulge.

Following the end of the war, the sky soldiers of the 82d were ordered to Berlin to serve as "America's Guard of Honor" for 5 months of 1945. Due to logistical problems associated with the servicing of an airborne division overseas, it was returned to the United States where it was greeted with a New York City tickertape reception as it marched triumphantly on Fifth Avenue on January 12, 1946.

The division was assigned to Fort Bragg, NC, to become a leading element of the Nation's military reaction force as well as to participate in a number of peacekeeping missions. Elements of the division have valiantly served in Korea, the Dominican Republic, Vietnam, and Grenada. Peacekeeping units have served in Sinai.

Designed to move quickly to any part of the world and to be prepared to fight immediately upon arrival, the members of the 82d Airborne have served with distinction for over 45 years. They have demonstrated a tireless commitment to our Nation's defense and ideals. Therefore, I can think of no other military association more deserving of the recognition given by Congress in the granting of a Federal charter. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this measure to grant such a charter to the 82d Airborne Division Association.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the measure be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 82

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

CHARTER

SECTION 1. The 82nd Airborne Division Association, Incorporated, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, is recognized as such and is granted a Federal charter.

POWERS

SEC. 2. The 82nd Airborne Division Association, Incorporated, (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "corporation") shall have only those powers granted to it through its bylaws and articles of incorporation filed in the State or States in which it is incorporated and subject to the laws of such State or States.

OBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF CORPORATION

SEC. 3. The objects and purposes of the corporation are those provided in its articles of incorporation and shall include—

(1) perpetuating the memory of members of the 82nd Airborne Division who fought and died for our Nation,

(2) furthering the common bond between retired and active members of the 82nd Airborne Division,

SEC. 6. The composition of the board of directors of the corporation and the responsibilities of such board shall be as provided in the articles of incorporation of the corporation and shall be in conformity with the laws of the State or States in which it is incorporated.

OFFICES OF CORPORATION

SEC. 7. The positions of officers of the corporation and the election of members to such positions shall be as provided in the articles of incorporation of the corporation and shall be in conformity with the laws of the State or States in which it is incorporated.

RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 8. (a) No part of the income or assets of the corporation may inure to the benefit of any member, officer, or director of the corporation or be distributed to any such individual during the life of this charter. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the payment of reasonable compensation to the officers of the corporation or reimbursement for actual and necessary expenses in amounts approved by the board of directors.

(b) The corporation may not make any loan to any officer, director, or employee of the corporation.

(c) The corporation and any officer and director of the corporation, acting as such officer or director, shall not contribute to, support or otherwise participate in any political activity or in any manner attempt to influence legislation.

(d) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stock nor to declare or pay any dividends.

(e) The corporation shall not claim congressional approval or Federal Government authority for any of its activities.

LIABILITY

SEC. 9. The corporation shall be liable for the acts of its officers and agents whenever such officers and agents have acted within the scope of their authority.

BOOKS AND RECORDS; INSPECTION

SEC. 10. The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of account and minutes of any proceeding of the corporation involving any of its members, the board of directors, or any committee having authority under the board of directors. The corporation shall keep, at its principal office, a record of the names and addresses of all members having the right to vote in any proceeding of the corporation. All books and records of such corporation may be inspected by any member having the right to vote in any corporation proceeding, or by any agent or attorney of such member, for any proper purpose at any reasonable time. Nothing in this section shall be construed to contravene any applicable State law.

AUDIT OF FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 11. The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964, (36 U.S.C. 1101), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(74) 82nd Airborne Division Association, Incorporated.".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 12. The corporation shall report annually to the Congress concerning the activities of the corporation during the preceding fiscal year. Such annual report shall be submitted at the same time as the report of the audit of the corporation required by section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964, (36 U.S.C. 1101). The report shall not be printed as a public document.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND, ALTER, OR REPEAL CHARTER

SEC. 13. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this Act is expressly reserved to the Congress.

DEFINITION OF STATE

SEC. 14. For purposes of this Act, the term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

TAX-EXEMPT STATUS

SEC. 15. The corporation shall maintain its status as an organization exempt from taxation as provided in the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

TERMINATION

SEC. 16. If the corporation fails to comply with any of the restrictions or provisions of this Act, the charter granted by this Act shall expire.

By Mr. FORD (for himself and Mr. JOHNSTON):

S. 83. A bill to establish the amount of costs of the Department of Energy's uranium enrichment program that have not previously been recovered from enrichment customers in the charges of the Department of Energy to its customers; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY COSTS FOR URANIUM ENRICHMENT

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to fix the amount of prior unrecovered Government cost of providing uranium enrichment services to its customers. The issue of this cost and how it should be recovered is highly controversial.

Hearings during the 100th Congress demonstrated that the Federal uranium enrichment enterprise is in deep trouble and in continued danger of losing its customers—America's utilities—to government-backed foreign providers of enrichment services. One of the major uncertainties that burdens the U.S. program is the allegation that its enrichment customers may have to assume a large obligation to recoup the unrecovered cost of providing enrichment services. The uranium enrichment legislation reported out of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and that passed the Senate not once, but twice during the last Congress, set the record straight on this issue. This bill adopts that same approach that the Senate agreed to last year regarding the unrecovered cost of the enrichment program.

This legislation sets the Government's cost of providing uranium enrichment services under section 161(v) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2201(v)) that have been incurred and not recovered prior to fiscal year 1987 of the United States to be $364 million. A table and an explanation of the derivation of this figure follow these remarks. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table and explanation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

Some have referred to this $364 million level of unrecovered cost as a bailout. This is hardly the case. The $364 million is not an arbitrary declaration of program debt; it represents the total cash cost of outlays from the U.S. Treasury to the enrichment program since the establishment of the program in 1969.

The idea that this so-called debt may be $3 billion, or as high as $9 billion is nonsense. First, the unrecovered costs merely constitute the present basis for the pricing of enrichment services. They do not constitute an actual debt that can be recovered from enrichment customers under present law. The enrichment program has never taken a loan which needs to be repaid. Neither the accounts of the Federal budget, nor those of the U.S. Treasury carry any debt for the uranium enrichment program.

Second, over half of the $9 billion asserted by others to be the unrecovered cost represents imputed interest. Accrual of this interest is inconsistent with operation as a business in a competitive world market. Furthermore, it does not represent actual borrowing by the enrichment program.

Finally, the amount of unrecovered government investment in the enrichment program, represented by the book value of existing productive assets, is not being lost. Rather this value for unrecovered investment will be carried forward on the books of the program. As the book value is depreciated, there will be a return of the investment.

As a practical matter, it is impossible for the enrichment program to recover any higher estimate of unrecovered cost than $364 million, and still remain competitive in the world market. If the enterprise does not become competitive and our customers leave us, then the value of the enterprise to its owners, the taxpayers, is severely diminished. The Congress can not support any legislation which sets the unrecovered cost of the enrichment program at any level greater than the $364 million and thereby reduces the value of the taxpayer investment in these assets.

Uncertainty surrounding the level of the debt for the Department of Energy uranium enrichment program is perhaps the main reason why domestic utilities are considering switching their business to foreign providers. I hope that this bill will lay the controversy to rest.●

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I support and am pleased to cosponsor the legislation that Senator FORD is introducing today to address one of the most difficult problems facing the uranium enrichment program of the Department of Energy. That problem is one largely created by policy analysts and accountants at the General Accounting Office, and it is a problem of perception. But problems of perception can become real problems if we are foolish enough to permit it. In this case the problem of the so-called debt of the uranium enrichment program has become real to the electric utilities. These utilities have been threatened by the prospect that the Federal Government will impose this debt on the ratepayers of the utilities.

Senator FORD's legislation removes any such threat completely, and it is far past the time that Congress should have acted to do so. The uranium enrichment program has no debt, because it has never taken any loans. It is ridiculous to be suggesting that the ratepayers of nuclear utilities are somehow obligated to pay the Federal Government billions of dollars through their electricity bills because of some accounting theory dreamed up by the GAO and the antinuclear community. But this is what the GAO would have happen.

This legislation puts an end to such nonsense and will hopefully permit us to address the real issues in the uranium enrichment program. The principal such issue is the commitment of the Federal Government to remain in the business of providing uranium enrichment services. I see no near-term alternative to continuation of the Federal role in this enterprise. We have the facilities. They are capable of providing services at lower cost than any competitor if we will just let that happen. We can make money for the Federal Government while offering the most competitive prices available in the world. It is hard for me to understand why anyone could argue against adoption of this kind of plan of action.

We need to broaden the legislation being introduced today to reform the Federal uranium enrichment enterprise. The program must be able to compete effectively in the international enrichment market. It cannot do that under current law.

In the last Congress the Senate twice passed legislation establishing a uranium enrichment corporation to accomplish this, but the House failed to address the issue. This year we simply must complete the task of organizing this program so that it can function effectively. Only then can the program begin making money for the taxpayer while providing enrichment services to utility ratepayers at reasonable and competitive prices. The fundamental reform of the Federal uranium enrichment program along the lines of the legislation of the last Congress will be my aim, and I know it is Senator FORD's intent as well. Resolving the problems of the uranium enrichment program is very high on the priority list of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.●

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WILSON, Mr. MCCAIN, and Mr. PRESSLER);

S. 84. A bill to amend title 28, United States Code, to provide Federal debt collection procedures; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEDERAL DEBT COLLECTION PROCEDURES ACT OF 1989

Mr. BIDEN. Today I join with the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, and other Senators to introduce the Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1989. This legislation was drafted by a committee of U.S. attorneys and is intended to facilitate the collection of all debts owed to the United States.

The bill is virtually the same as the one that I introduced last year and that passed the Senate in the 100th Congress. I am hopeful that we will be able to act quickly on it this year in order to ensure its passage in the House.

The Justice Department is responsible for collecting debts owed to the United States by filing civil suits in Federal court. These debts include criminal fines and tax assessments, but mostly involve strictly civil matters, such as student loans and overpayments to veterans. In fiscal 1988, there were $32 billion in delinquent nontax debts, including 84,340 cases valued at $7.6 billion that had been referred to Justice for collection.

The Government Accounting Office has reported that the Justice Department has done a generally poor job of collecting these debts. The reasons: Justice must follow State enforcement procedures, which vary from State to State and may be inadequate to permit collection by the Government; and U.S. attorneys and the litigating sections of the department have no incentive to make debt collection a high priority.

The proposed bill addresses both problems. First, it would create a uniform, nationwide system of Federal debt collection procedures. Under the act, the Government would be able to collect civil, criminal and tax judgments through such means as attachments, garnishments, judgment liens and sales, confessed judgments, and restraining orders in all judicial districts.

Second, the bill would create an incentive to give debt collection a higher priority by creating a Debt Collection Fund. Five percent of the moneys collected by Justice and the U.S. attorneys would be placed in the fund for later collection-related expenses. This would make it possible for the Department to devote attention to debt collection without diverting resources from other functions.

I would also like to point out that this legislation would be cost-effective. The Department of Justice expects that the costs of implementing this proposal will be more than offset by the increased collections of money owed to the United States. In this time of tight budgets, we must take advantage of every opportunity to further reduce the deficit. Moreover, some of the collected money would be earmarked under existing law for certain priority items. For example, collection of unpaid criminal fines would not only contribute to reduction of the deficit, but would put more money into the Victims Fund, which is financed, in part, from such collections.

This bill was drafted by U.S. attorneys who, as the officials responsible for litigating debt collection cases in the Federal courts, have experienced firsthand the difficulties the Government has in collecting debts. This is the first time the U.S. attorneys have pooled their efforts to draft such an ambitious legislative product, and I applaud their efforts.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I am introducing, along with Senator BIDEN and Senator GRASSLEY, legislation which will enhance the remedies available to the United States for the collection of debts owed to the Federal Government. This bill represents the first major Department of Justice legislative proposal conceived, drafted, and advanced by U.S. attorneys who perform the vast majority of debt collection work on behalf of the Federal Government.

The Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1989 was drafted in order to improve the manner in which the Department of Justice handles litigation and other collection efforts necessary to recover moneys owed to the United States. Incredibly, it has been estimated by the Office of Management and Budget that the Federal Government has approximately $32 billion of outstanding, nontax, delinquent debt.

Mr. President, currently the debts owed to the Federal Government must be collected in accordance with the laws of the State where the debtor is found. These laws vary greatly from State to State, making enforcement of debt collection extremely difficult and expensive. For example, in some States, debtors can exempt vast amounts of property from the reach of creditors, whereas similarly situated debtors in other States are granted no such exemption at all. It is unfair that Federal debtors who reside in States with strong collection laws are made to pay their Federal debts, while others in so-called debtors haven States use weak State collection laws to escape repayment of their debt to the Federal Government.

This legislation will correct the inequities that exist under the current system by creating a firm, but fair, comprehensive statutory scheme for the collection of Federal debt. Under this proposal, State remedies are unaffected in cases where the Federal Government is not a party. This statute is meant to be used by Federal litigators in Federal courts to collect debts owed to the United States.

Mr. President, the Department of Justice estimates that this act could generate a $54 million increase in debt collection in its first year of implementation. This is an estimate which allows for a 6-month startup period. A $109 million increase is projected for the following year. During these times of fiscal restraint, the increased revenue collected under this act would be very useful and could perhaps be targeted to help finance our war on drugs.

The Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1989 represents a collaborative effort of the 93 U.S. attorneys across the country who perform the vast majority of debt collection litigation on behalf of the Federal Government. Such legislation reflects their broad legal expertise and practical experience. We must not ignore their collective wisdom.

A similar bill was introduced in the 100th Congress. A hearing was held in which no one testified in opposition to this important legislation. Soon after the hearing, a thorough examination of the bill was undertaken by representatives of the commercial law bar and the bankruptcy bar resulting in technical modifications to the legislation which made it more equitable. The Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously agreed to report the bill out of committee on October 5, 1988. On October 14, 1988, the U.S. Senate passed the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1988, without opposition. The House failed to act on this necessary legislation.

Mr. President, we must provide for a consistent and practical procedure for the collection of debts owed to the Federal Governmemt. A comprehensive Federal collection statute will allow for the creation of standard forms, policies, and procedures for the efficient processing of Federal debt collection and litigation.

Finally, those who owe the Federal Government must not be allowed to ignore their financial responsibility because of ineffective collection procedures. This legislation is most appropriate and will correct the inequities that currently exist in the collection of Federal debt.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation and ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senator THURMOND as an original cosponsor of the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act.

This measure would establish uniform procedures for the collection of delinquent debt owed to the Government of the United States. Currently, the Federal Government's debt collection efforts must proceed under 50 different statutory regimes. The regimes often differ significantly from one another, and thus hamper effective collection efforts.

Over the years, the problem of outstanding debt and the difficulty of its collection has continually perplexed Congress. I have personally been involved in seeking out various solutions. In 1986, for example, Congress passed a measure I sponsored which provided for the use of private attorneys to assist in collection efforts. Also in 1986, we enacted the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, which authorized agencies to administratively handle small fraud cases before an agency hearing examiner. These prior efforts, while helpful, have not eliminated the debt collection problem.

The most recent estimate by the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] of the total amount of delinquent debt is $68 billion. The legislation we offer today is a major step forward in the advancement of our efforts to mop up has truly become an ocean of outstanding debt. Given our current budget woes, vigorous collection efforts must continue. Thus, this measure will give the necessary tools to those officials, and private attorneys, engaged in Federal debt collection.

This bill is the culmination of the efforts of all 94 U.S. attorneys, working in tandem to identify problem areas and to develop statutory remedies. It is, thus, the work product of experts who daily face the difficulties this measure will remedy.

As many of my colleagues know, during the 100th Congress this measure was reported unanimously from the Judiciary Committee and passed the Senate without opposition.

Mr. President, this is a significant piece of legislation that deserves swift passage. I urge my colleagues to join us in passing this bill.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. BYRD (for himself and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 85. A bill to authorize the acceptance of certain lands for addition to Harpers Ferry National Historical Park, West Virginia; to the Committee on the Environment and Natural Resources.

HARPERS FERRY NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Today, I am introducing legislation that would allow the donation of certain land in Harpers Ferry, WV, to the Harpers Ferry National Historical Park.

The land is owned by former Harpers Ferry Mayor Bradley Nash and his wife Ruth. The acquisition of this land is of historical significance to the Harpers Ferry National Historical Park.

During the Civil War, Confederate forces under the command of Col. Thomas J. "Stonewall" Jackson, were encamped on the property. The Confederates used the land as a practice field in 1861, enabling them to prepare for the Battle of First Manassas, or Bull Run. The land was also vital for defensive purposes. It is situated on a high bluff at the north end of Bolivar Heights, overlooking the Potomac River. From this location the Southern Army monitored the activity along the Potomac River, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, and the Harpers Ferry-Sharpsburg Road—all major transportation routes into the Shenandoah Valley.

In the summer of 1861, Colonel Jackson withdrew his troops from Harpers Ferry to concentrate on strategic advancements in the Shenandoah Valley. Union forces then regained access to the Harpers Ferry area and camped on the acreage that is now the Nash property.

On September 4, 1862, Gen. Robert E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia began its invasion of the North. In the overall plans of the Confederate invasion, essential was the capture of Harpers Ferry. An occupation of Harpers Ferry would allow the invading Southern Army a line of communication and supply to the lower end of the Shenandoah Valley.

Special orders were issued from the Lee headquarters, selecting Maj. Gen. Stonewall Jackson to take Harpers Ferry. Lee believed that this feat could be done in 3 days. Jackson began his march on September 10, 1862.

The Harpers Ferry detachment was under the command of Col. Dixon Miles. Miles was a seasoned Army veteran of many assignments, including action during the Mexican War. The forces stationed at Harpers Ferry and Martinsburg were primarily concerned with protecting the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. The rail lines consisted of 380 miles—half located in the Confederacy.

Stonewall Jackson's forces arrived at Harpers Ferry on September 13, 1862. Jackson divided his force into three parts. One division was ordered to strike at Loudoun Heights, and a second division to strike at Maryland Heights, while the third division, with Jackson in overall command, would strike from Bolivar Heights. The Confederate special order stipulated this arrangement with the objective: surround and swallow up Harpers Ferry.

By now, Lee's plan was off-schedule by 1 day. The Confederates did not take into consideration the rough terrain of the area. Also, the 12,500 Federal troops, even though raw recruits of just 3 days service in the Army, fought stubbornly against the 14,000 Southern troops.

The Federals were forced to surrender at 8 a.m. on Monday the 15th. The Union's ammunition supply had been exhausted. Stonewall finally had possession of Harpers Ferry. The Federal commander Colonel Miles, wounded in the last Rebel push, died the following day. The forces under his command were mustered out of Harpers Ferry and, through a prisoner exchange program, were released in Illinois.

The Southern force occupied the town of Harpers Ferry until September 19, 1862, when all troops of the Confederacy were summoned to help fight at Antietam. As the Confederate divisions moved on, Union troops were able to regain control of the town. Harpers Ferry, for the remaining 2½ years of the War between the States, was occupied by the North. The only exception was for 10 days, when the Federals pulled all their support toward Gettysburg, PA.

Mr. President, the battle for Harpers Ferry was one of the most significant Civil War battles in West Virginia and involved one of our State's most famous native sons, Stonewall Jackson.

Mayor Nash has told me on many occasions of his discovery of Civil War artifacts, including buttons, buckles, and bullets that date back 125 years.

It is also important to note that, located on this property, is an earthworks barrier, ordered constructed by Union Gen. Philip Sheridan in 1864.

Mr. President, I commend Bradley and Ruth Nash for their contributions not only to Jefferson County, VW, but also to our Nation. This land will be valued by future generations.

I would also like to express my appreciation to Mr. Dennis Frye, the historian for the Harpers Ferry National Park, for his contributions toward the historical background for this legislation.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will act favorably on this legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 85

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the establishment of the Harpers Ferry National Monument", approved June 30, 1944 (58 Stat. 645; 16 U.S.C. 450bb), is amended by—

(1) striking "two thousand four hundred and seventy-five acres" in the first sentence and inserting "two thousand five hundred and forty acres"; and

(2) inserting after the first sentence the following: "The Secretary may accept donations of not to exceed 65 acres of lands and interests in lands outside the boundary depicted on the map referred to in the first sentence of this section, and when so acquired such lands and interests shall become a part of the park, subject to the laws and regulations applicable thereto.".

By Mr. CRANSTON (on behalf of Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and Mr. GRAHAM):

S. 86. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to improve the capability of Department of Veterans' Affairs healthcare facilities to provide the most effective and appropriate services possible to veterans suffering from mental illness, especially conditions which are service related, through the designation of up to five of its facilities as centers of mental illness research, education, and clinical activities and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS HEALTH-CARE FACILITIES

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am pleased to introduce today, along with ranking minority member, FRANK MURKOWSKI, and committee members, Senator MATSUNAGA, Senator DECONCINI, Senator ROCKEFELLER, and Senator GRAHAM, legislation to authorize the Department of Veterans' Affairs to establish five mental illness research, education, and clinical centers [MIRECC's]. These centers would improve and expand the capability of VA health-care facilities to respond with the most effective and appropriate services possible to the needs of veterans who often do not receive their fair share of resources—those suffering from mental illness, especially from those conditions which are service related. MIRECC's would also advance scientific knowledge regarding how to evaluate and treat mental illness by coordinating research, the training of health personnel, and the development of improved models of clinical services for eligible veterans suffering from mental illness.

BACKGROUND

In the 100th Congress, on May 27, 1988, I introduced, along with Senators MURKOWSKI, MATSUNAGA, DECONCINI, ROCKEFELLER, and GRAHAM, a bill, S. 2463, that is nearly identical to the one being introduced today. Testimony received at the committee's June 16 hearing was very supportive of this measure, and S. 2463, as slightly modified, was reported by the committee on August 1, 1988, as section 604 of S. 2011 (Rept. No. 100-439, pp. 129-132). The text of S. 2011 was passed upon a voice vote by the Senate on October 18, 1988, as a substitute amendment for the text of the House-passed H.R. 4741. This provision, however, was not accepted by our colleagues on the House committee, and was not enacted into law.

Despite the reluctance of the other body to embrace this program, it is clear that future VA resources must be devoted to the treatment of veterans with mental illness. About 40 percent of all VA beds are occupied by veterans who suffer from mental disorders. As discussed in detail in my statement on May 27, 1988 (S7103), an October 20, 1985, report of the Special Purpose Committee to Evaluate the Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Research Program of the VA, which was set up by the VA's Assistant Chief Medical Director for Research and Development and chaired by Dr. Seymour Kety—hereinafter the Kety Committee—found that research on mental illness and training for pyschiatrists and other mental health specialists at VA facilities was totally inadequate, given the tremendous mental-health needs of veterans.

KETY COMMITTEE REPORT

The report found that less than 10 percent of VA research resources are directed toward mental illness; in contrast, about 40 percent of all VA bed-days are provided to veterans who suffer from mental disorders, including posttraumatic stress disorder, Alzheimer's disease, alcoholism and substance abuse, depression, and other dementias. In 1983, one-third of all VA patients had a primary psychiatric diagnosis, and a great number of the rest also had significant psychiatric disorders, such as alcoholism or depression.

The report further concluded that educational funds, training stipends, research space, and staff positions for psychiatry were disproportionately low in the VA, resulting in high caseloads and diminished opportunities for research. It stated that the VA's failure to develop appropriate quality and quantity of psychiatric research is most significant in the area of research training. Although 42 percent of all applicants for VA career development awards are funded, only 26 percent of the psychiatrists who apply are funded. The report concluded that many VA mental-illness researchers are discouraged from applying for funding. Additionally, the VA is increasingly unable to attract young, research-oriented psychiatrists and mental health professionals, and is therefore less able to offer the same opportunities for innovative treatments to veterans with mental illness as do other psychiatric facilities.

The Kety Committee recommended, among other things, that centers of excellence be established as a cost-effective and rapid way to develop psychiatric research in the VA system. The report noted that the centers would produce new knowledge, provide researchers, and eventually would generate well-trained clinical investigators who could then initiate research projects at other VA hospitals.

MIRECC'S

Mr. President, the legislation we are proposing today would specifically authorize the establishment of five MIRECC's in order to implement the recommendation of the Kety report. The MIRECC's would be modeled after the VA's very successful geriatric research, education, and clinical centers [GRECC's] program that has been carried out for the last decade or so under section 4101(f) of title 38. There are currently 10 GRECC's and the VA is in the process of establishing 2 more.

I would anticipate that each MIRREC would congregate a critical mass of investigators with a clear and focused clinical research mission concentrating on one or more of the major categories of illness for which veterans suffer, such as schizophrenia, PTSD, addictive disorders, depressive neurosis, or dementia. The measure would require that research projects undertaken in conjunction with the MIRECC mission emphasize the psychosocial and clinical aspects of mental illness, as well as models of providing services.

MIRECC's would be required to maintain arrangements with an accredited medical school, graduate school of psychology, nursing, social work, or other allied health personnel school under which residents or students would regularly rotate through the VA medical center so as to provide hands-on training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness. MIRECC's would also be required to maintain research programs that would attract scientists and physicians capable of ingenuity and creativity in mental health research efforts. Researchers would be eligible and, indeed, given priority for funding for VA research grants.

Finally, our legislation would require the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to report to the Congress periodically on the research, educational, and new clinical-care activities at each MIRECC and on efforts to disseminate the information throughout the VA system.

This bill would require at least one MIRECC to be designated by July 1, 1990, and would authorize the appropriation of $3.125 million in fiscal year 1990 and $6.25 million each for the next 3 years. As with the GRECC Program, I would expect that funding for the MIRECC Program would not be subject to the resource allocation methodology.

Mr. President, the proposed centers would provide state-of-the-art treatment, increase innovative basic and clinical research opportunities, and enhance continuing education and training in mental illness. I urge all of my colleagues to join with us in support of this measure.

As I noted earlier, testimony received at the committee's June 16, 1988, hearing was very supportive of S. 2463. The National Association of VA Chiefs of Psychiatry, the American Psychiatric Association, and the American Psychological Association stressed that the establishment of MIRECC's would improve the VA's ability to attract top-notch psychiatrists and psychologists and thus enhance its ability to provide high quality mental health services to veterans.
